DATA RELATIVE TO PROFITEERING AND THE REVENUE (S. DOC. NO. 248).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, pursuant to a resolution of the Senate of the 10th instant, the report of the Federal Trade Commission relative to profiteering, which will be printed, and also printed in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, June 29, 1918.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: By direction of the commission I am transmitting herewith, pursuant to Senate resolution No. 255, dated June 10, 1918, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session (Senator BORAH), report of the Federal Trade Commission relative to profiteering.

Very respectfully, yours.

WILLIAM B. COLVER, Chairman.

REPORT OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION REGARDING PROFITEERING.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, June 29, 1918.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE:

SIR: The Federal Trade Commission submits the following report in response to the direction under Senate resolution 255 that it furnish the Senate with any and all facts, figures, data, or information now in possession of the Federal Trade Commission relative to profiteering which would in any way enable Congress to deal with the matter either through the present proposed resolution or through enactment of more effective criminal statutes.

Information upon the present range of profits in various industries in the Federal Trade Commission arises from three activities:

First. Cost finding by the commission for the War Industries Board, the Food Administration, the Fuel Administration, and other executive departments which have called upon the commission for this work.

Second. Industrial surveys undertaken by the commission at the direction of the President or upon its own initiative.

Third. Enforcement of the law against unfair methods of competition.

Under the first activity the commission has had recent view of many industries handling basic materials, including steel, copper, zinc, nickel, sulphur, lumber, coal, and petroleum and its products.

Under the second activity the commission has recently dealt with meats, leather, flour, and canned goods.

Under the third activity the commission has daily contact with the tendencies of trade as they are revealed through the numerous complaints filed with it for the application of remedies which are statutorily invested in the commission.

The outstanding revelation which accompanies the work of cost finding is the heavy profit made by the low-cost concern under a governmental fixed price for the whole country.

The outstanding fact in the industrial surveys which the commission has recently made is the heavy profit made by the meat packers and by those allied with them, and by the flour millers.

The outstanding feature on the score of profit revealed in the regular work of the commission under the statute creating it and the Clayton Act is the trade tendency to increase and to maintain prices against the forces of competition.

The various items of industry herein are treated separately below.

The commission has reason to know that profiteering exists. Much of it is due to advantages taken of the necessities of the times, as evidenced in the war pressure for heavy production. Some of it is attributable to inordinate greed and bare-faced fraud.

In summarizing the information at hand, certain features appear which it is well to note.

In the case of basic metals, as in steel, when the Government announced a fixed price, it was made so high that it would insure and stimulate production. This has resulted in giving a wide range of profits. Under the device of cost plus a margin of profit, these profits are necessarily great in the case of the low-cost mills. Thus, while the market was prevented from running away, as it would have done, undoubtedly, if it had not been regulated by a fixed price, the stronger factors in the industry are further strengthened in their position and enriched by profits which are without precedent.

Again, in the case of flour milling, it is apparent that while a Government-fixed price for wheat and an allowance of maximum margin of profit over cost on flour have had the virtue of stabilization, nevertheless the profits resulting are heavy. Before the Government interfered, flour sold in 1917 with an average profit as high as 52 cents a barrel. After the fixation of the price of wheat and the determination of a maximum profit of 25 cents per barrel of flour, the very high average profit per barrel dropped toward the maximum. Where this decline in price did not bring the price down to the maximum—that is, where the millers continued to exceed the Government maximum, as they did in many instances—many of the millers were actuated by the hope that they would be allowed to include income and excess-profits taxes in their costs and pass these taxes on to the consumer. However, if there had been a fairly general compliance with the maximum of 25 cents, the profits of the least efficient mills would have been considerable and those of the most efficient mills proportionally heavier. To the extent that the maximum price was exceeded, the profits were larger and, in general, were in fact very great.

The situation in coal gives still another angle of view to the same problem. Maximum prices were fixed by territorial divisions. Many of the coal producers have not taken the maximum; but, due to the fact that in a given field there is a very wide range in the cost of the coal produced in that field, it follows that certain low-cost producers have made very large margins under the system of governmental fixed prices for the field. Many high-cost producers have made small margins. The bulk of the production, of course, enjoys the large margin. Information on the return on the investment now being collated will reveal the exact amount of profit. Percentages of profit worked upon investment will obviously be very large in the case of low-cost companies.

The experience with steel, flour, and coal shows that a high stimulating fixed price, while stabilizing an ascending market, produces an economic situation which is fraught with hardship to the consuming public and with ultimate peril to the high-cost companies through increasing the power of their low-cost competitors.

In this connection a survey of the petroleum field shows that the market, when under the control of dominating factors, such as Standard Oil, can be one of huge profits without the device of the high fixed price. No price for the public has been fixed upon petroleum and its products by the Government. Unlike the situation in steel, flour, and coal, there has been as yet no Government interference with the law of supply and demand, except in the instances of Government purchases. Under that law large profits may eventuate through the bidding up of prices by anxious buyers. And, moreover, even in the absence of this element, prices may be forced up by spreading false and misleading information concerning the condition of supply and demand. Reports, for instance, have been circulated that the supply of gasoline was endangered for the purpose of maintaining the high price of that product and the heavy profits from it. At different stages of the oil industry different products of petroleum have yielded the heavy profits. Kerosene was once the chief profit producer. Gasoline followed and superseded it as the chief producer of profits. Enormous profits are now being made in fuel oil, with the advantage to the refiner that the high price of that product meets no popular challenge. Gasoline is maintained at its present high price and produces heavy profits for the low-cost refiners.

Similarly the power of dominant factors in a given industry in maintaining high prices and harvesting unprecedented profits is shown in a survey of the meat-packing situation. Five meat packers—Armour, Swift, Morris, Wilson, and Cudahy and their subsidiary and affiliated companies—have monopolistic control of the meat industry and are reaching for like domination in other products. Their manipulations of the market embrace every device that is useful to them, without regard to law. Their reward, expressed in terms of profit, reveals that four of these concerns have pocketed in 1915, 1916, 1917, $140,000,000. Comparisons between their present profits and those of the prewar period are given below. However delicate a definition is framed for "profiteering," these packers have preyed upon the people unconscionably. They are soon to come under further governmental regulation, approved by Executive order.

In cases where the Government fixes a definite margin of profit above costs, as in the case of flour, there is a considerable incentive to a fictitious enhancement of costs through account juggling. This has added to the volume of unusual profits. Increase of cost showing on the producers' books can be accomplished in various ways. The item of depreciation can be padded. Officers' salaries can be increased. Interest on investment can be included in cost. New construction can be recorded as repairs. Fictitious valuations on raw material can be added and inventories can be manipulated.

The Federal Trade Commission has been vigilant and untiring in its exclusion of these practices. An instance of this practice was afforded by the Ismert-Hincke Milling Co., of Kansas City, Mo. This company padded its costs by heavily increasing all its officers' salaries and by manipulating the inventory value of flour bags on hand. As evidence of the length to which padding can be carried it may be added that this company even included in its costs the gift of an automobile, which it charged to advertising expense. This case was heard by the commission for the Food Administration. The commission recommended revocation of license, and the recommendation was followed.

Payment of extraordinary salaries and in some instances bonuses to executives of corporations have been found by the commission during its investigations. An illuminating example of high remuneration charged to the expense account is that given by the American Metal Co. (Ltd.), of New York, the chief dealings of which are in zinc. Appended are the salaries and tantieme (French: an interest, commission, or proportional amount) of some of the chief officials:

B. Hochschild, chairman of board of directors	$179,663.36
C. M. Loeb, president	364,326.73
Otto Sussman, vice president	221,596.04
J. Loeb, vice president	147,930.69
Sol Roos, manager St. Louis office	148,530.69
M. Schott, manager Denver office	136,553.12

The complete list of salaries and bonuses to officers and employees of this company is given later in this report.

In addition to the information above given, the Federal Trade Commission occupies an advantageous position where it is possible to view certain tendencies in trade which bear upon the problem of profiteering. Under the law the commission has power to prevent unfair methods of competition, and it is daily in receipt of complaints, which it investigates, and, if it has reason to believe that an unfair method has been used, arraigns the party complained against for a hearing of the issue. It has developed that, outside legitimate increases in price due to higher costs and other economic elements, certain members of trade have preyed with shameless avarice upon the consumers. Two classes of cases handled by the commission will be cited.

Concerns bottling or canning vegetables which made contracts for future deliveries during the year 1917, in some instances, meeting a condition of inadequate crops and seduced by rising prices, withheld portions of their contract deliveries and sold spot on the market at the higher price. There were varying degrees in this practice. Some of the instances were flagrant and in those cases the commission recommended the revocation of license of the offender to the Food Administration, and these recommendations were acted upon. A great number of complaints of failure to deliver futures were made wherein action was not taken, as the evidence showed that the canner was unable to secure supplies by reason of crop failures. The Food Administration has endeavored to meet this situation the present year by a delivery limitation on the amount named in the contracts for future delivery.

Another trade practice has developed in which the consignee refuses goods after shipment, because the market has fallen, and vice versa the consignor refuses to ship on a rising market. These instances, which in the knowledge of the commission have not been numerous, have been handled by the commission in connection with the Food Administration and its power of revocation of license.

Still another trade practice which has increased the price of supplies to the consumer has been that of commercial bribery, upon which subject this body recently addressed the Congress, suggesting remedial legislation.

Again, the trade tendency of manufacturers maintaining the resale price of wares has contributed to holding high the general price level and in instances has increased profits without question. The action of the courts and the Federal Trade Commission in prohibition of this policy is becoming generally known to the trades and will, in our opinion, work a correction by opening up some of the closed channels of competition.

In submitting the subjoined memoranda on the industries under consideration, the commission expresses the opinion that general trade, as the commission has opportunity to view it, is in a high state of prosperity. With some exceptions that condition has continued for several years past. Many of the industries are making unusual profits, some are showing outrageous ones. In an hour of national service and self-sacrifice, profiteering may be defined not only as the taking of an exorbitant profit but should include a refusal to snare in bearing the burdens of war in the form of a reduction in profits when the profits have been large in prewar times.

STEEL.

In 1917 the steel companies made abnormal profits in the period prior to the Government price-fixing policy, and a number have continued to make unusually heavy profits since that policy was inaugurated. In finding costs in this industry for the War Industries Board the commission divided the steel makers into four groups: (1) The fully integrated mills; (2) the mills which start with the manufacture of pig iron; (3) the mills that start with steel furnaces; and (4) the mills that make rolled products from purchased semifinished steel. The United States Steel Corporation is included in class 1. Its profits expressed in terms of the total amount invested in the business show net earnings as follows:

The figures as to the net income of the Steel Corporation, as shown by the company for the years 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, and 1917, before deducting Federal income and excess-profits tax in 1917, follow:

The Federal income and excess-profits taxes of the Steel Corporation for 1917 were $233,465,435, which leaves from net income $244,738,908, of which about one-tenth was applicable to interest on bonds of the corporation and the rest available for dividends and surplus.

From information in possession of the commission, mills in class 2 appear to have made heavy profits in 1917. Recently mills in class 3 made objection that the Government prices were too low for them. A special examination of their profits by the Federal Trade Commission showed that in almost every case these objecting mills were enjoying unusual returns. The following table of percentage of return on investment in 10 mills in class 3 will show the profits in 1917:

	Per cent.
Alan Wood, Iron & Steel Co	52.63
Allegheny Steel Co	78.92
American Tube & Stamping Co	40.03
Central Iron & Steel Co	71.35
Eastern Steel Co	30.24
Forged Steel Wheel Co	105.40
Follansbee Bros. Co	112.48
Nagle Steel Co	319.67
West Penn Steel Co	159.01
West Leechburg Steel Co	109.05

Mills in class 4, which buy the semifinished steel and convert it into the more highly developed steel products, have enjoyed substantial profits.

COPPER.

Very large earnings have been made in the copper industry on the whole, although it should be noted that they have been due in part to an unusually heavy demand for this metal, which is used almost exclusively for war purposes, directly and indirectly. The commission's figures show that 21 companies, including a large proportion of high-cost companies, made profits in 1917 which ranged from 1 per cent to 107 per cent on their investments. The average profit was 24.4 per cent. Probably over 70 per cent of the production is marketed at profits over 20 per cent on investment. These same companies show an average profit of only 11.7 per cent in 1913, which may be considered to be a normal year. Thus the average profit in the industry has more than doubled. The range of profits in 1913 was from 1 to 56 per cent.

The profits used in these computations do not include Federal income or excess-profits taxes, and therefore represent sums actually retained by the companies for addition to surplus or dividends.

There does not appear, on the whole, to have been any concerted action in this industry in putting prices up in the first instance. The war scramble among the allies shot the prices of copper and other metals to almost unheard of levels. But there are certain strong interests among the producers and marketers which predominate in certain stages of production, and these appear to have taken steps to maintain prices at unnecessarily high levels. In the first place, the smelters, and notably the American Smelting & Refining Co., have continued to hold in force certain deductions for risk of carrying copper bought from mines, which risks have ceased to exist. These deductions were put in force during the early period of the war, before price was fixed by agreement with the War Industries Board. Their present maintenance amounts to profiteering at the expense of the miners, especially the small producers. On the other hand, some of the larger and richer mines have contracts entered into before the war running for periods as long as 20 years, which are extremely advantageous to them and which are now causing some refineries to operate at a loss.

ZINC.

Most of the evidence in the commission's possession indicates no unusual profits in the zinc industry, with the exception of the operations of the New Jersey Zinc Co.

Basing percentage on the capital-stock issue of $35,000,000, the following net earnings and dividends are shown for the New Jersey Zinc Co., according to published statistics: Profits, 1916, 72.5 per cent; dividends, 76 per cent; 1917, profits, 56 per cent; dividends, 46 per cent. The Federal Trade Commission's figures as to these same net earnings and dividends are available only for 1916, and indicate profits of 95.9 per cent, with dividends of 76 per cent.

These large earnings do not indicate excessive profits on metallic zinc. The company's profits on common spelter are very low, and on grade A spelter, while high, are due to the fact that it possesses a natural monopoly of a certain high-grade ore, the product of which can not sell for less than the zinc produced by competitors. In fact, the whole explanation of the New Jersey Zinc Co.'s large profits lies in its possession of an ore body of unusual richness and purity.

NICKEL.

The dominating factor in the nickel industry is the International Nickel Co., which produces practically the entire output of that metal in this country. The profits of the International Nickel Co. in 1916 were $13,557,000 and the dividends were $10,575,000, which sums amounted to 40 per cent and 31 per cent, respectively, based upon the investment, as computed by the commission. Taking the total capitalization and surplus of the company as a basis, the net earnings would be 20 per cent and the dividends 15.6 per cent. In 1917 the profits, on the commission's basis, were 30 per cent and the dividends 24 per cent, and on the basis claimed by the company the profits were 15 per cent and the dividends 12 per cent.

This company has a natural monopoly based on the ownership of the Canadian mines from which the nickel ore is derived. It has, however, maintained prices on a prewar basis. Consequently, while prices are high and the profits very large, the increase in profits has been due to the increased war output rather than to advances in price. Therefore it does not seem that any profiteering can be charged, unless in a negative sense, i. e., the company might have been satisfied with smaller profits in war times. This is especially worthy of consideration, inasmuch as practically the entire output of the company is taken for war uses.

SULPHUR.

Two companies produce all the sulphur in this country—the Freeport Sulphur Co. and the Union Sulphur Co.

The cost of the Freeport Co. in 1917 was $6.15 per ton; in 1918 it is estimated that increases will bring the cost up to not over $9.50 per ton. In the first half of 1917 the Union Co.'s costs were $5.73 per ton. The average realization of the Union Co. in the first half of 1917 was $18.11 per ton, making a margin of $12.38 per ton. The manufacturers of sulphuric acid are paying in the neighborhood of $25 per ton, and some as high as $35 per ton, making margins of over $15 per ton for sulphur companies. The Freeport Co.'s balance sheets show an operating profit for the 11 months ending October 31, 1917 of $4,301,310, or 236 per cent on investment. On November 30, 1916, the company's balance sheet shows dividends declared of $925,000; on July 31, 1917, $1,850,000; and October 31, 1917, $2,600,000. Its surplus increased from $1,254,000 in November, 1916, to $2,543,000 in October, 1917.

These companies may be said to have a natural monopoly of sulphur. Since they have placed their operations upon an established basis they have always made large earnings. They have taken advantage of the existing situation to raise their prices.

LUMBER.

Information in the commission's possession does not indicate any excessive profits in the lumber industry on the west coast, although it is understood that producers of aeroplane spruce in that region have in the past taken advantage of allied Governments. Information in the commission's possession does indicate unusually and unnecessarily large profits on the part of the southern pine producers. Forty-eight southern pine companies, producing 2,615,000,000 feet of lumber in 1917, made an average profit on the net investment of 17 per cent. This is unusually large for the industry, as is indicated by the fact that the average profit in 1916 was only 5.2 per cent. In 1917, 47 per cent of the footage of the companies covered was produced at a profit of over 20 per cent. The range of profits was from a small loss to over 121 per cent on the net investment.

The margin of profit per thousand board-feet in 1917 was nearly double that in previous years, the figure being $4.83 as compared with $2.11 in 1916. A fair margin per thousand feet in the past has been recognized as being $3.

These figures for 1917 are the more notable, for the reason that the profits shown do not include any payments of Federal income and excess-profits taxes, but are the sums actually available for additions to surplus or dividends. Information secured from the companies concerning their dividends and income taxes supports the preceding statements.

COAL.

Generally speaking the bituminous coal operators in 1917 had very much larger margins than in previous years. While in 1916 the margins (what operators actually received for coal sold over f. o. b. mine cost) may be regarded in some cases as lower than normal, yet the margins of 1917 were often two or three times the normal return. In the figures for 1916 and 1917 mentioned below return on investment must be covered in margins shown. The increase of margins is illustrated by an examination of the returns for 1916 and 1917 of 23 typical bituminous coal companies in the central Pennsylvania field. The average margin of these companies in 1916 was 20 cents per ton, and in 1917 was 90 cents. The highest margin for any company of the 23 in 1917 was $1.85. The corresponding margin for this company in 1916 was 41 cents. Similarly the lowest margin for any of these companies in 1917 was 27 cents, the corresponding margin for the same company in 1916 being 13 cents.

Maximum coal prices f. o. b. mines were authoritatively fixed August 21-23, 1917, by Executive order, and subsequently modified by the Fuel Administration. Contracts made before that time were not invalidated. In some fields as high as 90 per cent of possible production was sold under contract prices. While some contracts were below legal maximum price, probably much the greater part of the coal sold under contract went at prices substantially in excess of legal maximum prices fixed for current sales.

April realizations contain relatively little coal sold on contracts made prior to August 21, since most such contracts expired April 1, 1918. Sample reports for April operations, covering 12,619,274 tons actually mined in West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Kentucky, show an average margin between claimed f. o. b. mine cost and actual realization from sales of about 54 cents, as against a prewar margin of an average of 10 to 15 cents.

In anthracite the average receipts per ton, including all sizes, during the year 1914 (13 companies producing 79 per cent of the total tonnage in 1916) were $2.86 per ton. The average receipts per ton of anthracite, including all sizes, allowing for later obligatory summer discounts on prepared sizes, during the period January-March, 1918 (six companies producing 50 per cent of the tonnage in 1916), were $4.26 per ton. The average labor cost increase per ton since 1914 was $0.76; and if this is deducted from the 1918 average receipts per ton, an increase of $0.64 per ton, or 22 per cent, in average receipts is indicated, without allowance for increased cost of supplies and general expense.

In connection with the distribution of coal it may be pointed out that prior to the official regulation of jobbers' and of retailers' margins in August, 1917, there was evidence that many of the margins were unduly high when compared to the prewar margins. Details can be found in the report of the Federal Trade Commission on anthracite and bituminous coal, June 20, 1917. Since the regulations were established most of the jobbers' transactions have been carried on within the fixed margin, and whenever violations have been detected the jobbers have been forced to refund the overcharges. It should be understood that jobbers' and retailers' margins do not represent net profits alone, but also include all expenses incurred by them from the time coal is purchased until it is sold.

PETROLEUM AND ITS PRODUCTS.

The data secured by the Federal Trade Commission for 106 refining companies for the first quarter of 1918, supplemented in certain cases by returns for the second six months of 1917, indicate that the average profit in the oil industry is about 21 per cent on the investment. This is a considerable increase over the rate of profits indicated for prewar years, as the commission's gasoline report indicates an average profit for the years 1913, 1914, and 1915 of 15 per cent on the investment. In 1917 over 50 per cent of the estimated production was produced by companies having a profit of over 20 per cent on the investment. Rates of profit ranged from losses up to 122 per cent.

The profits of the eastern refiners have been relatively larger than those on the Pacific coast. The situation in the East is due to the fact that while gasoline prices have been but slightly advanced, the prices of other products have been increased greatly, especially the price of fuel oil. The public knows little about prices except the price of gasoline and to a less extent kerosene. Formerly refineries operated for the sake of the gasoline almost exclusively, and fuel oil was commonly sold at a loss, but now fuel oil is a very profitable product.

The following table will show the per cent of net earnings on investment for a series of years. The earnings for 1918 are estimated on the basis of the second six months of 1917 or the first quarter of 1918.

MEAT PACKING.

An exposition of the excess profits of four of the big meat packers—Armour, Swift, Morris, Cudahy, omitting Wilson as not comparable—is given in the fact that their aggregate average prewar profit—1912, 1913, 1914—was $19,000,000; that in 1915 they earned $17,000,000 excess profits over the prewar period; in 1916, $36,000,000 more profit than in the prewar period; and in 1917, $68,000,000 more profit than in the prewar period. In the three war years from 1915 to 1917 their total profits have reached the astounding figure of $140,000,000, of which $121,000,000 represents excess over their prewar profits.

These great increases in profits are not due solely to increased volume of business. The sales of these companies in this period increased 150 per cent, much of this increase being due to higher prices rather than to increased volume by weight, but the return of profit increased 400 per cent, or two and one-half times as much as the sales.

The profit taken by Morris & Co. for the fiscal year ended November 1, 1917, is equal to a rate of 18.6 per cent on the net worth of the company, capital and surplus, and 263.7 per cent on the $3,000,000 of capital stock outstanding. In the case of the other four companies the earned rate on common capital stock is much lower—from 27 per cent to 47 per cent—but the reason for this is that these companies have from time to time declared stock dividends and in other ways capitalized their growing surpluses. Thus Armour in 1916 raised its capital stock from $20,000,000 to $100,000,000 without receiving a dollar more of cash. If Swift, Wilson, Cudahy, and Armour had followed the practice of Morris in not capitalizing their surpluses—accumulated from excessive profits—they, too, would now show an enormous rate of profit on their original capital.

Rates of profit earned by these five companies in war years compared with the prewar average, based on net worth—capital and surplus—and on common stock, are as follows:

Actual profit on net worth.	Armour.	Swift.	Morris.	Wilson.	Cudahy.
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Prewar average, 1912-1914	6.2	8.3	6.8	[1]	7.3

Year 1917	[2] 16.8	26.7	18.6	23.8	18.7
Rate on common stock, 1917	[2] 27.1	47.2	263.7	42.5	47.0

[1] Figures not available.
[2] Foreign business not included would undoubtedly raise percentages.

The independent packers, as measured by results compiled for 65 of the largest of them, earned during 1914, 1915, and 1916 a rate of profit as high or slightly higher than that earned by the big packers in those years. The profits of these independent companies for 1917 are not as yet available.

LEATHER AND LEATHER GOODS.

During the year 1917 a large proportion of the tanners in the United States made unusual profits. As the commission reported in January last, reports of a number of the larger companies show that net profits in 1916 were in several instances two, three, four, or even five times as large as in 1915, and the 1915 net profits in turn showed increases of from 30 per cent to more than 100 per cent over those of 1914. One striking instance is a company whose net profits were reported as follows:

The tanners took advantage of the enormous demand for leather and took very high prices. During 1917 the prices of hides, particularly packer hides, were advanced very rapidly, notwithstanding that during the period of advance great supplies of hides were withheld from the public.

Many shoe manufacturers in 1917 made larger profits than usual. Wholesale shoe dealers secured wider margins of profit in 1917 than they had been accustomed to receive. The margins of retail shoe dealers widened greatly during 1917, especially upon fancy shoes. This was true to a less extent on staple shoes. It appears that the retailer has profited more in proportion than the wholesaler.

As an indication of earnings of the big packers in the selling branch of their leather business the following is quoted from a letter of January 17, 1917, by the Eastern Leather Co., an Armour selling subsidiary, to Mr. F. W. Croll, of Armour & Co.:

"We are inclosing our check on the National City Bank, New York City, payable to Mr. J. Ogden Armour, for $915,787, same being a dividend of 53 per cent on the 17,279 shares of common stock standing in his name. In addition to this, and in accordance with our conversation when in Chicago, we have set aside as a surplus $250,000, which represents 10 per cent on the common stock.

"We are also inclosing a check on the National City Bank for $202,145.62, payable to Mr. Armour, this being the balance due on 6,020 shares of common stock held for employees."

Here is a memorandum of May 15, 1917, from J. D. Murphy to Mr. H. W. Boyd, president of the Armour Leather Co.:

MAY 15, 1917.

Mr. H. W. BOYD:

Herewith comparative statement of results in the leather business for the three months ending April 28, showing earnings of $1,964,945.18. This does not include Woodstock, as we have not finished enough of our own leather up there to make a loss-and-gain result of any value as indicating the possibilities of the plant.

As per Mr. Armour's instructions, given through Mr. Stull, we are charging off in reduction of the above the following reserves:

Earnings as above		$1,964,945.18
Reserve for income tax, 3 months ending Apr. 29, 1917	$36,915.61
Reserve for estimated excess-profit tax, 6 months ending Apr. 28, 1917	423,620.84
Net earnings		1,504,408.73

J. D. MURPHY.

Here is another letter, in which Mr. H. W. Boyd writes Mr. Armour comparing the results for the Armour Leather Co. with the Central Leather Co.'s statement:

OCTOBER 31, 1917.

DEAR MR. ARMOUR: In reference to the Central Leather Co.'s statement, would say that it does not compare favorably with ours. You will notice that after deducting interest and dividends they only have $40,000 to add to the surplus. We made $600,000, and they are doing four times the amount of business and only made $1,900,000, and, as stated above, after deducting interest on the bonds and paying dividends, they only had $40,000 left to add to their surplus.

I think, considering their lumber business, which is wonderful—the manager of the Pennsylvania Lumber Co. told me that they never expected to realize the profits they were making on hemlock lumber and that they were doing an enormous business—that our statement is a great deal better than theirs.

Yours, truly,

H. W. BOYD.

The way in which Swift & Co. proceeds when a Government limitation of profits is expected is shown by the following letter, in which Louis F. Swift writes to his brother, Ed. F. Swift, stating that he has learned that the Government expects to establish profit control in the leather industry and suggesting the advisability of reappraising their properties in certain companies. Edward F. replies:

"I approve, if done quietly and promptly.

"E. F. S."

The letter, with marginal direction, is as follows:

CHICAGO, November 26, 1917.

Government control—Leather companies.

Mr. EDWARD F. SWIFT,
Second Floor:

We have had a virtual statement from Mr. Cotton that the Government expects to establish profit control in the leather industry. With this notice, I think we should at least consider the advisability of reappraising the properties of the following companies: A. C. Lawrence Leather Co., National Calfskin Co., Winchester Tannery Co., St. Paul Tannery Co., Ashland Leather Co., St. Joseph Tanning Co. (in which we have only 50 per cent ownership).

If it is agreeable to you, will arrange with Mr. Moon to go into the matter and submit figures.

Awaiting your reply, LOUIS F. SWIFT.

I approve, if done quietly and promptly.

E. F. S.

FLOUR.

The flour millers have had unusual profits for considerably more than a year. Information collected and verified by the commission shows for the four years ending June 30, 1916, a profit of 13½ cents on each barrel of flour and 12 per cent on the capital investment. These figures came from accounts covering nearly 40,000,000 barrels output annually. This is somewhat less than 40 per cent of the annual output of the whole country, but a very much larger part of the flour sold in the regular commercial market.

In other words, these figures apply to mills that in large part supply the demand for flour in interstate commerce and for export. The years covered, 1913, 1914, 1915, and 1916, should probably be accepted as fairly representative in spite of the fact that the war demand in 1915 and 1916 would lead one to expect them to show an abnormally high profit.

In the year ending June 30, 1917, these same mills made an average of 52 cents on each barrel of flour sold and nearly 38 per cent on their investment—profits that are indefensible, considering that an average of the profit of one mill for six months of the year shows as high as $2 per barrel.

The commission has tabulated returns covering the sale of something over 4,000,000 barrels of flour made and sold under the Food Administration's regulations from September, 1917, to March, 1918, inclusive. In face of the regulation of 25 cents per barrel maximum, the average profit per barrel on this flour was about 45 cents, or over three times the normal profit per barrel referred to above. The return on investment was apparently between 25 and 30 per cent. However, with prices maintained at the same level, cost would probably have increased and profit would have been somewhat reduced in April, May, and June, 1918, because of the smaller output in those months. The average net profit of jobbers reporting to the commission was about 15 cents per barrel for 1913 and 1914 but increased to nearly 50 cents in the first half of 1917. These profits include all the pay received by the proprietors of the business for their services. It is clear that if the profit above such pay was reasonably high in 1913 and 1914, it was exorbitant in the first half of 1917. The Food Administration has succeeded in reducing the profit of these concerns, but for the year 1917 it was still over twice as high as in the earlier years.

CANNED MILK.

About three-quarters of the total canned milk (evaporated and condensed) is produced by 10 companies. Nearly one-half of the total pack is produced by three companies—Borden's Condensed Milk Co., Helvetia Milk Condensing Co., and Carnation Milk Products Co. These three companies occupy a strong position in the trade. The price statistics between 1907 and 1917 show that practically every rise and every decline was inaugurated by either Borden or Helvetia, and the small manufacturers followed. In 1916 and 1917 the war demand caused prices to ascend so rapidly that the problem of declines was obviated until the beginning of 1918.

In 1917, according to the statement of the company, Helvetia made over 20 per cent on cost and over 65 per cent on investment. The Borden Co. made approximately 18 per cent on cost. The Borden Co.'s costs are relatively high.

The Helvetia Co., in a letter to the commission, under date of March 19, 1918, says:

"We desire to say, however, in connection with the total earnings of the company and the margin of profit shown during the year, that it was our judgment at all times during the year that we were making a larger profit on our goods than we were entitled to make. * * *

"We desire to say in explanation of the year's profit—but not in defense of it—that the profit which the company made during the year was regulated by conditions entirely beyond the control of the directors and officers of the company.

"During a large part of the year the demand on the market was so strong that it was with great difficulty that the price was kept from going much higher than any point reached during 1917. * * * Most of the price advances during the year were made by us in self-protection and in an effort to keep orders from piling up on us beyond our capacity to fill. We were compelled on one or two occasions to withdraw prices and refuse to take orders except at prices to be determined at the date of shipment, which, in a rising market, would naturally be higher—this plan being adopted on account of the necessity for protecting ourselves against the unusual and abnormal buying."

In extenuation, this letter goes on to say that in estimating costs for the purpose of announcing its prices, the company had overestimated its increase in cost. During 1917 the cost of producing evaporated milk (talls) was, in some months, but a little more than $4, and even in the high-cost months not much more than $4.50. These figures represent the costs of most of the manufacturers. The price of evaporated (talls) prevailing in the market during most of the year ranged from about $5 to $5.50. The unprecedented increase in the canned-milk business, due to the war demand, enabled the milk manufacturers—with such margins between costs and prices—to make unusual profits.

SALMON CANNERS.

Approximately 90 per cent of the salmon packed in 1917 was produced at a cost under $7.25 per case. To this should be added selling expense. This item, as reported by 24 companies, packing practically 50 per cent of the year's production, was 28 cents per case. However, the 28 cents does not include brokerage and cash discounts in all cases, and it is estimated that 50 cents per case would be a fairer allowance. This would bring the representative high cost up to $7.75.

The weighted average of the 1917 opening prices for different grades of salmon was $8.29 per full case, but more salmon was sold above than below this price during the year. This indicates a margin for a high-cost canner of 54 cents per case, and larger margins on the bulk of the production.

The average investment per case in 1917 was $4.32.

It follows that the marginal percentage earned upon a reasonable investment by the high-cost canners was approximately 12½ per cent. Several canners having costs in the vicinity of $7.25, which might be taken as concrete illustrations, made profits as follows:

	Profit.
Alaska Salmon Co. (cost, $7.12)—per cent	19
Everett Packing Co. (cost, $7.43)—do	5
San Juan Packing Co. (cost, $7.02)—do	24
Cascade Packing Co. (cost, $7.13)—do	62
Ocean Food Packing Co. (cost, $7.58)—do	14
Salina Packing Co. (cost, $7.71)—do	31

The foregoing statements are based upon the representative high-cost company, one whose cost would cover 90 per cent of the total pack. The following figures concern the average.

In 1917 the average net profit on investment of 90 companies, packing 7,426,678 full cases (87 per cent of the total year's pack) was $2.28 per case, or 52.8 per cent on the net investment in the salmon-canning business proper. This average of 52.8 per cent does not reveal the fact that some of the low-cost companies, included in the average, made over 200 per cent. It is significant that some of these low-cost companies are those allied with the big meat packers.

The foregoing is as complete a reply to the Senate's question as the commission has been able to prepare during the time at its disposal. It must be stated that the instances cited are by no means a complete catalogue.

All of which is in support of the statement of the President when, in his address to a joint session of Congress on May 27, 1918, he said:

"The profiteering that can not be got at by the restraints of conscience and love of country can be got at by taxation. There is such profiteering now, and the information with regard to it is available and indisputable."

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12281) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to offer another amendment to the bill as a committee amendment. It is known as Senate joint resolution 136. It has been on the calendar for a good while and action has been postponed awaiting the ratification of the treaties between Great Britain and Canada and the United States. I offer it as an amendment to this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the proper place in the bill the following:

That the President may by proclamation set a day or days and place or places for the registration for military service of male aliens within designated ages residing within the United States who are citizens or subjects of a foreign country with whose Government the United States has concluded or hereafter concludes a convention or agreement in accordance with the terms of which its citizens or subjects within designated ages, residing within the United States, become under certain conditions liable to be drafted into the military service of the United States; that upon proclamation by the President stating the time and place of such registration it shall be the duty of any such alien, unless exempted from registration by the terms of the President's proclamation, to present himself for and submit to registration under the provisions of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," and all amendments thereto, and he shall thereupon be registered in the same manner as those previously registered under the terms of said act; and every such alien shall be deemed to have notice of the requirements of said act and this joint resolution upon the publication by the President of any such proclamation, and any such alien who shall willfully fail or refuse to present himself for registration or to submit thereto shall be subject to all the provisions and liable to all the penalties provided in said act or any amendment thereto.

SEC. 2. That any such alien, when registered, shall be and remain liable to military service in the forces of the United States and subject to draft under the provisions of said convention or agreement and of said act and all amendments thereto, and subject to such regulations as the President may have prescribed or may prescribe under the terms thereof, unless during the period specified in the convention or agreement concluded with the country whereof he is a citizen or subject and designated in the President's proclamation, he shall have enlisted or enrolled in the military forces of his own country or returned to his own country for the purpose of enlisting or enrolling in its military forces, or unless the country whereof he is a citizen or subject, through its diplomatic representatives, in accordance with the terms of the convention or agreement concluded between the United States and such foreign country, shall issue to such alien a certificate of exemption from military service.

SEC. 3. That any such alien, after the expiration of the time fixed by the President's proclamation within which he may enlist or enroll in the military forces of his own country, return to his own country for the purpose of military service, or be exempted through the diplomatic representative of the country whereof he is a citizen or subject, shall be and remain subject in all respects to the terms, provisions, liabilities, and penalties of said act and all amendments thereto, except as modified by the terms of the convention or agreement concluded between the United States and the country whereof such alien is a citizen or subject, and shall be subject to such regulations as the President may have prescribed or may prescribe under the terms of said act.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon. Indeed, the adoption of legislation of this character is indispensable if we are to carry out the provisions of the treaties on this subject which we have recently ratified with Great Britain and with Canada. Yet I think it is my duty to point out to the Senate and to the Senator from Oregon, the chairman of the committee, in charge of this bill, what may be a necessary field for some further legislation of this character.

As far back as February 28, 1918, the House of Representatives enacted and sent to this body what is known as House bill 5667, generally called the alien slacker bill. The bill provided in substance that where either the citizens or subjects of a foreign power at war with Germany or our allies should claim exemption from military service when military service was sought from them in this country, we should, in substance—I do not undertake to quote the exact language or the exact provisions—deport those people for that reason from this country.

This bill passed the House of Representatives by a very large vote—three hundred and some odd to 15 or 16—showing a practical unanimity of sentiment in this country, so far we are able to judge it by the votes in either House of Congress on this question. It was referred to the Committee on Immigration, properly so, because it dealt with the immigration question, and sought to remedy the situation by the application of a remedy which comes within the jurisdiction of that committee.

I made repeated efforts at first to get the bill considered by the committee, but was unable to do so; first, because it was difficult to secure a quorum at the time when the bill came over, and next, because the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate and the State Department, if my memory is accurate, both objected to the consideration of this measure by the Senate pending the negotiation of these treaties. For that reason the Committee on Immigration has taken no action with respect to this matter, deeming it wiser to take a more direct method of securing the military service of these people who certainly ought to render it, either to this country or to their own countries, rather than that of deporting them, and thus giving them an opportunity to go somewhere else, where they might still further evade such service.

There are three of the larger countries at war with Germany who have a considerable number of citizens or subjects in this country who might be subject to this law. So far as England and Canada are concerned, the situation is relieved by the treaty which the Senate ratified just a day or so ago. That treaty will be carried into effect by the legislation now proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. But so far as France and Italy are concerned, a complete hiatus is left, with nothing done, unless the Senate shall adopt some plan of dealing with that question. First-paper men or declarants who are citizens of France or subjects of the Kingdom of Great Britain of course can be held to service, but aliens from those countries residing in this country who have not declared their intention to become citizens of it and who are subjects or citizens of either one of the other countries can not be held.

I have been informed that negotiations on this subject are pending with the Governments of both France and Italy, and possibly with Roumania and with Greece, and I do not know with what other governments, but certainly with the first two I have mentioned.

I think—and it has always been my judgment—that this question ought not to be dealt with from the standpoint of merely running these people out of this country, if it is possible to deal with it from the more beneficial standpoint of securing military service from people who are due to render it, and I have been inclined to believe that the legislation suggested by the Senator from Oregon ought to have some provision in it, if it is possible under existing treaties, covering the situation in respect to France and Italy as well as that of England and Canada. I know that the provision is made by the Senator's amendment in general language, that whenever these Governments or these countries do enter into treaty engagements with this Government on the subject, then those engagements shall be carried out, but I know months, more than a year indeed, has passed, and still we have no treaties. Unless we have a treaty I think the question ought to be dealt with, and dealt with effectually. I am willing, if I must do it, that the Committee on Immigration shall go just as far as its power and jurisdiction extend in dealing with this subject in the same manner that the House of Representatives has already dealt with it; but I think it is infinitely preferable, if it can be done, that it be worked out from the other standpoint. If that can be done, and if the Senator from Oregon wants to do it, I am perfectly willing to have this bill withdrawn from the Committee on Immigration and referred to his committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In reply to the Senator, let me suggest to him that the amendment which was adopted on yesterday, which is known as the Hitchcock amendment, is not so drastic as is the bill which passed the House of Representatives, but it does take care of the situation, I think, and I am advised by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that he has a further amendment to offer which will still further protect the situation.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me say, in reply to the Senator from Oregon, that it does not; and I will tell the Senator why it does not. I say that, of course, with the utmost deference to the Senator's opinion, if he shall still adhere to it after I state why I do not think it does take care of the situation. It is true it cancels temporarily, and it may be for the length of the war, any right that may have accrued to an applicant under his declaration of intention in his first papers, and yet he can stay here and not occupy the position of the first-paper man or of the declarant, and can avoid all service unless something further is done. That is the reason.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I remember that after a good deal of consideration I introduced in the Senate at one time a bill very much like the House bill, and at the same time the Senator from North Dakota introduced a resolution leaving the matter to be negotiated as a treaty proposition. The bill that I had prepared was so drastic in its terms that it led, I think, in connection with the resolution introduced by the Senator from North Dakota, to the formulation of Senate resolution 136 by both the Department of State and the War Department.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is the one the Senator has just offered as an amendment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes. Considered in connection with the treaties with those countries, it may be that the House bill, to which the Senator has referred, is too drastic in its provisions and would violate some of the terms of the treaties we have with other countries with reference to immigration. For instance, the only countries I know of where there is a limitation upon immigration are China and Japan. We have a favored-nation clause with many of the countries of the world which allows their people to come here. Whether we can practically violate those treaty agreements or not and say we must get out of them and not admit others to our country is a serious question, in my mind; and yet I think the Hitchcock amendment, taken in connection with the draft law, fully protects those people.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Georgia will allow me, I desire to say that we have three classes of aliens to deal with—alien enemies, whom, of course, we can not take into the Army; neutral aliens, who are covered by the Hitchcock amendment, though not so thoroughly as I should like to see them covered, and I propose to offer an amendment to that amendment when we get into the Senate; and, lastly, friendly aliens.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to suggest to him that he neglected to state that the Hitchcock amendment does not apply to those people at all.

Mr. LODGE. It does not. It applies only to neutral aliens, because we expect to cover all of the friendly aliens by treaty. We have covered the British and the Canadians.

Now, I think I can say to the Senator from Georgia—though the chairman of the committee can say it with more authority, for he is better informed than am I—that the treaties with France and Italy, and I am not sure but I believe also Greece, have been held up by the British and the Canadian treaties. We could not deal with those until the British and Canadian treaties were out of the way.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator tell me whether those treaties have yet been negotiated?

Mr. LODGE. The French treaty, I understand, is complete.

Mr. HARDWICK. And the others are in process of completion?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know. There is one point of difference about the Italian treaty which, it seems to me, could be easily arranged. I have no right to say what it is, for I do not know; but I understand that the Italian Government wish to claim for their men who have gone from here to fight in the Italian Army the right to freely return without interference from our immigration laws. I do not say that is the question, but I think that is the question. It seems to me there is no objection to granting that privilege; but those treaties will follow very rapidly, and I do not think we ought to take any steps by law at this time affecting friendly aliens. I think we shall reach that by treaty in the proper way, in the way we have reached it with the British and Canadians, and reach it very soon, because it is the British and Canadian treaties that have delayed the others.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I wish to say a word more, and I shall be very brief, because I desire, as much as any other Senator can, the Senate to get through with this bill expeditiously. I thought it was incumbent upon me, as the Committee on Immigration has not acted on this matter and may not do so if it is the sense of the Senate that all legislation on this question shall await the treaties, to suggest that the bill be withdrawn from the Senate Committee on Immigration and referred either to the Committee on Military Affairs or to the Committee on Foreign Relations, if it is to be handled from either standpoint. On the other hand, if I felt it was the sense of the Senate, without waiting for these treaties or regardless of them—and I rather think that the House of Representatives is right, and that we have the power, if it were good policy to exercise it, because there is nothing in the treaties that would require us to let people who are not citizens, except temporarily, stay in this country that we did not want to stay—if the Senate does not want to deal with it from that standpoint, then I think that the measure ought to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I shall ask the Senate to give it that direction at a later period. I feel, however, that something ought to be done, and unless some Senator—the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] or some other Senator—can give us some assurance that Italy and France are about to conclude similar treaties with us, or can give us some hope that they may conclude similar treaties with us along the line of those already concluded with Great Britain and Canada, I feel that something ought to be done to require of the citizens and subjects of France and Italy in this country exactly the same measure of duty we have now required by treaty and by law of the citizens and subjects of Great Britain and of Canada.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I sympathize entirely with what the Senator from Georgia says. I feel justified in saying that the treaties referred to in all probability will be laid before the Senate at an early date. There are some stumbling blocks in the way, but I believe they will be overcome. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that neither Italy nor Great Britain nor any other cobelligerent country has asked to have excused from military duties those of its nationals in this country who have taken out their first papers.

Mr. HARDWICK. I knew that; but, of course, you do not reach the people who have not taken out their first papers.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; but I feel justified in saying that it is desired to reach those people.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to be relieved, so far as I can properly be relieved, of further responsibility for this matter. Is it the Senator's idea that this legislation ought to be acted upon entirely as a military matter?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; my judgment is that the bill should remain with the Committee on Immigration, and it may be that a little later on there will be occasion to bring it out; and, if the occasion arises, I think it ought to be brought out.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, if we get the treaties with the other countries, then the proposed law which the Senator from Oregon has offered will apply, will it not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It will.

Mr. HARDWICK. And then we can require military service of these aliens?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Absolutely.

Mr. HARDWICK. Therefore, there will never be any reason to pass the House bill if the treaties should be entered into?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; but if the treaties should fail, then we could take up that bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I will state in reference to the amendment that it passed the Senate at one time in its entirety and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, but was not acted upon there. However, we discussed it a few days ago with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House and with the ranking Republican member of that committee, and they practically assented to having the amendment go into this bill as an important piece of Army legislation. There is not a provision in it that has not been recommended by the War Department. While it would have been more proper to have introduced it as a separate measure, it is so important and it seems so impossible to get it through the House in that form, that it is suggested as an amendment by the committee at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add a new chapter to the bill, after Chapter XVI, as follows:

That sections 10, 13, 22, 24, 28, 31, 42, 51, 55, 69, 111, and 125 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, be, and the same hereby are, amended as hereinafter indicated in section 1 of this chapter:

Section 10, by striking out the word "farrier" wherever it occurs in said section and substituting therefor the words "stable sergeant"; changing the period at the end of the second paragraph of said section to a colon and adding the following: "And provided further That any person who at the time of the approval of this act shall be and has been an officer of the Medical Reserve Corps, or contract surgeon, on active duty for 12 years subsequent to 1898 shall be eligible for appointment as first lieutenant in the Medical Corps, subject to examination: And provided further, That any officer so eligible who fails to pass the physical examination by reason of disability incurred in line of duty shall be retired with the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant of the Medical Corps"; and by striking out the eighth proviso of the third paragraph of said section.

Section 22 by striking out the period at the end thereof, substituting therefor a colon, and adding thereto the following: "Provided, That one of the enlisted men at each main recruiting station who has been detached for duty at such station under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, have the rank, pay, and allowances of a first sergeant of Infantry."

Section 24 by amending all that part of the second paragraph thereof down to the third proviso in said paragraph to read as follows:

Section 51, by striking out the words "prior to the date of this act," in line 3 thereof, and substituting therefor the words "prior to July 1, 1919."

Section 55, by amending the fifth paragraph thereof to read as follows:

That hereafter, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, authorized mounts of officers who die in the service may be transported at public expense from their last duty station to such places within the limits of the United States as may be the home of their families, or as may be designated by their legal representatives or executors, or such mount may be disposed of as directed by such representatives or executors.

SEC. 6. That hereafter, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, transportation at public expense may be provided for the baggage of civilian employees who die in the service from their last duty station to such places within the limits of the United States as may be the home of their families, or as may be designated by their legal representatives or executors.

That in the interest of the national defense, and for the better protection of life and property on said waters, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to prescribe such regulations as he may deem best for the use and navigation of any portion or area of the navigable waters of the United States or waters under the jurisdiction of the United States endangered or likely to be endangered by Coast Artillery fire in target practice or otherwise, or by the proving operations of the Government ordnance proving ground at Sandy Hook, N. J., or at any Government ordnance proving ground that may be established elsewhere on or near such waters, and of any portion or area of said waters occupied by submarine mines, mine fields, submarine cables, or other material and accessories pertaining to seacoast fortifications, or by any plant or facility engaged in the execution of any public project of river and harbor improvement; and the said Secretary shall have like power to regulate the transportation of explosives upon any of said waters: Provided, That the authority hereby conferred shall be so exercised as not unreasonably to interfere with or restrict the food fishing industry, and the regulations prescribed in pursuance hereof shall provide for the use of such waters by food fishermen operating under permits granted by the War Department.

Offenses against the provisions of this section, or any regulation made pursuant thereto, committed in any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States where there is no court having general jurisdiction of crimes against the United States, shall be cognizable in any court of such place or Territory having original jurisdiction of criminal cases in the place or Territory in which the offense has been committed, with the same right of appeal in all cases as is given in other criminal cases where imprisonment not exceeding six months forms a part of the penalty, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon such courts and such courts shall exercise the same for such purposes; and in case any such offense be committed beyond the territorial jurisdiction of any court having jurisdiction thereof, the offense shall be deemed and held to have been committed within the jurisdiction in which the offender may be found or into which he is first brought, and shall be tried by the court having jurisdiction thereof.

SEC. 10. That, in case of actual or threatened hostilities, any proceeds received from the operation of a public utility in connection with engineer operations in the field overseas shall be available for the purpose of such utility until the close of the fiscal year following that in which the proceeds are received, and a detailed report of such proceeds and application thereof shall be rendered to Congress on forms conforming as far as practicable to those used by American companies in reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission: Provided, That the provision of the act of March 23, 1910, making moneys arising from the disposition of serviceable quartermaster material available for the purposes of the appropriation throughout the fiscal year following that in which the disposition was effected, is hereby extended to apply to material supplied to the Army by the Engineer Department.

SEC. 11. That when any retired officer of the Army is, in the discretion of the President, employed on active duty and assigned to duty in an arm, corps, department, or organization, he shall, for all purposes except promotion, be considered an officer of such arm, corps, department, or organization while so serving, and shall be an extra number therein.

SEC. 12. That hereafter separate battalions, squadrons, or like units of any arm, corps, or department shall consist of such numbers and grades of commissioned officers and enlisted men as the President may prescribe.

SEC. 13. That there are hereby created in the Army the grades of corporal bugler and bugler, first class; and hereafter for each battalion and squadron headquarters of units in which the grade of bugler is now authorized there shall be one corporal bugler, and for each company, battery, troop, or organization in which the grade of bugler is now authorized there shall be one bugler, first class.

SEC. 14. That there are hereby created in the Army the grades of motor sergeant, chauffeur first class, chauffeur, and assistant chauffeur in each arm or branch thereof, and appointments made therein shall be in such numbers and for such organizations as the President may in orders from time to time direct and designate; and there are also hereby created the grades of battalion supply sergeant, separate battalion of any arm or branch; chief mechanic, Infantry and Cavalry; and mechanic, Corps of Engineers.

SEC. 15. That during the present war the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to enlist for service in the offices of the War Department or under its control or on detached service under its jurisdiction men outside the draft ages, and for the same purpose to draft men within such ages who have been disqualified by minor physical defects for active service in the Army; to establish regulations under which such enlistments may be made, and to fix the pay and allowances of men so enlisted or drafted, which said pay and allowances shall not exceed those of enlisted men of the Regular Army.

SEC. 16. That the President is authorized to appoint and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to commission to the grade of captain in the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, John Q. A. Brett, who was appointed to the grade of first lieutenant in the Quartermaster Corps pursuant to the act of August 29, 1916, and who had over 31 years' service as pay clerk, United States Army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In that connection I ask to have printed in the RECORD the specific reasons why each piece of this legislation is asked, and then any Member of the Senate can refer to it and ascertain the reasons upon which the legislation is based.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SECTION 10, NATIONAL-DEFENSE ACT.

The object of the amendment herein proposed is to place the enlisted personnel of ambulance companies and field hospitals on a parity with those of other organizations having animal-drawn transportation. The farrier's pay is $21; the stable sergeant's pay is $36. As a consequence there is a constant tendency on the part of the men concerned to seek transfer to other branches of the service at a higher rate of pay. The stable sergeant will perform practically the same work as that performed by a farrier. It is, of course, understood that a farrier performs, in a limited way at least, the duties of a veterinary. The duties of the farrier in this respect will be performed by the stable sergeant.

The purpose of the amendment with respect to officers of the Medical Reserve Corps is as follows: There are in the Medical Corps of the Army at the present time 25 officers of the Medical Reserve Corps who have served from 13 years and 3 months to 28 years and 4 months as contract surgeons and first lieutenants of the Medical Reserve Corps. They are above the statutory age limit to enter the regular service and are without hope for the future. It is, therefore, deemed appropriate that these 25 officers be given an opportunity to enter the Medical Corps as first lieutenants and take their chances for promotion in the future. It is proposed to give them a limited opportunity for retirement, service as contract surgeons being considered. It is proposed striking out the eighth proviso of the third paragraph of section 10, because this has already been done in fact, and this proviso is, therefore, unnecessary.

SECTION 22, NATIONAL-DEFENSE ACT.

This amendment is requested in order to provide pay for certain enlisted men to make their pay commensurate with the duties actually performed. At each of the recruiting stations of the Army one sergeant belonging to the detachment is detailed as acting first sergeant and post quartermaster sergeant for the detachment. It is evident that the pay of these deserving men should be made to correspond to the importance of the duties performed by them.

SECTION 24, NATIONAL-DEFENSE ACT.

It is proposed to amend the second paragraph of section 24 of the national-defense act down to the third proviso. There are two reasons for this amendment: (1) By the Army appropriation act approved May 12, 1917, two amendments were made to this section. The first of these amendments purported to set forth six different classifications from which cadets might be appointed to the United States Military Academy. As appearing in the statutes, however, two of these classifications are missing. It is the purpose of the first part of the present proposed amendment to correct that error. (2) The original section provided for the filling of vacancies "created or caused by the increases due to this act." As all such increases have now been filled, the section has been correspondingly changed in the present proposed amendment so as to cover "all vacancies however arising." Because of this fact, also, the first and the second provisos of the original section can no longer have force or effect. Therefore, in making the redraft, these two provisos have been omitted. While making these changes it seemed advisable to bring into the section the second amendment made in the Army appropriation act approved May 12, 1917. This has accordingly been done with slight changes in the way of a more specific statement, but without changing the effect of the former amendment.

SECTION 28, NATIONAL-DEFENSE ACT.

The national-defense act is the act which provides for permanent organization in time of peace. The act of May 18, 1917, gives the President the power to expand the military force during the present emergency. The military force has been so expanded by direction of the President, and in the expanded force certain grades have been created. The grades having been created, it is manifest that corresponding pay should be established by law. Section 28 of the national-defense act makes provision for appropriate pay for each grade created by the national defense act. In short, section 28 provides pay. If new grades are created, it is manifest that pay pertaining to those grades should be established by law. Section 28 of the national-defense act is the appropriate place in which to make such provision.

SECTION 31, NATIONAL-DEFENSE ACT.

Section 31 provides for the Regular Army Reserve. Among its provisions is one to the effect that when this reserve, or any part thereof, is summoned for field training the reservist shall receive "travel allowances and pay at the rate of their respective grades in the Regular Army during such periods of training." It is manifest that under this provision full reimbursement for expenses is not made to the reservist. The proposed amendment strikes out the words quoted above and in lieu thereof inserts provisions which will give full reimbursement for all expenses incurred by the reservist during such period of training.

SECTION 42, NATIONAL-DEFENSE ACT.

Section 42 authorizes the President to establish units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps at educational institutions where the authorities agree to establish and maintain a two years' elective or compulsory course of military training, which course, when entered upon by any student, must be completed by him as a prerequisite to graduation. There is no way in which the student may be relieved of the necessity of completing the military training as a prerequisite to graduation even though from a physical standpoint it should become impossible for him to undergo the training. The proposed amendment is to take care of cases where the professor of military science and tactics is convinced that the student ought not to be obliged to complete his course in military training.

SECTION 51, NATIONAL-DEFENSE ACT.

Section 51 makes eligible for appointment to the Officers' Reserve Corps, and as a temporary additional second lieutenant, any physically fit male citizens between the ages of 21 and 27 years who shall have graduated prior to July 3, 1916, from certain classes of educational institutions. The object of the present amendment is to extend the time within which this privilege may be availed of from June 3, 1916, to July 1, 1919. The law, if thus changed, should give some stimulus to the military courses in the educational institutions mentioned, and should produce additional material available for Army service.

SECTION 55, NATIONAL-DEFENSE ACT.

Section 55 provides for an Enlisted Reserve Corps. While it also provides for ordering members of the reserve into training, it fails to adequately provide for their pay, transportation, and subsistence from the time they leave their homes until they return thereto. The proposed amendment is to correct this deficiency.

SECTION 69, NATIONAL-DEFENSE ACT.

The proposed amendment provides merely that in the Territory of Hawaii citizens of the Philippine Islands shall be eligible to enlistment in the National Guard.

SECTION 111, NATIONAL-DEFENSE ACT.

Under the provisions of this section commissioned officers of National Guard organizations drafted into the service of the United States are to be appointed from among the members of said organization. The proposed amendment is designed to authorize the President to fill offices in said organization above the grade of captain by appointment of officers of the Regular Army.

SECTION 125, NATIONAL-DEFENSE ACT.

Section 125 provides for the protection of the uniform of the United States Army. The Army Regulations heretofore attempted to guard against the wearing of the uniform by men discharged from the service whether honorably or dishonorably. The proposed amendment is intended to give these regulations the force of law by incorporating them in said section 125. In addition, it purposes to provide for furnishing a dishonorably discharged soldier with a suit of citizen's outer clothing not exceeding $15 in cost. This is necessary because an enlisted man is not allowed to have citizen's clothes with him at his stations and so, upon discharge, would have nothing to wear unless this provision be made. The proposed amendment further permits members of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to wear such uniforms as the Secretary of War may authorize.

SECTION 2 OF PENDING BILL.

The organizations of the line of the Army, as now organized under the authority granted by the act of May 18, 1917, to expand the military force of the United States during the present emergency are made up so that the number of privates, first class, in each branch of the line of the Army bears the ratio of 33⅓ per cent to the total number of privates first class and privates in such arm. It is believed that this ratio should exist in the permanent organization, and this amendment is therefore proposed. For example, in the present national-defense act the law provides for 19 privates, first class, and 56 privates in an Infantry company in the permanent peace organization. It is now proposed to make 25 private first class and 50 privates, an increase of 6 privates first class; increase in pay $3 per man per month; total increase of pay, therefore, for an Infantry company $18 per month.

SECTION 3 OF PENDING BILL.

Section 3 is designed to permit the utilization of graduates of the Military Academy as instructors at citizens' training camps immediately after their graduation.

SECTION 4 OF PENDING BILL.

Section 4 is designed to permit the transportation at public expense of the authorized mounts of officers who die in the service to such places within the limits of the United States as may be the homes of their families, or as may be designated by their legal representatives, or to permit the disposal of said mounts in the manner directed by such representatives.

SECTION 5 OF PENDING BILL.

Section 5 is designed to permit the transportation at public expense of the baggage of civilian employees who die in the service from their last duty station to such places within the limits of the United States as may be the homes of their families or as may be designated by their legal representatives.

SECTION 6 OF PENDING BILL.

Section 6 is designed to require the payment of mileage to officers of the Corps of Engineers, Signal Corps (including the three branches into which it has been divided by Executive order), Ordnance Department, and Quartermaster Corps from the appropriations pertaining to the respective departments in connection with which the travel is performed. This provision has already been made with reference to the Signal Corps, and the present section is designed to apply the principle uniformly to the various bureaus named, it being thought that such mileage should properly come from the appropriations named rather than from the general appropriation for transportation of the Army.

SECTION 7 OF THE PENDING BILL.

Section 7 provides that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, in time of war, upon request to the Secretary of War, to extend the period during which money accounts covering expenditures from appropriations for the Army may be transmitted to the Auditor for the War Department after their receipt in the War Department from 60 to 90 days. The large increase of business in time of war makes such extension necessary.

SECTION 8 OF PENDING BILL.

Section 8 provides for protection to life and property upon the navigable waters of the United States from dangers incident to Coast Artillery target practice or the proving operations of the Ordnance Department through authorizing the Secretary of War to prescribe needed regulations with respect to the use and navigation of such waters.

SECTION 9 OF PENDING BILL.

The engineering department constructs and operates railway lines in the field of operations in France. Cost of both construction and operation comes out of the appropriations made for such purpose. The income received from the operation of these utilities ought, therefore, it is thought, to be available for the further use of the engineering department for the purposes for which the original appropriation was made. Section 9 is intended to accomplish this result. It contains a provision that such proceeds shall be available until the close of the fiscal year following that in which the proceeds are received. This clause is inserted because of the fact that proceeds received during the months of May and June would not be available for the purposes of the utility if the section provided only that they should be available until the close of the fiscal year in which they were received. The proviso making the provisions of the act of March 23, 1910, making moneys arising from the disposition of serviceable quartermaster material available for the purposes of the appropriation throughout the fiscal year following that in which the disposition was effected, is merely applying to the Engineer Corps a method of administration heretofore approved by Congress when it passed said act of March 23, 1910.

SECTION 10 OF PENDING BILL.

Section 10 provides that when a retired officer of the Army is, in the discretion of the President, employed on active duty and assigned to duty in an arm, corps, department, or organization, he shall, for all purposes except promotion, be considered an officer of such arm, corps, department, or organization while so serving and shall be an extra member therein. This provision is necessary at the present time for the reason that the services of a great number of retired Army officers are being availed of. When an officer is retired from active service he is no longer an officer of the arm or branch from which he is retired but is simply an Army officer. In many cases the statutes expressly require that certain duties may be performed only by an officer of a certain arm, corps, or department. Manifestly, therefore, such duties may not be performed by a retired officer employed on active duty. For example, an inspection required by statute of soldiers' homes can be performed only by an officer of the Inspector General's Department, and this is a service that can well be rendered by a retired officer; but unless Congress enacts a law of the kind here proposed a retired officer can not perform such service. A like situation arises in matters for the condemnation of properties. The act of June 15, 1917, makes provision of this kind with respect to retired Engineer officers. This was found to be necessary in order that retired officers of the Engineer Corps might be detailed on the commission of the District of Columbia or on the Mississippi River Commission. In the existing war situation it is thought that a general act, such as is now proposed, should be passed in order to give freedom in the use of retired officers.

SECTION 11 OF PENDING BILL.

This section is proposed for the reason that the exigencies of war have indicated the necessity for creating organizations heretofore unknown. Future military developments may indicate the importance of creating, in time of peace, organizations not theretofore recognized in our service. Such being the case, it is believed that there should be written in the law provision authorizing the President to prescribe the necessary personnel for such organization.

SECTION 12 OF PENDING BILL.

This provision of law is suggested because of the fact that, in the national defense act, due undoubtedly to oversight on the part of the lawmaking body, buglers receive the pay of privates. The injustice of this oversight became at once apparent to organization commanders when they realized that the organization buglers received $3 less pay per month than privates, first class. Frequently buglers are excellent men, and because of the fact that they are efficient buglers, they are often held in that grade and not promoted to noncommissioned officers, because of difficulty in replacing them as buglers. This provision of law provides slightly increased pay for most deserving men whose duties are oftentimes more hazardous than those of the average private; this arises from the fact that they are often out as messengers and signal men, and hence are required, on occasion, to expose themselves to a greater degree than is the case with men on the line. This section also makes provision for assignment of buglers with proper grade, which shall exist in time of peace as well as in time of war.

SECTION 13 OF PENDING BILL.

This section seeks to create certain grades in motorized organizations; also to create the grade of battalion supply sergeants of separate battalions of any arm or branch; this because of the fact that there is no provision of law for the permanent detail of such supply sergeants nor for the pay which is considered appropriate for an enlisted man actually performing the duties of battalion supply sergeant of a separate battalion. It is proposed further to create the grade of chief mechanic of Infantry and Cavalry in order to place a man of suitable rank in charge of the regimental wagons. This man has under him four mechanics; they have charge of some eighty-odd wagons in the regiment. This is an important noncommissioned office. In case a wagon is broken, there is one of two things to be done; either the wagon master or driver must do the work, usually an unsatisfactory job, or take it to a quartermaster repair shop; frequently it is not possible to find one in the vicinity. It is, therefore, considered important that there be a noncommissioned officer under whose charge this work may be properly placed. In motorized organizations, heretofore, the personnel had been made up principally of noncommissioned officers. It was at once apparent that such organization was faulty, because of the fact that, in any organization, there is work that must be done which is not compatible with the office of sergeant or corporal. In the motorized organizations organized under the President's power to expand—the act of May 18, 1917—as now shown in the "Tables of Organization," the grades indicated therein are motor sergeant, chauffeur first class, chauffeur, and assistant chauffeur. It is considered important and desirable that these same grades be adapted for the permanent peace organization. As indicated above, these grades have been established during the present emergency. It is further noted that pay for these grades, as indicated in section 28 of the national defense act, as amended herein, is provided for in this act. These grades having been created under the act of May 18, 1917, and pay provided as indicated herein, it is believed wise to permanently create these grades by law and such is the purpose of this section.

SECTION 14 OF PENDING BILL.

Section 14 would authorize the President to enlist for service in the offices of the War Department, or under its control, or on detached service under its jurisdiction, men outside of the draft ages, and men within the draft ages who have been disqualified by minor physical defects for active service in the Army. It further provides that their pay and allowances "shall be fixed by the President in any amounts not to exceed those of the enlisted men in the Regular Army." The purpose of this section is manifest—to procure more man power in the War Department and its detached services without encroaching upon the class of men that is available for active service in the Army.

SECTION 15 OF PENDING BILL.

Section 15 is designed to provide for placing on the retired list, with the grade of captain, John Q. A. Brett, who was appointed to the grade of first lieutenant in the Quartermaster Corps purusant to the act of August 29, 1916, after more than 31 years' service as pay clerk in the United States Army. (Note: This provision was inserted in the original omnibus bill by the Senate committee. Whereas I am personally advised that Col. Brett is a most efficient officer and has served the Government long and faithfully, I am advised that the various members of the Senate Military Committee are fully informed as to the merits of this proposed legislation.)

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I offer an amendment, to come in on page 120, line 22.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 120, line 22, which reads:

That any act inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

It is proposed to strike out the word "act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "acts or parts of acts."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment has already been agreed to. It will be necessary, therefore, to reconsider that action. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment of the committee was agreed to is reconsidered. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment originally reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I offer another amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the paragraph or section regarding quartermaster's clerks, it is proposed to insert:

The rights and privileges of war-risk insurance and of making allotments of pay shall be extended to all women serving by official designation with the Army as telephone and telegraph operators.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, that is an amendment which I offered in committee and which was adopted by the committee. I think it ought to be perfected by adding words to make it apply only to those who are serving with the Expeditionary Forces in France. By inadvertence it does not clearly set that forth.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. NEW. I suggest that the words "with the American Army overseas," or the words "with the American over-sea forces" be inserted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Army" it is proposed to insert the words "and serving with the American over-sea forces."

Mr. NEW. That will do.

The SECRETARY. So that it will read:

The rights and privileges of war-risk insurance and of making allotments of pay shall be extended to all women serving by official designation with the Army in the American over-sea forces as telephone and telegraph operators.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the chairman of the committee any other amendments he desires to present?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, between lines 9 and 10, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

That during the present emergency Army field clerks shall have the same allowances and benefits as heretofore allowed by law to pay clerks, Quartermaster Corps, not including retirement: Provided, however, That the minimum or entrance pay, exclusive of said allowances, of said Army field clerks shall be $1,200 per annum: Provided further, That Army field clerks shall receive the same increase of pay for service beyond the continental limits of the United States as is now allowed by law to commissioned officers of the Army.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator what is meant by the last proviso; and before the Senator answers the question I should like to ask him why it was deemed necessary to offer this amendment? I am making this inquiry because I know that many young men earnestly sought this service, some of whom thought that by so doing they might escape the draft. There were others who, because of physical disabilities, had been rejected, or anticipated that they might be rejected, were anxious to enter this department of the service. It occurs to me that those who wanted to escape fighting by becoming clerks would receive, under this amendment, rewards and compensations to which they are not entitled. The drafted boy fighting for his country gets $30 per month. These field clerks, many of whom should be fighting and who have tried to escape military service, are receiving more than they ever earned before.

The proposition now is to increase their emoluments. Why not draft them, and then, if they are needed as clerks, detail them for service as such? At any rate, they clamored for the positions knowing the compensation provided, and we should be careful in granting all their demands for increased compensation and additional gratuities.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, this amendment moved by the Military Affairs Committee was in furtherance of a bill which has passed the Senate and is in the Military Affairs Committee of the House at the present time. I understand they have approved the bill and are going to report it favorably. The Army field clerks were anxious to have a designation or increased rank of some character, and a bill was introduced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] providing for a designation and also increased pay and allowances and commutation of quarters.

As chairman of the subcommittee I forwarded that bill to the War Department. The bill came back with a recommendation that the allowance of $200 additional in their pay be granted, and additional allowances and benefits, but they refused to allow any designation or any increased rank. The bill passed the Senate in that way. Now, this amendment provides for the increased pay of the Army field clerks and allowances, but not the commutation of quarters. The original bill provided for benefits which would naturally carry retirement. That is cut out in this amendment. It does not provide for retirement. It simply gives them an increased pay of $200 while in foreign service, similar to that now paid to quartermaster's clerks. Many of these men are married men with families in this country. They are compelled to buy uniforms that cost them at least $300; they are compelled to pay for their own subsistence over there; and it would seem as if they should have the same pay as Quartermaster Corps clerks. Therefore, the amendment was introduced in the Military Affairs Committee and approved by that committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator spoke of allowances. This provision, then, does not carry allowances other than the compensation to which the Senator has just referred?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It does not, except subsistence. It carries subsistence, but not commutation of quarters.

Mr. KING. By the word "subsistence," the Senator means that they will be rationed by the Government?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes.

Mr. KING. Well, Mr. President, with the approval given this proposition I shall not further oppose it, although I am not converted to the justice or fairness of the proposed legislation. This is only another evidence of the powerlessness of Congress to resist the demands for additional rewards and benefits and compensations. I repeat, there was the keenest rivalry for positions as field clerk. I was told by officials in the War Department that there were thousands of applications; indeed, far more than the service required. Men were not called or forced into the service. They eagerly sought it; some for selfish reasons, some to escape the draft, others because they were offered more than they were receiving in their usual pursuits.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is approved in a communication from the Secretary of War and The Adjutant General.

Mr. KING. I want to emphasize, however, what I said a moment ago. I think this legislation is unwise and unfair. To my own knowledge a large number of young men sought these positions, some of them to escape the draft and some of them because they did not receive the same compensation at home that they were promised at that time by the Government; and having not only voluntarily entered the service but solicited it, it seems to me it is unfair now to give them this additional compensation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator. I hardly think that is a fair position to take with reference to these young men. Many of them have families in this country, and the increase of pay is not any more than is paid to men who are stationed right here in the departments—and young women, too, so far as that is concerned—and yet these young fellows go abroad. They have to keep up their establishments there practically as a commissioned officer does; and it is a mistaken idea the Senator has that these young fellows are not exposed to danger. They are. They are with the Army in the field, and, if need be, in the trenches. It does not seem to me unfair to allow them this additional compensation.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will yield, does not the Senator know that a great number of the young men who have entered this branch of the service—if it may be called a branch of the service—did so for the purpose of escaping the draft?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; I think not. Take the young man who was in the Military Affairs Committee with me for a while, young Daniel, from Mississippi—a splendid young man. He was anxious to go in the service, but it was suggested to him by some of the officers who knew his capability as a stenographer and as a clerk that he should undertake to go into the Army field service, because he could render more efficient service there. He went there reluctantly; but he is an excellent stenographer and an excellent clerk. It is that character of young men, many of whom have gone in because the department, realizing their capability, wanted that kind of men, instead of taking the enlisted men or men who were not so well qualified. The young man I am speaking of gave up a greater salary than he now receives to go into the service, so that it was a question of serving his country. He thought first of the Marine Corps, then of Infantry service, and while he was going around undertaking to get into the service where he would render the best service to his country it was suggested by officers that he go into the Army field service, and so it is with many of them.

Mr. KING. I know that I have received, and I have no doubt that many Senators have received, scores if not hundreds of letters from young men who did not want to fight, who wanted to escape the danger zone, and therefore sought positions as field clerks. They knew that if they went as field clerks they would escape the draft; moreover there was the desire to cross the ocean and learn something of the lands beyond the sea.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I offer the amendments which I send to the desk. I will say that they are not committee amendments, but they came to me on the 26th instant from the Secreary of War. I will ask the Secretary to read his letter giving the reasons for asking for these amendments, and then I will offer them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 26, 1918.

To the CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to request that the changes as indicated herein be made in the Army appropriation bill for 1919 (H. R. 12281).

On page 7, line 5, after the word "motorcycle," omit the word "and" and substitute a comma; after the words "motor-driven" insert the words "and other."

On page 7, line 16, between the words "excepting" and "telephone" insert the word "local."

On page 7, line 18, after the word "Columbia," insert "and toll messages pertaining to the office of the Secretary of War."

These changes are considered necessary, because, as the bill reads, there is some doubt as to the authority for the purchase of vehicles other than motor driven. The Signal Corps has used for years such special vehicles as wire carts, lance trucks, and instrument wagons, which are not motor driven. These are still a part of the prescribed equipment.

The second change is important and necessary in view of recent opinions of the Judge Advocate General of April 23 and May 18, 1918, approved by the Secretary of War on April 28 and May 21, 1918, respectively. These opinions state that the local calls of bureaus of the War Department and toll messages pertaining to the office of the Secretary of War shall be paid for by the Supply Division of the War Department. These changes will relieve the Signal Corps of the local service pertaining to the various bureaus of the War Department and toll messages pertaining to the office of the Secretary of War only. This service can then be handled by the Supply Division of the War Department.

Respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I offer the amendments that I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 5, after the word "motorcycle," it is proposed to omit the word "and" and substitute a comma, and after the words "motor-driven" to insert the words "and other."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 16, between the words "excepting" and "telephone," it is proposed to insert the word "local."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On the same page, line 18, after the word "Columbia," it is proposed to insert "and toll messages pertaining to the office of the Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I have here an amendment suggested in a letter from the Ordnance Department on the 26th instant. The committee has not had an opportunity to confer with reference to it. I offer it, however, for the Senate to consider, with the letter accompanying it, which gives the reasons for offering the amendment at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 15, it is proposed to add the following:

Provided further, That any moneys received by the United States as the proceeds of any such sale shall be deposited to the credit of that appropriation out of which was paid the cost to the Government of the property thus sold, and the same shall immediately become available for the purposes named in the original appropriation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the letter may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, June 26, 1918.

Hon. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR CHAMBERLAIN: Secretary Baker this morning verbally authorized Lieut. Col. Griggs to invite your attention to that portion of the Army bill providing for the sale of war supplies and to propose an amendment providing for the disposition of the proceeds of such sales in the form attached hereto.

This amendment becomes especially desirable in view of the large sums involved in sales to allied Governments. If such sales of raw materials and equipment should aggregate fifty or more millions of dollars and the available appropriations of the bureau making such sales are reduced by that large amount, then that bureau will be to that extent crippled in its future activities. It is felt that the bureau's efficiency should in no way be impaired owing to aid rendered to an ally. The fear of a temporary shortage of funds available for the production program for our own armies might result in a tendency to retard sales otherwise advisable.

It is undoubtedly fallacious to consider that an appropriation has served its purpose when in the process of economical administration a part of it has been converted back into available Treasury cash.

It is believed that the amendment as proposed accomplishes the intent of Congress that funds appropriated shall only be used for the purposes for which originally appropriated, in that the wording of the proposed amendment provides that the funds shall be only available to substitute property of the kind and character originally procured.

W. W. GIBSON,
Colonel, Ordnance, National Army,
Acting Chief of Ordnance.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I believe that finishes the committee amendments.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, as a separate paragraph, after line 7 on page 92, the following:

That section 67 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, be and the same is hereby amended by inserting the words "the adjutant general or" between the words "War" and "an," so that this paragraph shall read as follows:

"The governor of each State and Territory and the commanding general of the National Guard of the District of Columbia shall appoint, designate, or detail, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, the adjutant general, or an officer of the National Guard of the State, Territory, or District of Columbia, who shall be regarded as property and disbursing officer of the United States."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that amendment. It simply authorizes the Secretary of War to name an adjutant general as one of the officers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the amendment which I sent to the desk may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, amend an amendment already agreed to at that place——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered, and the amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, after the word "line," line 13, insert:

Provided, That section 8 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, shall be held and construed to authorize the President, in accordance with the provisions of said act and for the period of the existing emergency only, to appoint as lieutenant general the officer detailed by the direction of the President to perform the duties of provost marshal general in the execution of so much of the aforesaid act as relates to the registration and the selective draft.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to reward genuine merit. It is to reward an officer of the Army who, without disparaging any others, I think has done as distinguished service as any officer in the Army to-day, if indeed he has not done the most distinguished service of all.

In May, 1917, Congress passed the selective-draft act. The execution of the act was put in the hands of Gen. Crowder, who was made Provost Marshal General. No man in the country could have performed the service any better than Gen. Crowder has performed it. It makes no difference whether it was considered the best kind of an act at the time or not, I think the friends of the system have been agreeably surprised in his splendid success with the draft act, and those who had doubts about the system have had those doubts removed. The fact is that this splendid success of the draft system was brought about by Gen. Crowder. He was the father of the act. He is a part of the act. He has executed it with the greatest skill and ability.

No man, as I said before, in the Army or out of it, in my judgment, has performed his duties any better or more successfully. He has produced men as fast as they could be trained in this country. Gen. Crowder is a West Pointer. He has had a distinguished military career. After he graduated at West Point he went into the Cavalry. He took part in the Indian wars in the West, where he served with distinguished ability. He was appointed as a military instructor at the University of Missouri. While there he took a course of law and graduated at the University of Missouri, and went into the Judge Advocate's Department as major in 1895. After the Spanish War he went to the Philippines as colonel judge advocate. He took an active and important part in the reorganization of the Philippine Islands under the military régime there. In 1904 he was made colonel; in 1911 he was made a brigadier general; in 1917, a major general. He was a military observer in the Russo-Japanese War. In all these places he has acquitted himself with great fidelity and great honor and with very marked distinction.

Mr. President, I have always believed in promotion according to merit. The question raised by this amendment is not a personal one. It is primarily a question as to the proper system of promotion. Are we going to reward our officers who perform great and meritorious service, or are we going to give promotion in the order of seniority, without regard to merit. I am for the merit system. I want all our military officers to know that when they make good we are going to promote them, and when they do not make good we are not going to promote them. This will put every officer and every man on his mettle and bring out the best that is in him. Here we have the case of a man who has filled his position with the greatest efficiency. We all recognize that the draft act under Gen. Crowder has been a conspicuous success. It is just a question whether we are going to reward him for his faithful services, for his intelligent services, for his splendid services to the people of this country. He has already performed the act. He has already made good. He has already produced a great Army. He has made few mistakes about it. He has disorganized business in the least possible degree in the selective-draft system. The American people have confidence in him and they are confident that under his guidance and control there will be no dearth of man power in this war. There has been less criticism of his work than the work of any other department of the Government, when we might have reasonably expected more criticism. Those of us who have been associated with him know of his untiring energy, of his great vigilance, of his masterly legal accomplishments, of his just views, and of his courteous but firm treatment of all who come in contact with him.

In simple justice, Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will pass this amendment unanimously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, until I can understand the matter a little further I shall reserve the right to make a point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah makes a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator from Utah will not make a point of order against this amendment.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from Tennessee how many lieutenant generals our country has.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will refer the Senator to the chairman of the committee. I do not recall just what appointments, if any, the President has made under a recent act of Congress.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I was just looking for an amendment that was added to the last clause of a bill to make lieutenant generals of certain officers of the Army. It was not done on the report of the Military Committee either. It was done on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, while as a general proposition I oppose this sort of legislation, I can not help but feel that there ought to be some recognition of the magnificent services rendered by Gen. Crowder. I know of my own knowledge that from early morn till dewey eve—and, in fact, throughout the night—Gen. Crowder, ever since the draft act was drawn and until it was finally enacted, was giving all his time and attention to it. It was his sole consideration. And after it was passed, and it became necessary to properly administer it, Gen. Crowder has been most diligent in doing it. I do not believe that there was ever a law passed by Congress as complicated as that which has been so faithfully and so efficiently administered as the draft act. I feel that some recognition is due him; and, so far as I personally am concerned, I will let the amendment to the amendment go through.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator how many lieutenant generals there were during the Civil War? My recollection is that only a very limited number received this great recognition, and they were men who rendered most distinguished service upon the battle field. I join with the Senator in expressions of high approval of the work performed by Gen. Crowder. While I do not care to institute comparisons, I want to say that in my opinion no more able and efficient officer can be found in the Army. He has discharged with signal ability the heavy responsibilities which were placed upon him. So well has he done his work that I wish that other positions of trust and responsibility could be given him. He is, in my opinion, not only a great military leader, but his knowledge of the important and complex legal questions relating to the Army is superior to that of any other man in public or in private life. I know the desire of Gen. Crowder to engage in distinctively military work. Personally, I should be glad to see him in France, where his splendid abilities would bring to him increased honor and fame. It would be difficult and, indeed, impossible to find another who could so efficiently discharge the work which is now being performed by Gen. Crowder. However, in my opinion it is not wise or proper at this time to grant this promotion. It will lead to requests almost in the nature of demands for legislative promotions and distinctions in behalf of other faithful officers, both in the Army and in the Navy. There should be some system in dealing with the question of promotions and rewards for distinguished service. Special legislation dealing with each particular case is not desirable, and, as stated, will lead to constant demands, accompanied by persistent effort, and the bringing to bear of every possible influence to secure promotions by legislation and by special act for many other men who may be brought into great prominence during the present war.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator asks me how many promotions there were during the Civil War. I do not remember how many there were. I believe, as far as I recollect now, there are only two surviving lieutenant generals—Gen. F. B. M. Young and Gen. Nelson A. Miles.

Mr. KING. I have had no occasion to investigate the question of military promotions granted in the past nor am I a member of the Military Affairs Committee. I can only speak from an indistinct recollection arising from my somewhat limited historical knowledge of military matters; but as I recall, there have been but very few men raised to this exalted position by our Nation. Washington, as I remember, received a commission as lieutenant general. I may be in error, but I think Gen. Grant was the first lieutenant general of the Civil War period, and he did not receive this promotion until near the close of or immediately after the termination of the Civil War. It seems to me that it would be imprudent to begin now to create lieutenant generals. What the future of the war will develop we do not know. There is no occasion for haste. We can afford to wait the results that will flow from this great conflict. The Commander in Chief, so far as I know, has not advised this legislation. The military channels of the Government have offered no suggestions or recommendation that would warrant the assumption that such a course is wise or prudent. Of course, Congress has the power to act in this matter, but I think the question should be considered upon some other occasion, when the entire question of military promotions and the bestowal of marks of approval and high rewards upon those who may distinguish themselves in this war, may be considered in all of its aspects. This is a military appropriation bill; it carries billions of dollars imperatively needed in this titanic conflict. Let the legislation be germane to the main purpose of the bill. I repeat that we may find ourselves embarrassed later on in this war if we proceed in a piecemeal fashion to deal with the question of promotions and if we accept the amendment now tendered by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I recall, the office of lieutenant general was given to Gen. Grant because of the great services that he had performed for his country, and those are the kind of cases when we ought to give these promotions to officers of the Army. That is precisely what I propose to do by this amendment here in the case of Gen. Crowder. He has already performed as great a service as could possibly be performed in any war in his organization of the man power of this country.

It is not a case of rewarding a man who may or may not succeed; it is a case of rewarding a man who has already succeeded. He has produced the man power of this country and has done it well. He has done it without any undue disturbance of our country's industrial, agricultural, or commercial systems. I do not think anyone will say that he has not done it well, and I think we ought to reward those who have done well. It will be a lesson to those officers who are in places of importance and opportunity now. They will know that Congress intends to reward those who have done their duty and have done it well and have done it faithfully and have done it so successfully.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will pardon me. Gen. Crowder has done as distinguished service, if not the most distinguished service, of any military man in this war up to date.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to say that, in my judgment, to deny Gen. Crowder some reward of this kind would be to penalize him because of his great ability that keeps him on duty in this country. He is a major general and has been anxious to go abroad. He is a fighting man and wants to be at the battle line "over there." I know that at the bottom of his heart from the very commencement of this war he has been anxious to go abroad, and nothing has kept him here but patriotic duty on his part and great appreciation of his ability by his superior officers in his executing the draft law and forming an army therefrom.

Therefore, while I agree with the chairman, and I do not like this kind of legislation, generally speaking, this case certainly deserves attention and the bestowal of this distinction upon him. It is to exist only during the present war emergency, at the pleasure of the President. I earnestly hope and fully believe this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I give the Senator from Utah the law I had reference to which I have been trying to find?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It was tacked on to the war-risk insurance act, and the clause is as follows—it is the last provision in the act:

That section 8 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, shall be held and construed to authorize the President, in accordance with the provisions of said act and for the period of the existing emergency only, to appoint as generals the Chief of Staff and the commander of the United States forces in France; and as lieutenant general each commander of an army or army corps organized as authorized by existing law.

Then it goes on making provision for the payment. So, as the Senator will see, there is a precedent for it. Besides that, as I recall it, the Senate passed a bill creating the same office for the commandant of the Marine Corps. What has become of that I know not; it may have been defeated in conference, but the Senate passed it.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Wyoming has had great experience in legislation relating to military affairs. His long service upon the Military Affairs Committee has enabled him to speak with an authority that I do not possess; but he admits that he does not like "this kind of legislation, generally speaking," but he justifies it because it exists only during what he denominates "this emergency" and at the "pleasure of the President." The Senator concedes the point for which I am contending, namely, that it is unwise to deal with questions of promotion, particularly at this early stage of the war, in this piecemeal and special manner. Of course I appreciate the power of Congress to grant promotions and to bestow marks of approval for distinguished services, and yet I believe that it is too early in the war to begin legislation such as this. In taking this position I am not speaking in any way derogatory to the great ability of Gen. Crowder and the splendid service rendered by him to the country. But, Mr. President, I am afraid that this legislation will create jealousies and controversies and will be followed by many assaults directed upon Congress in behalf of other worthy officers. In my opinion it would be a wise and proper course to pursue to deal with questions of promotion for distinguished services under general laws rather than by special statutes.

In the view of many we are just entering the war. At so early a period, then, in this great undertaking it seems to me it is unwise to undertake legislation of this character. If the Senator will permit, I should like to inquire of him whether we have by special legislation since this war began raised any officer to the position of lieutenant general. In other words, has any officer, because of distinguished services, received recognition of this character by legislative enactment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think not unless the provision which I have just read to the Senator covers it.

Mr. KING. Then Gen. Crowder is to be made the first lieutenant general during this war. He is selected by Congress from the list of worthy and able officers and preferred by this legislation above them all. As I have stated, Gen. Crowder deserves the thanks of the American people for his great services, but I am not willing at this time to support this bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know of any other who has been created a lieutenant general.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has not Gen. Bliss been appointed a lieutenant general? That is my recollection. Of course, Gen. Pershing is over there, but he is a general.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not recall just what has been done.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not positive about it. It may be that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] can state whether Gen. Bliss has been appointed a lieutenant general.

Mr. WARREN. Gen. Bliss was made a general when he was Chief of Staff and the commander of the American expedition in France was made a general. When the change was effected in the staff Gen. March was made a general. Gen. Bliss, by special legislation, was retained after his retirement, as I remember it, and was put back in the service with the same rank, or as a lieutenant general, because of his service over there with the high commission.

Speaking of lieutenant generals, we have had a great many in the Army. After the Spanish War in 1898 we passed a law that the Chief of Staff should be a lieutenant general, and it so happened that one after another of the generals of the Army as they were retired were able to retire as lieutenant general. For instance, the general who is now at the Soldiers' Home, Gen. Young, retired as a lieutenant general, Gen. Chaffee, Gen. Bates, Gen. Corbin, and a number of others. After those who had participated in the Civil War had nearly all passed over or had been retired the law was repealed, so that the highest place one could occupy in the National Army was for years major general. Then came the legislation in the war-risk insurance act to make temporary generals and lieutenant generals.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it just so happens that I had charge of the war-risk insurance bill when it was before the Senate, and I remember why the action was taken at that time. It was taken upon the ground that our members of the staff in France and Gen. Pershing in command there could not very well sit around the council board with inferior rank, when amongst others who were sitting there were marshals of France and lieutenant generals of the British Army. It was therefore suggested that an amendment be put on so as to cure that difficulty which existed with our staff officers, I believe at that time Gen. March—though I have forgotten now, whoever was in France—and also Gen. Pershing. That, of course, was the reason of that law and was peculiar to that law. I moved it at the suggestion of the War Department and gave those reasons for it. It is not at all applicable in a case like this.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, something was said some time ago about the action of the Senate in attempting to bestow this rank upon Gen. Barnett, commanding the Marine Corps. I think if we are going to enter upon this policy of creating rank and making promotions the act of the Senate in recognizing the ability and the services of Gen. Barnett should be commended and not condemned. I do not know a better fighting force in the world than the force which we call the American Marines. They have distinguished themselves wherever they have been called upon to take part in active conflict. They have a high morale and recently they have written their names in letters of blood upon the French front and performed acts of valor which only emphasized the great reputation which they have always enjoyed. The creation of this force is largely due to the efforts and the enterprise and the ability of Gen. Barnett.

I quite agree, too, Mr. President, that if we are to promote men by legislation the services which Gen. Crowder has performed and given to his country in the work of Army organization entitle him to first consideration. But I question, Mr. President, whether it is a policy upon which we should enter, because it will be extremely difficult to draw a limitation anywhere once the practice has been established. For example, I know a man who occupies a very modest position at present in the United States Army, a colonel, a rank which he has held for many years, who is entitled almost exclusively to the credit of inaugurating a rifle program and producing rifles in accordance with that program.

Our ordnance program, Mr. President, has been disappointing; it will continue to be so for some time. There is here and there a bright spot in that program, a brilliant record of achievement, that relieves very largely the somberness of the program as an entirety. Col. John T. Thompson, of the United States Army, had charge of the small-arms program from the inception of the war. He had had the experiences of the previous two or three years as one of the managers in charge of the great Remington Works, and he brought at once to the problem the value of those experiences. After a process of selection, whereby the best gun was selected, as I think the experiences of the war will determine, he began almost immediately the production in great quantities of that gun. Whatever may be said of light artillery, of heavy artillery, and other ordnance, it is fortunate that we have plenty of small arms, not only for our organizing purposes in America but to supply the men at the front and to keep them supplied.

This man is entitled, Mr. President, if a soldier ever was, to some recognition, which, up to this time, however, he has not received. On the contrary, his services seem to have been disregarded, since for some time he has occupied a practically nominal position in the Ordnance Bureau of the Army. If we are by legislation to promote soldiers who have performed unusual service to their country, I shall insist that Col. Thompson be made a brigadier general. He is entitled to it from every standard from which his right to it may be considered. I think such a promotion should come in the usual way, through military channels, by appointment from the President. This is perhaps one of the many instances which will present themselves here; and we all know from our own experience, whether long or short, that some legislative precedents once established not only become difficult of control but become so potent that their mere existence is all that is essential to secure the enactment of similar legislation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. KING. This is really a paraphrasing of the sentence just uttered by the Senator from Colorado, and not nearly so well stated. If this legislation is passed, does not the Senator think that it will be an invitation for officers who have rendered, and who will render, distinguished services, to knock at the doors of Congress and set in motion—of course in a proper way—whatever influences they may command, to secure legislation giving them promotions and marks of approval?

Will it not result in Congress being besieged by those who seek special legislation for military honors and promotions? If not by those who would receive the promotions, by those who are friendly to their claims, and whose influence might be potential?

Mr. THOMAS. If the precedent would stop there it might not, perhaps, be so bad, but it will prompt those who are not deserving of consideration, and who can not get it through the channels of the War Department, but who have Representatives and Senators to speak for them, to insist that we bestow upon them the promotion and the position which they have been unable to win through merit in the usual channels; in other words, the matter of promotions will be gradually, then more generally, then perhaps universally transferred from the War Department to Congress. I very much question the beneficial efficacy of such a system of procedure upon the personnel, the morale, and the discipline of the United States Army.

Mr. KING. If we adopt this amendment would there be anything to prevent the Senator from Colorado from offering an amendment to give promotion to Col. Thompson and to others who have already rendered signal service during the war?

Mr. THOMAS. If this amendment be adopted, I should feel it my duty to ask for a similar promotion for Col. Thompson—no, not a similar promotion, but for a promotion—for he is entitled to it at the hands of Congress quite as fully as is any other man who has distinguished himself by military service since the war began.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, while the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who is a valuable member of the Military Affairs Committee, has not addressed himself to this subject, I have such confidence in his ability and his knowledge of questions coming before the committee that it would gratify me very much if he would express his opinion to the Senate as to the wisdom of special legislation of this character, not having in mind Gen. Crowder or any particular individual. I hope that my request will not be regarded as impertinent, although it may be rather an unusual one. The Senator's views might influence me in determining whether or not I shall press the point of order raised or whether I shall withdraw the point of order, and submit the question to the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I can not consent to being characterized so highly as the Senator from Utah has seen fit to do. I certainly am not an expert on the question.

The only thing I can say, however, is that the Senate should, in my humble judgment, legislate for situations as they arise. If it is not within the power of the President to promote an officer who is assigned to a special kind of duty, and if it is the proper thing for the President to have that power in order to make the rank fit the responsibility, then it is the duty of the Senate, in its wisdom, of course, to empower the President to do it. That, I understand, is what the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] seeks to do. However, I beg the Senator from Utah not to take that opinion of mine as conclusive.

Mr. KING. I desire to ask the Senator whether, in his opinion, the President has authority under existing law to give this promotion to Gen. Crowder?

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator from Tennessee if his amendment in every respect refers to the present incumbent of the office of Provost Marshal General?

Mr. MCKELLAR It speaks of the head of that department. I desire to have the Secretary read the amendment, so that we may have no doubt about it. The amendment does refer to the Provost Marshal General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. The amendment proposed by Mr. MCKELLAR reads as follows:

Provided, That section 8 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, shall be held and construed to authorize the President, in accordance with the provisions of said act, and for the period of the existing emergency only, to appoint as lieutenant general the officer detailed by the direction of the President to perform the duties of Provost Marshal General and the execution of so much of the aforesaid act as relates to the registration and the selective draft.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My understanding is that the rank of lieutenant general, which the Senator from Tennessee suggests is to go with the detail or appointment, is not necessarily to the present incumbent, but it is to any incumbent who might find himself in the position. I think without that legislation—at least I doubt it—the President has the power to give that rank to the officer.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I have stated, I regard this proposed legislation as unwise. In my opinion, it would be an unfortunate precedent to establish at this time. It may prove not only embarrassing to Congress, but it may constitute such a precedent as to be embarrassing to the military authorities as well as to the Commander in Chief of all of our forces. I feel that we should wait and have some regard for the modus operandi of the military department of the Government. As I have stated, my opposition to this legislation must not be construed as any unfriendliness to Gen. Crowder. I know him; in fact, I know him better than I do any other important officer in the Army. I have a greater friendship and regard for him than for any officer in the United States Army. His great legal ability would prejudice me in his favor, to say nothing of his long and splendid career. Personally I would prefer to vote for the promotion of Gen. Crowder than for any officer in the Army, but I believe that this is not the time nor the manner to deal with this question.

I feel, however, that the Senate should have a chance to express itself upon the matter, and I shall withdraw the point of order. Of course, the proposed amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee is subject to a point of order. It is not legislation which under the rule is permitted to be offered as an amendment to the pending military appropriation bill. If we adhered to our rules and applied them as we should in legislative matters, this proposed amendment would not receive a moment's consideration and would be subject to a point of order. However, as stated, I shall withdraw the point of order which I have made, and Senators may thus have an opportunity of voting upon the amendment. I express the opinion, however, that we should adhere to the rule and that at this time we should not support the amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, it was my purpose yesterday to address myself to many of the features of this bill, but because of the desire to secure a speedy vote I did not avail myself of that privilege. At this moment I express myself merely as to the amendment tendered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

Mr. President, I should like to see this amendment adopted. My reasons are that the peculiar duties put upon the present incumbent of this office, Gen. Crowder, ought to empower him to as great an extent as possible, that the public at large may have confidence in him and have respect for his authority. The peculiar duties he is called upon to exercise are of a nature which are weakened unless he appears to have the fullest confidence of his country, and that is certified to the popular mind by the rank which the officer bears.

Now, sir, let Senators hear me. I am probably the only Senator on this floor who has a personal grievance sufficient to object to this measure, and which grievance under ordinary circumstances would be accepted as sufficient to justify objections against this promotion, if any person's personal grievances were to be justified as an excuse for personal opposition.

Mr. President, it is known in my State that I am an officer of the Guard—I beg pardon for referring to it in the Senate—I am unofficially of the Guard; I am at present unofficially connected with it; and I have remained so and been so since the Spanish-American War up to the present time. No one knew that better than certain officers here in the War Department, and that my knowledge of fellow officers could be of information in making appointments from them. From my State I am morn, noon, and night being castigated by letters from members of the Illinois Guard because of the fact of an apparent political discrimination that happens from the Judge Advocate's office. Every man made a major or colonel in this department who has been named from my State has been a gentleman of the Republican Party—three of them, or five of them—high-class, capable gentleman, and, in my opinion, capable of filling their duties. Of all the Democratic officers applying, not a single Democrat has been appointed to the office, with the single exception I will name, under any circumstances, and this at a time when there should have been no partisanship, neither Democratic nor Republican. Under all circumstances surrounding us, there should have been some of each, representations from all parties, equal competency conceded. No protest of mine has been of any avail. One, who was a lieutenant governor of my State, long an officer of the Guard, who held an insignificant lieutenancy, having gone through all the training in the camps, having gone through all of the mutations necessary for perfection of form and ceremony, and having himself previous to that having been an officer of the Guard, has been nominated to be promoted from a lieutenant to a captaincy in the Judge Advocate General's Department—I owe this to Gen. Crowder—but as to every majority, not one has been given to a Democrat. This has hurt the Democratic officers of the Guard.

In the State of Indiana, in the State of Ohio, in the State of Wisconsin, in other States, this unfortunate form of discrimination is charged to have followed through some accident. But it is very difficult to make those who have been the victims of such discrimination, and whose letters of protest I have presented, believe these things could have happened by accident every day in every week of every month in a whole year. Yet I am powerless to offer a satisfactory excuse to those who protest except to acquit Gen. Crowder of intent to do such things.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. But those things, Mr. President, can occur in a busy condition, such as we are in now, without the slightest intention and without the slightest motive.

Mr. President, even these grievances, which I have been known to express as sent me by all these whose protests I have presented, can not stand against the merit of the officer, Provost Marshal General Crowder. They shall not stand against his capacity, they can not weigh against the deserts of promotion, and I rise to give approval to his promotion and ask that even as against any grievance of any Senator, and Senators know I understand their expressed grievances.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I assure the Senator I will yield if he will allow me to reach the period of my paragraph—I ask that the promotion be given to the officer and that it may apply to the present incumbent, Gen. Crowder, because of his work and his labor. He deserves it. I approve it because the position he occupies should have as much authority conferred upon it as possible in order to aid him in its execution before the public and obtain credit for his distinguished service in the popular mind. I now yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the situation which he has described as obtaining in Illinois and other States has not obtained in West Virginia. There have been to my knowledge four officers appointed to the Judge Advocate General's Department from the State of West Virginia, and I think three of them have been Democrats, and very competent, able men. Two of them have gone abroad, and there are no better officers there than those two officers of the Judge Advocate General's department, who are Democrats from my State.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that of those gentlemen who have been named from my State, for instance, Col. Chipperfield, who served with me as a brother officer in the Guard and was lately a Member of Congress, is a high-class, able, competent man, now a candidate for the Senate, and Col. McChesney is a capable and able gentleman, a high-class man, presented by his people as a prospective candidate for governor, a very able lawyer, and, of two others I might say, professors in a college, are in every way personally commendable. So I might speak of them all.

I agree with the Senator from West Virginia that there may be instances where the discrimination may appear to have been on the other side. I hope it is never intended anywhere, but I am sure, Mr. President, Senators will catch my viewpoint that there ought to be some effort made so that neither political party should monopolize these places and create in the minds of those of the opposite political party the notion that merely because of their politics these discriminations prevail.

I merely rose to support this amendment. I know the duties of the officer; I know the burden he bears. He ought to be aided, and I do not feel that even the discriminations to which I have alluded or other grievances felt by other Senators have been intentionally inflicted. I regret that they have been effective in my State to discourage men who have been long in the Guard, and, to make them feel that merely because they are of the minority party in the State of Illinois, they can not even be honored in a place where they may serve their country.

I ask that the amendment proposed, so far as I may be so privileged, be adopted. I give it my support because of the deserts of Gen. Crowder, his work and his merit, and I know the influence it will have upon the popular mind.

Mr. VARDAMAN and Mr. KNOX rose.

Mr. LEWIS. Did the Senator from Pennsylvania rise to interrogate me?

Mr. KNOX. No; I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I gladly yield the floor to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] had risen to his feet prior to the Senator from Pennsylvania and is recognized.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate only long enough to say that I am going to vote for this amendment. In doing so I will pay to a worthy officer the tribute of my respect, confidence, and gratitude for the splendid services he has rendered his country since the declaration of war.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, if this matter were to be determined solely upon the merits of Gen. Crowder as an individual, I would very gladly support it as a due recognition of the great services he has rendered, not only in the forming of the present Army that is engaged in the conflict abroad but because of a personal knowledge of the invaluable services he has rendered in the past. It was my good fortune while Secretary of State to be thrown very frequently with Gen. Crowder for four years in conferences with respect to many international matters, where diplomacy and the military authority cooperated to some extent, and a more capable and wise adviser and counselor it has never been my good fortune to know. It seems to me it is important, in order to maintain the proper spirit not only among those who are recipients of honors but to inspire in others who may desire to attain honors, particularly in as grave a situation as this country is now in, freely and frequently to recognize great ability and meritorious service. I think, however, that this amendment stands on broader ground. I think it rests upon the proposition that the branch of the service headed by Gen. Crowder is entitled to this recognition. War does not consist solely in battles. Indeed, it more depends upon preparation sometimes than in actual execution upon the field, because there can be no efficient execution without wise, careful preparation.

Gen. Crowder stands not only as the man charged with the responsibility of assembling an army, but he is, as well, the legal head of the Military Establishment; and Senators know that in all branches of the Government the law, the rules by which we are to proceed in the formation of armies, the rules that are to govern our relations if we are, as we are to-day, cooperating with other nations, all of the grave and intricate questions that are involved in a seemly and proper conduct of the Military Establishment, must be determined by the Judge Advocate General. In our civil establishment the law head of the Government sits in the Cabinet with the same rank as the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and other members of the Cabinet. I can not see any reason why in the Military Establishment the head of the law department of the Military Establishment should not receive the same recognition as those who execute the military orders.

Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I could not allow this opportunity to pass without saying that in order to be true to the sentiment that I entertain for Gen. Crowder, predicated upon a long and intimate acquaintance with him, if it stood solely upon the merit of the man, I would support this amendment; but if he were to me an absolute stranger—aye, if he were to me a man who stood in practically the position that the Senator from Illinois has described, in rather an unfriendly attitude, so far as his actions were concerned—I think, based upon the wisdom of recognizing the branch of the Government with which Gen. Crowder is connected and his relations to it, that this amendment should be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FRANCE obtained the floor.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GORE. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if he has further amendments to suggest?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no further committee amendments. I have one amendment of my own, but I thought I would offer that after other Senators had had an opportunity to present theirs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland has the floor. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GORE. I was not aware that the Senator from Maryland had the floor; but if he desires to offer an amendment that will probably take any time, I should be glad if he would yield to me to offer an amendment which I think will not take any time. I say that because I shall probably be in conference most of the afternoon.

Mr. FRANCE. I will yield with pleasure, with the understanding that I do not lose the floor.

Mr. GORE. I will say that if this amendment provokes any discussion I shall, of course, withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland yields to the Senator from Oklahoma for that purpose.

Mr. GORE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, at the proper place in the bill, the following:

To enable the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to construct and install a filtration plant or other suitable device for such purpose in connection with the water plant from which Fort Sill and Camp Doniphan, Okla., are supplied with water, $100,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 120, the last page in the bill, at the end of line 6, it is proposed to add the following:

Provided further, That in view of the grave existing emergency, which demands the more effective mobilization of the man power of the Nation for the industries related to the war and the raising of troops in addition to those now available, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to make a military census or enrollment according to residence, age, physical ability, nationality, training, status, occupation, profession, and condition of employment of all male citizens of the United States or male persons not alien enemies who have declared their intention to become citizens.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, if there is no opposition to this amendment, I do not care to discuss it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, so far as I may consent to the amendment going into the bill, I am willing to let it go in, and we can discuss it in conference when the bill is referred to the conference committee. I think there is merit in the proposition of the Senator, but whether or not it is broad enough to cover the proposition I do not know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after line 6 on page 120.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Following the amendment just agreed to?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I think this amendment would follow line 6, and I understood that was at the end of the bill. If not, it will follow the amendment just agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 120, as a separate paragraph, it is proposed to insert:

That the President is hereby authorized and directed to proceed, as rapidly as equipment and ocean transportation can be provided, to increase the National Army to not less than 5,000,000 enlisted men and such additional officers as may be necessary for such force; and the President is further hereby requested to report to Congress what additional legislation and what additional appropriations will be necessary to carry this provision into effect in the shortest possible time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this provision asking that the Army be increased as rapidly as possible considers every argument that was made in reference to our possibly not being prepared at the present time in equipment and in shipping, because it authorizes and directs the President to proceed, as rapidly as equipment and ocean transportation can be provided, to increase the National Army to this size.

Much of the argument yesterday on this proposition which evidenced a doubt as to its propriety admitted that we ought to have that much of an army, but was based upon the belief that possibly we would not have the shipping to transport that army. I think we can get the shipping as quickly as we can get the army; and I want to call the attention of the Senate to a speech made by Mr. Hurley and reported in the papers this morning. It is under the headline, "Promises ample ships—Enough for an army 'without limit,' says Hurley," and it quotes him as saying that the needs of the armies are the only measure of the shipbuilding program, and that they can meet all the requirements. If that be true, Mr. President, there is no reason in the world why we should not signify the legislative judgment that that army should be secured as rapidly as equipment and shipping can be provided.

I shall say nothing more on the matter, Mr. President; but I should like to have a yea-and-nay vote on it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that I think it is very unusual to direct the President to do anything like this, and I hope the Senator will change the word "directed" to "requested."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I assume that in creating an army—that is, the executive part of it—we should use those words; but I will change the amendment so as to strike out the words "and directed," so that it will read "That the President is hereby authorized to proceed," and so forth.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is better.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, does the Senator use the words "National Army" in his amendment?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is confined in its use now to men summoned only under the draft. Would it not be better for the Senator to use the term "Army of the United States"?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will so amend it, Mr. President. I am not a member of the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I understand, that will include the Regular Army, the National Army, and the National Guard. I ask to have the amendment stated as modified.

Mr. McCUMBER. I accept the suggestion that it be changed to "Army of the United States" instead of "National Army."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill, on page 120, the following paragraph:

That the President is hereby authorized to proceed, as rapidly as equipment and ocean transportation can be provided, to increase the Army of the United States to not less than 5,000,000 enlisted men, and such additional officers as may be necessary for such force; and the President is further hereby requested to report to Congress what additional legislation and what additional appropriations will be necessary to carry this provision into effect in the shortest possible time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota requests the yeas and nays on the amendment. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, as I read the bill that has been presented here and the amendments that have already been adopted, this particular amendment would be in conflict with the provisions found on page 119, would it not? I have understood that the size of the Army was left by the committee to the discretion of the President as necessity might arise. That being my understanding, I am not ready to place in a straitjacket, as to numbers, either the President or the Secretary of War; and I am ready to leave to their discretion the creation of an army of five millions, if they deem it to be necessary, during recess or otherwise, or an army of more than that number if it shall be by them determined to be necessary. For that reason, I can not support this particular amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there is no conflict whatever. This bill, of course, provides for raising an army of 3,000,000. The appropriations are for 3,000,000; the report states that it is for 3,000,000; and while the bill does not state as a matter of suggestion that the President should proceed year by year to raise such army as we will appropriate for, the amendment which I propose is merely a suggestion that this army should be increased to 5,000,000 as rapidly as the equipment and shipping will allow. It does not prevent going higher to any extent that may be deemed desirable.

Mr. LENROOT and Mr. JOHNSON of California addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it the Senator's intention by this amendment, in view of the action of the Senate yesterday, to instruct the President to raise an army of 5,000,000 men without changing the draft age?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think we will change the draft age in a very short time.

Mr. LENROOT. It does amount, then, to an instruction to raise an army of not less than 5,000,000 men within the present draft age?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; certainly, unless that is changed, as rapidly as equipment and shipping will allow.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I wanted to add what the Senator from Wisconsin has suggested. If this amendment be adopted, unless affirmative action be taken by Congress respecting the draft age, of necessity the army will be raised out of the present draft, and the ages therein limited between 21 and 31, and for that reason, if for no other, this particular amendment ought not to be adopted. As the discussion of the last few days has demonstrated, in order to have an army of 5,000,000 men it will be essential for us to increase the draft ages, or to lower them, as the case may be. If this particular amendment were adopted, and if it were executed and consummated, the army could only be obtained by doing that which with unanimity we have agreed ought not to be done—an invasion of the deferred classes of the present draft.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if within the present draft age we can secure 5,000,000 men, and if we can equip 5,000,000 men and secure the transportation of 5,000,000 men, then the necessitous conditions on the western front demand it, without reference to the ages; but I do not think we can do it within the next 2 or 3 or 4 or 5 months and probably not within the next 10 months. But before we shall reach the 1st day of next January we will undoubtedly reduce the age down to 18, and make the age limits between 18 and 40; and I wish to call attention again to the fact that this does not limit the number to 5,000,000, as suggested by the Senator. It simply says that as soon as the production of equipment and shipping can be secured the Army shall be raised to not less than 5,000,000.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the line of division is so very marked in the judgment of Senators here as to what Congress should do and what it should delegate to be done that I am compelled to offer as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota an amendment which I had proposed to offer directly to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted by the Senator from North Dakota, on page 120, after line 6, strike out the period with the word "conclusion," at the end of the line, and insert:

And the Secretary of War is hereby directed to raise by draft during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, as provided in said act and acts amendatory thereof, including those to be so drafted subsequent to June 28, 1918, not less than 3,000,000 men, and is further directed to cause said minimum number of 3,000,000 men to be organized, equipped, trained, and used during said fiscal year for the prosecution of the present war.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I shall not discuss this amendment at length at all. I have never heard it questioned before in the history of this country that the duty of raising an army was not a duty devolved upon the Congress of the United States and not upon the President of the United States except as I have heard it questioned upon the floor of the Senate since and during the discussion of the original draft act. I think it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to direct the raising of armies, and I offer this as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question reverts on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FRANCE. Let the amendment be read, please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 120, after line 6, insert the following paragraph:

That the President is hereby authorized to proceed, as rapidly as equipment and ocean transportation can be provided, to increase the Army of the United States to not less than 5,000,000 enlisted men, and such additional officers as may be necessary for such force; and the President is further hereby requested to report to Congress what additional legislation and what additional appropriations will be necessary to carry this provision into effect in the shortest possible time.

Mr. FALL. This is the amendment which we are now to vote on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. FALL. I shall not vote for it, because it does nothing whatsoever.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I was not on the floor when the amendment was offered. I am thoroughly in accord with it, except it seems to me that if Congress is to raise the Army and fix the size of it, it ought to direct it and not authorize it. I want an army over there, and a large one—big enough to do its business. I do not believe in simply authorizing the President to do this thing; I believe in directing him to do it. When the question came up of arming our merchant ships to defend themselves against the German submarines the resolution submitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations was that the President was authorized, if at any time in his opinion it might become necessary, to place guns on our merchant ships to defend our lives. I was in favor of directing him to do it, and I am in favor of directing him to raise this army of 5,000,000 men. I regret exceedingly that the mover of the amendment has seen fit to eliminate the word "directed."

Mr. McCUMBER. I will state that, in answer to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], while I felt it ought to be "directed," because it was from Congress itself, I was willing to defer to his suggestion, inasmuch as it is simply an expression of a desire of Congress that we have an army of 5,000,000 men as soon as possible, and it mattered very little what particular form it was in. But, with the permission of the Senate, I would ask leave to reinsert the word "directed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my suggestion was that I thought it would be better to use the word "requested"; that it was not usual to direct the President in resolutions of any kind. But if other Senators think differently, I certainly shall not contest the matter. If it is thought right to direct the President, let that word go in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the modification will be made.

Mr. THOMAS. Do I understand the Senator from North Dakota to say that he has reinserted the word "directed"?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. If that is the case, I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, it seems to me that we are wasting a great deal of time here about unnecessary matters. Not long since, when I said that we would see from three to five million men in the Army, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] said that the Indians in his country would call that "big talk." He said then that there was no possibility of carrying 500,000 men across the water by July 1. You know what the condition is relative to that now. We have authorized the President here to raise and equip all the men who can be raised and equipped under this law and under the capacity of the Government to do it. Now, what is the use of saying 5,000,000 men or any other number? What is the use of disturbing the program as it is proceeding when we have already sent 900,000 or probably 1,000,000 by the 4th of July or the 1st of July across the sea. This is the program. It is in hand. We are expecting to raise all the army that is necessary, if it takes all the men who are within draft age or who are within reach of any sort of a draft age, and to increase it, if necessary.

Let us have this program laid before us as it ought to be and as it will be by the military department after the recess, when it is thoroughly studied out, and let us proceed along one line and without any diversion or division of opinion among Senators. All of us favor raising an army, and the largest we can raise and equip, and the War Department is in touch with this, and this is the way it ought to be done. Let us do it in this way, and let us save the time and the talk.

There has been a whole lot of talk here that was not necessary. The other day I did not like it. I did not say much about it then. Those who were opposed to woman suffrage got up on the floor of the Senate and made an excuse for a filibuster. They said it was done because no one would pair with a particular Senator. That was to divert attention from what they desired to do and what they did do. It seems to me that that was a poor excuse. There is no obligation upon the part of any Senator, as I understand it, and certainly there is no favor done, to pair with a Senator who is sick and disabled and can not attend the session of the United States Senate. He did not make himself sick; he can not come; and the constituency of his home State or the Nation do not expect that he shall attend and perform the duties of a Senator when he is physically disabled and it is impossible for him to be here. There is no favor in a thing of that kind. Then why should they have expected some other man to do that. It seems to me that that was the poorest and flimsiest excuse that has ever been urged for a filibuster such as was instituted the other day and succeeded.

Now, this other matter here is important. Let us proceed with the program laid down by the people to whom we have committed this program. Let us do it in that way, and do not let us clutter it up.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. KIRBY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FALL. I understand that we are five months ahead of the program laid down.

Mr. KIRBY. I do not know whether we are five months ahead of the program laid down or not, but I know they are 100 per cent ahead of what a great many Senators said was not possible to be done by the 1st of July.

I believe this amendment ought to be defeated and that the bill ought to be passed, and passed to-day; and I hope it will be.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I merely wish to remark before the bill is passed, what is obvious to every Senator, that this work of raising an army is not dependent in any way at all upon the amount of shipping that is built. We could raise a million or two million men in addition to those already in the Army and organize and equip them and train them in this country. It will take possibly a year to fit a man for the battle front, and the work can be going on in this country while the shipbuilding program at the same time is being carried out in the shipyards.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am in entire sympathy with the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota, but I shall feel constrained, for the reason stated by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and some others, to vote against it. If the Senate were not to be in session soon, I should vote for this amendment. Personally I think that we should address ourselves at the earliest possible moment to arming and equipping 5,000,000 men; and we are failing in the discharge of our duties if we shall fail to undertake that work. I believe it is the duty of Congress to indicate the size and character of the Army, and that it is not the function of the Commander in Chief to determine those questions. Those are legislative matters; but I realize that the Committee on Military Affairs, the Secretary of War, the Chief of Staff, and Gen.

Crowder have been giving considerable attention to these questions. It is their opinion—at least the opinion of most of the Committee on Military Affairs, I am advised—that we should pretermit legislation of this character for the present.

It is obvious, though, that we can not postpone legislation looking to the augmentation of the Army very long, and I hope that the Military Affairs Committee will examine into this question fully and report at an early date such additional legislation as may be required that we may raise and equip an army of at least 5,000,000 men.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there is so much sensitiveness about the word "directed" it shows how rapidly we change. In 1898 the Republican Congress passed a resolution in regard to Cuba. These are the words they used to a Republican President:

That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, directed and empowered—

Congress thought they were performing their usual function and the President took no possible offense. I think we used the word "directed" at a much later period. My impression is that it was in the Mexican resolution. I may be wrong.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator what was the subject matter under consideration?

Mr. LODGE. The resolution on which we went to war with Spain.

It simply said he shall have power to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States and call into the active service of the United States the militia of the several States to such an extent as may be necessary to carry this resolution into effect, but he was directed to do it. But of course in those days Congress took a different view of its own power.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I am not at all afraid of the word "directed." In fact, I think it is the appropriate word to use. If we direct the President to do anything, it is a customary phrase when the function is a legislative function; but the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, after all, simply expresses an opinion, and should go further, if that is the legislative intention.

For one, I dislike very much to see the constant record vote against increasing the Army. Yesterday we voted "no" all day against changing the ages of the draft law.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator just there?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I concede that that is true; but many of the Senators who really favored that increased Army gave the reason for it, that within the next 90 days there would be a survey made and a report made which would enable them to vote more intelligently.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Oregon is correct; yet I venture the assertion that, by way of Holland and Spain, the information will go to Germany that we did not authorize the raising of an army; that our votes were negative votes. I do not like that aspect of it. We have just voted down the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, a really practical and substantial amendment that might have appropriately been adopted, and I think the chances are good that the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota will be voted down. I do not know what the vote may be. I really do not like to see the constant negative vote which is recorded here against increasing the Army.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does not the Senator know that if the vote had been taken last Monday on increasing the age limit from 20 to 40, it would have been overwhelmingly carried in the Senate?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think it would.

Mr. SMOOT. I may say to the Senator from statements made to me by Senators on both sides of the Chamber, I know it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator a moment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator state what served to change the opinion of the Senate in that respect since Monday?

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to state it. I think it has already been stated by the Senator from Oregon having this bill in charge. There was word brought to the Military Committee and to Senators direct that it would be better not to pass it until this fall, and therefore the opinion of Senators was changed, based upon the statement made by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am frank to say to the Senator that if we had voted last Monday on this question I would have voted for it, because Senators who are insisting upon increasing the Army are voicing my sentiments. I have only yielded my judgment, as I said before, not because of any instruction which came to us from the Secretary of War or from any other source but from the fact stated, what was claimed to be the fact. I was honestly of the opinion, and so were the Committee on Military Affairs, that if you raise more than the number of men provided for at this time it will send men into cantonments and camps with unsanitary conditions we will not be able to cure before the month of September, and I was not willing to send these boys into those camps to be so treated.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not questioning the wisdom of the Senator from Oregon. Our boys have been at Camp Custer for a year. A large percentage of them have had some military training, but for one reason and another they have not been utilized yet on the other side. But the point I want to make is that the constant voting in the negative on propositions to increase the size of the Army is not a good thing for us to do. It has a bad effect. We are going to take a recess and may not take up this matter until fall. In the meantime our negative vote stands here as a record made against increasing the size of the Army.

Of course, every Senator must use his own judgment. I do not find any fault with the desire of Senators to get some workable basis where the size of the Army may be increased. That is a very laudable desire upon the part of Senators; but with the Military Affairs Committee opposed to this thing now it seems to be the height of wisdom for Senators to give that committee, which is thoroughly representative not only of the Senate but of the country, an opportunity to formulate some legislation for the increase of the Army that we can all unite upon.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not a fact that the position of the committee was based upon the following statement from the Secretary of War:

The War Department has from the beginning been expanding its military program. We are many months ahead of what was our original hope in regard to the transportation of men. We are constantly seeking ways to expand that, and we are in the midst of a plan now to expand it again. Should we so expand the program it may turn out that we will need an increased number of men, and it may turn out that the best we can do won't require it. When we have determined upon what is best we will then ask Congress to provide additional money and men.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In reply to the Senator from New Mexico, permit me to say I do not remember any such statement as that last part having been made. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. FALL. It is a quotation purporting to be in the words of the Secretary of War, contained in an editorial in the New York Tribune of yesterday.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. A number of Senators attended that meeting. I do not remember the last part of that statement being made at all. There was nothing said to the effect that we may not need to expand the Army. The proposition was simply and plainly that they were working out an enlarged program.

Mr. FALL. And were going to expand it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FALL. But as to shipping, now I understand——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The proposition was, as I recollect it now, that we have speeded up the transportation of troops; that we have been enabled to do that, not because we have increased our shipping but because we have a contract with Great Britain and France for the use of their troop-carrying ships; that that program is likely to be changed or modified toward the last of July, because the arrangement will then end, but we may be able to renew it and we may be able to have ships of our own and continue to expand the program in that way.

Mr. FALL. May I ask the Senator right there, as that has been a very interesting proposition to me, if Great Britain and France did not offer these ships prior to January 1?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know anything about that, but it would not surprise me if it had been made and turned down.

Mr. FALL. On the 1st of March of this year I made that statement and asked if it would be challenged, that we had been offered for months exactly the ships which we used later while the Secretary of War was in France.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The point I make is this: There is not a Senator on either side of the Chamber who will vote against increasing the Army to whatever extent is necessary. But we are put in the anomalous situation and contradictory position of voting down every proposition to increase the size of the Army. Now, why should this be? Have we no confidence in the purpose and plan of the Committee on Military Affairs to bring in an appropriate bill that will meet this question? If we have confidence, why should we not leave it there and not pile up one vote on top of another against increasing the size of the Army when we all favor it?

I do not like to vote against these measures. I disliked very much to vote against the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico. Indeed, I did not vote against it, but it was voted down. I do not desire to anticipate the fate of the amendment proposed by my friend from North Dakota, but if it survives the combined or nearly combined opposition of the Military Affairs Committee it will be very extraordinary. Now, I am not criticizing——

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator object to another interruption?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly not.

Mr. FALL. I shall not take the time now to read into the RECORD the editorial of the New York Tribune from which I quoted, but may I say to the Senator the editorial is headed "More procrastination," referring to the action of the Senate in refusing to raise the age limit, and that the last words of the last line are "Ludendorff doesn't procrastinate."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator gives emphasis to what we all recognize as a fault, but yesterday we were confronted with amendments upon a House bill, and the House of Representatives, if I understand it correctly, has determined not to change the draft rules in this bill. If they have so determined, how fruitless it is for us to undertake to raise that issue when its ultimate defeat would give to the world the impression that we were not willing to rise to that situation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is not the answer to a large extent contained in the bill itself, found on page 119?

Power of the President to increase the drafted Army: That the authority conferred upon the President by the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," is hereby extended so as to authorize him during each fiscal year to raise by draft as provided in said act and acts amendatory thereof the maximum number of men which may be organized, equipped, trained, and used during such year for the prosecution of the present war until the same shall have been brought to a successful conclusion.

Is not that all the authority necessary to get an Army even of 10,000,000 men?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that since we have been debating this bill we have added three-quarters of a million men to the Army under that power, and we will add all the men which the necessity requires. I am not going to criticize the wisdom or the course of the Secretary of War. I am one of the men in this Chamber who freely admits that the Secretary of War has done well in a trying situation. I have no criticism to make of him; I am not going to criticize anybody connected with the raising of our armies or their proper equipment and mobilization; but I feel reluctant to continue to vote "nay" against increasing the Army and having the impression go out to the world that the Senate has at last gone to about its limit on the question of raising an army. That will afford ground for a misinterpretation of our action and give color to the claim that we are only half-heartedly in this war, when such is not the truth. Why we should furnish that kind of a basis for criticism abroad is beyond my comprehension.

I did not intend to say even that much; perhaps I ought not to have said it; but I know that we have the power and that we must initiate this proceeding. I am not at all afraid of using the language contained in the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. The word "directed" has no terror for me at all, but if, when the vote is taken there is a negative vote upon it, I say it is not calculated to accomplish what we desire, but that the effect of it will be bad, and it will be months perhaps before we can rectify it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator from Michigan thinks that the effect of defeating this amendment would be bad, why will he not vote for the amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Because I dislike very much to seem to be in direct conflict with the purpose of the Military Affairs Committee to effectuate the same purpose a little later.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But even irrespective of the opinion of the members of the Military Affairs Committee—for whom I have the highest respect, though I think they may be fallible and mistaken sometimes—does the Senator think that any possible damage can be done by showing this country and showing our allies abroad that the Congress of the United States is determined to raise and to maintain a large army?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Can there be any ill effect? If we have not ships enough to carry the soldiers now, they will say, "They are going to have the army anyway, and they will bring them over here when they get the ships."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut is absolutely right; and, entertaining the view that I do, I find it difficult to vote against the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota; and yet I am very fearful it will not pass. If it does not pass, then the same criticism which I now make would appertain, whether I voted for it or whether the Senator from Connecticut voted for it; it would make no difference. It would be the action of the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But it would make a difference to me whether I voted for it or not, because I want to show the country that I am thoroughly determined to do everything possible to have a sufficient military power in this Government both on land and on sea to win this war. I do not want to wait a minute in doing everything I can to help to raise such an army.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut has a record here that is absolutely unimpeachable upon that point. From the very beginning of the war he has stood like a stone wall against half-heartedness and compromise and hesitation and delay; and I commend him for it. The Senator from Connecticut, by his example and influence with his associates, furnished much of the patriotism, vigor, and strength upon which we have builded our military strength. His voice in this Chamber has never sounded a false note; and I commend him for it. Unfortunately, however, I do not believe that the German Government will understand our attitude unless the Senate ratifies it. No matter what the Senator from Connecticut or any other Senator has said or how he voted, the Senate is on record against it. I do not propose to go on record myself any further in voting "nay." I did it yesterday under protest, but I do not propose to keep on doing it. I do not, however, believe that we are going to get anywhere until the Committee on Military Affairs has brought in something upon which we can all agree. When that time comes, I do not think there will be a negative vote on it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if every Senator voted his convictions to-day, there would be very few negative votes against the proposition. The Senator from Colorado says that the bill already provides that we may raise an army as rapidly as we can equip it. What does the bill provide? We say, in effect, in the bill, "Here are $12,000,000,000; that $12,000,000,000 will pay the expense of raising an army of 3,000,000 men. When you have used the $12,000,000,000 and raised the army of 3,000,000 men you can not go any further than to spend the money that we provide for those 3,000,000 men." This amendment does not conflict with that. It says, "Yes; raise your 3,000,000 men with the $12,000,000,000, but go a little further and provide for raising the 3,000,000 up to 5,000,000 men, report to us what it is going to cost, and we will proceed to give you the money to raise those 5,000,000 men." That is what the amendment says; that is what it says to the country; that is what it says to the Kaiser; and that is what I desire that the Senate of the United States shall say.

Now, all I ask is for Senators to vote their convictions as to whether we ought to raise an army of 5,000,000 men as rapidly as we can possible do it. The bill limits the number to 3,000,000 men, because it only provides for the payment of 3,000,000 men. We want to go further. The heart of the American people is with us, and they say "Put 5,000,000 or put 10,000,000 men in the field, and we will back you." I want to answer that demand, and say we are going to back our soldiers upon the front with whatever force we can possibly raise and ship overseas.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota is absolutely right. I wish his views might be as potential as they should be. He has uttered an absolute truth; he has stated the correct American position; he can not be assailed for it. I think the Senators on the Committee on Military Affairs can, with perfectly good conscience, vote for the amendment and still reserve the right to formulate their legislation in their own way; but with all the force and all the wisdom that is contained in the amendment I nevertheless do not believe it is going to be adopted.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, let us have a vote.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But I am going to vote for it, because I do not want to be put in the attitude of voting on the other side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent to-day. I am paired with him, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when Mr. TOWNSEND's name was called). I desire again to make the announcement that my colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is unavoidably detained on account of illness in his family.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KIRBY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] on account of sickness.

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is absent, to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]; and

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 45, as follows:

Gerry	McLean	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott

So Mr. MCCUMBER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in explanation of my vote just cast, I desire to say that I voted against the amendment because I believe that in the very near future there will be submitted a complete program for an increase in the Army, which will probably go even beyond the 5,000,000 mark. It is because I am content to await the development of a complete program that I have cast this vote. I am heartily in favor of increasing the Army, and I wish to say that now with all emphasis.

Mr. THOMAS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, line 22, it is proposed to strike out "$175,022,190," and insert "$175,111,790" in lieu thereof.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, that amendment is designed to secure the additional sum of $89,000 for very much needed repairs to the buildings at Fort Logan. The chairman of the committee is somewhat familiar with the situation; and, if the amendment is not agreeable to him, I will make a short explanation; otherwise, I will not take up the time of the Senate to do so.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am willing to accept the amendment, so far as I am concerned, and we can discuss the amendment in conference if it is required.

Mr. THOMAS. Very well.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, is the item to increase the appropriation for Fort Logan?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask if that is the matter which was brought to the attention of members of the Committee on Military Affairs by circulars and booklets from that neighborhood?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. This is the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. It is the amendment; but it is not that sort of an amendment. It is to provide money to make repairs to buildings now on the ground. The fort is being used as a recruiting station. It has a capacity of about 1,300, but sometimes it has to accommodate over 5,000. The sanitary conditions are such, in consequence of that situation, as to make this added sum necessary for actually needed repairs.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the War Department say that they need this money?

Mr. THOMAS. The War Department does not state that it does not need the money; but it has recommended $41,000 of the needed $130,000, because its policy is, as stated in a letter here, to do nothing in the way of improvements at existing posts that are not absolutely necessary. I personally know this to be necessary, for I went all over the premises in December last and was then assured by the commanding officer that $130,000 was as little as he could get along with for making absolutely needed repairs.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does this amendment contemplate any new buildings?

Mr. THOMAS. None whatever.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is for the repair of existing buildings?

Mr. THOMAS. Nothing more; except that it may require directly some outhouses for the necessary requirements of the soldiers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of a permanent or of a temporary character?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, temporary. The toilet facilities there, for example, at present are inadequate, and there may be required some additional outhouses for absolutely unavoidable requirements.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Understanding, Mr. President, as the Senator has assured me, that it does not involve a permanent increase of the facilities of the Army post, I will not object to the item; but I simply wish to say, in passing, that, as a general rule, I am opposed to the permanent increase of what may be termed remote Army posts, for I believe that before we shall finish the establishing of a sensible military policy in this country we will come to the conclusion that we will abandon a great many Army posts which can not maintain any large number of men and are not strategically located.

Mr. THOMAS. There may be something in that, but that is something to be determined hereafter. I am concerned now only in this particular appropriaton, so badly needed for the recruiting service of the United States Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado, being to an amendment of the committee heretofore agreed to, it will be necessary to reconsider the action by which the committee amendment was agreed to. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I offer an amendment, the purpose of which is simply to authorize the Vice President to name two cadets at West Point from the honor graduates of schools where military training is in vogue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

That the corps of cadets of the United States Military Academy shall hereafter consist of 2 from each congressional district, 2 from each Territory, 4 from the District of Columbia, 2 from natives of Porto Rico, 4 from each State at large, 82 from the United States at large, 20 of whom shall be selected from among the honor graduates of educational institutions having officers of the Regular Army detailed as professors of military science and tactics under existing law or any law hereafter enacted for the detail of officers of the Regular Army to such institutions, and which institutions are designated as honor schools, upon the determination of their relative standing at the last preceding annual inspection regularly made by the War Department, 2 of whom shall be selected from persons recommended by the Vice President. They shall be appointed by the President and shall, with the exception of the 82 appointed from the United States at large, be actual residents of the congressional or territorial districts or of the District of Columbia or of the island of Porto Rico or of the States, respectively, from which they purport to be appointed.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment that it is general legislation. We do not want any of those shoddy officers. Let officers come up from the enlisted ranks of the Army.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me say to the Senator that the amendment does not change existing law at all, except that as to the 20 honor graduates from institutions where military training is had under Army officers, 2 of the 20 may be appointed by the Vice President. It does not change the law in any other respect; it does not increase the number of cadets, but simply gives the Vice President the power to appoint 2 of the 20.

Mr. NELSON. Is that all?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the only change made.

Mr. NELSON. Then I withdraw my point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FALL. I offer an amendment, to be incorporated at the proper place in the bill, temporarily between lines 5 and 6, on page 55.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, between lines 5 and 6, it is proposed to insert the following:

Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended as follows: Seventy-one thousand dollars to be paid by the Secretary of War, or under his direction, for death claims for citizens of the United States killed on the American side of the line at El Paso, Tex., Douglas, Ariz., and other points, as found and ascertained by commissioners appointed pursuant to joint resolution of Congress approved August 9, 1912, directing the Secretary of War to investigate claims of American citizens for damages suffered within American territory, etc., and $5,000 each to be paid by the Secretary of War to the heirs or legal representatives of other American citizens killed on the American side of the line, first for the American civilians killed at Columbus during what is known as the Villa raid, and the same amount each for such other American citizens killed upon this side of the line in raids by Mexicans or by bullets fired from the Mexican side, the names of such citizens to be ascertained by the Secretary of War.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, $71,000 of this amount desired to be appropriated has been twice appropriated for by the Senate of the United States in different bills, but neither bill has finally passed the House and become a law. Since the damages were ascertained by the office of the Secretary of War to be some $71,000, various other deaths of similar character have been caused under exactly similar circumstances or under more aggravated circumstances, particularly those caused at Columbus.

Mr. President, these, of course, are not legal claims against the United States. It is simply a question as to whether the United States will provide for its citizens, or the families of its citizens, who have been killed on this side of the line, as, for instance, those at Columbus, by raids which this Government appeared to be unable to prevent. Of course, if I were to remain on this floor I would do everything possible to see that sooner or later such amounts were recovered from those responsible in Mexico, but at this time, possibly, it is not practicable to insist upon any claims against that country; and as little as the United States can do, I think, is to provide for its own citizens or their heirs who have met their death. As I have said, a number of these claims have been investigated and the damage ascertained by a commission appointed by a former Secretary of War under direction of the Congress. The appropriation should be made to carry out the findings of that commission and to relieve American citizens.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 120, line 4, after the word "used," it is proposed to strike out the words "during such year."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the employment of those words at that particular place in the bill seems to limit the use of the trained soldiers to the fiscal year in which they were trained. It is apparent, therefore, that the words should come out. The words "each fiscal year" in lines 1 and 2 on page 120 apply, of course, to the practice of legislating for the current year. These troops would be trained and equipped during one year, but might be used during the succeeding year. I therefore offer this amendment to correct that, and I think the chairman of the committee is willing to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING and Mr. PENROSE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. PENROSE. I was going to offer an amendment, but I will wait.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. Let me state to the Senators that this amendment was read the other day. I offered it, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] suggested a point of order. It is the same bill which passed the Senate a number of days ago, after it had been unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. A consultation has been had with the chairman of the Judiciary Committee in the House and with members of the Military Affairs Committee, and it is their view that it would be wise to have it attached to the military bill. It is a bill the passage of which is greatly desired by the War Department and by the war activities of the Government. There certainly can be no objection to this amendment, and the chairman of the committee is willing to accept it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, has the amendment been read?

Mr. KING. It has been read. It is the bill that we passed the other day in regard to the right of eminent domain for power purposes. The Senator is familiar with it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, yes. I have no objection to its adoption.

Mr. KING. The Senator was a member of the subcommittee that reported the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think it is a very important measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to, as follows:

That during the pendency of the present war, any person, association, or corporation, for the purpose of furnishing electric power to the United States or to persons, associations, or corporations engaged in the manufacture of ships, explosives, or munitions of war, or other articles and things for the use of the United States or its allies, upon compliance with the conditions hereinafter set forth, may institute proceedings in any district court of the United States or in any court of any State having jurisdiction of the property to be condemned, for the acquirement by condemnation of any land, the temporary use thereof, or other interest therein, or right pertaining thereto, required for the location or construction of any power plant, or for the transmission of electric power for the operation of any plants which are or may be employed in the production of the articles and things hereinbefore mentioned: Provided, That the right acquired by the condemnation herein authorized shall terminate when the power furnished ceases to be used in production for the United States or for the allies of this country in the present war. That proceedings for the condemnation of property required for the generation and transmission of such electric power shall be prosecuted in accordance with the procedure prescribed for the condemnation of property in the State wherein the proceedings may be instituted.

That before any person, association, or corporation furnishing or to furnish electric power for the purposes mentioned in section 1 of this act shall have the right to institute proceedings for condemnation, they shall submit to the Secretary of War a full and complete statement of the plan for furnishing power and the nature and extent of the easements or property which they desire to acquire under condemnation proceedings, for the purposes stated in the preceding section. If the Secretary of War approves such plan and finds that the construction or extension of such facilities for the generation or transmission of power and that the condemnation herein authorized is necessary to increase the supply of power for the objects and purposes stated in section 1 of this act, then such person, association, or corporation shall, upon the approval of such plan by the Secretary of War, have the right to construct, maintain, and operate the facilities described in such plan, and may cause proceedings to be instituted in any court having jurisdiction thereof for the acquirement by condemnation of any lands, the temporary use thereof, or other interest therein, or right pertaining thereto, as may be needed for the construction, maintenance, and operation of such facilities: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as authorizing any rights in any public lands of the United States, or in any waters of the United States, except such as may be necessary to build such transmission lines along or across said waters as may be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may, prior to granting his approval as above set forth, require such person, association, or corporation to file with him a bond, in an amount and with a surety or sureties satisfactory to him, conditioned upon the prompt construction of the proposed facilities and the diligent maintenance and operation of the same to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War during the present war.

That any person, association, or corporation having secured the approval of the Secretary of War and filed a petition for condemnation as herein provided may, upon filing with the court in which such petition is filed a bond to secure payment of just compensation to the owners of property taken, in a form and an amount and with a surety or sureties approved by said court after such notice and such hearings as the court may prescribe, have the right of immediate possession and use of such property or rights.

That no plan for the construction or extension of any facilities shall be submitted to or approved by the Secretary of War hereunder after the existing state of war between the United States and its enemies shall have terminated, and the fact of such termination shall be ascertained and proclaimed by the President, but such termination of the existing state of war so ascertained and proclaimed shall not interfere with the condemnation of any land or other property or rights needed for the construction, maintenance, and operation of any facilities approved hereunder by the Secretary of War before such proclamation: Provided, however, That the Secretary of War may upon such termination of the existing state of war and prior to the entry of judgment in any condemnation proceeding hereunder and the commencement of construction or extension of the proposed facilities revoke any approval given hereunder to the plan for such proposed facilities: Provided, further, That nothing in this act shall be construed as granting the right to operate such facilities after the termination of the existing state of war.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, in the act of Congress of August 29, 1916, the following provision occurs:

That all officers and enlisted men of the National Guard and of the Medical Reserve Corps of the Army who are Government employees, and who respond to the call of the President for service, shall, at the expiration of the military service to which they are called, be restored to the position occupied by them at the time of the call.

I have here an amendment to change that paragraph in existing law so as to include the soldiers of the United States National Army, which seems to be an act of justice, and to place them on an equality with the other branches of the service. I understand that the chairman of the committee is willing to permit the amendment to be added to the bill and go to conference anyhow, and I will ask the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert in the bill on page 59, after line 22, the following:

That all officers and enlisted men of the National Guard, of the Medical Reserve Corps of the Army, and of the United States National Army who are Government employees, and who respond to the call of the President, or who voluntarily enlisted, or who resigned to accept a commission, or were drafted for service, shall, at the expiration of the military service to which they were called, be restored to the position occupied by them at the time of the call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 120, following the amendments heretofore agreed to at that point, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to provide and issue to all men who, since April 6, 1917, have been honorably discharged from the armed forces of the United States a distinctive button or badge of such design, size, and composition as he shall determine and adopt, and to cause a new button or badge to be issued to such persons, without charge therefor, whenever during the present emergency the button or badge originally issued shall have been lost, destroyed, or rendered unfit for use without fault upon the part of the person to whom it was issued, and to meet the cost of procuring, providing, and distributing the same out of any appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for "Transportation, supplies, and services, Quartermaster Corps."

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person other than the rightful owner to wear said button or badge, or other button or badge approximating the design thereof, or for any person by misrepresentation to procure the issuance of either an original or substitute button or badge, or for any person, partnership, association, or corporation, without the authority of the Secretary of War therefor, to manufacture said button or badge, or other button or badge approximating the design thereof; and any person, partnership, association, or corporation who shall violate the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not object to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. I only want to ask whether, in his opinion, the door is not perhaps opened pretty wide for fraud in using these badges that may be lost?

Mr. WEEKS. I think the door is closed by the provisions of the amendment which has just been read. I think it is carefully guarded in that respect.

Mr. PENROSE. I wanted to ask whether the Senator was satisfied about that. It would seem to me that thousands of these badges would be lost in the course of nature.

Mr. WEEKS. The amendment provides that it is a misdemeanor to manufacture these badges.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; but several million men will be returning from the other side, and several thousand of them are going to lose these badges, and other persons will wear them for fraudulent purposes. I only made the inquiry on that point.

Mr. WEEKS. I think it is very well protected in the amendment—as well as it can be.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I want to make a suggestion to the Senator from Massachusetts in connection with this amendment. I have had letters from many people who have been subject to the draft, and who have been examined, and found, for some physical reason, deficient. They are of draft age, and they are walking about the streets here at home, and they are subject to a good deal of criticism and inquiry by people who do not understand why they are not in the service.

I wonder whether there is anything in this bill, and, if not, I wanted to suggest to the Senator whether he could not submit to an amendment to this amendment simply for the purpose of getting the subject before the conference committee, by which the Secretary of War would be authorized to designate some badge which could be worn by those who have been found physically unfit to serve? It would relieve them of great embarrassment, and I do not see how any harm could come from it.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Connecticut is well timed. What he has said is undoubtedly the experience of every Senator. It is a serious matter for a young man of draft age to be about home without knowledge on the part of others of the reasons for his being at home. There is a prejudice against him which he does not like to face; and I am willing to accept an amendment along that line, if the Senator will prepare it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know of instances where perfectly loyal and enthusiastic young men of draft age, walking about the streets, have been accosted by passers-by and asked, "Are you a slacker? Why are you not in the war?" And wherever they go they are open to that imputation. A man may have valvular disease of the heart, which does not show at all to the ordinary person as he walks along the street, and he may have tried to volunteer and enlist. Where there are some physical reasons of that kind, there ought to be some way of relieving him of these opprobrious remarks.

I have hastily drafted, for submission to the Senate, this amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, simply to get the subject before the conference committee. I propose to add to that amendment the following:

That the Secretary of War is further authorized to select and prescribe some appropriate badge which may be worn by those of draft age who have been rejected on account of physical disability—

Or some such language as that. I do not care about the language. It might be—who have been found physically deficient for military service.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, if these men are rejected for other good and valid reasons, the same thing ought to apply to them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. "Or who have been rejected."

Mr. FALL. I think "rejected" is the proper word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts accept the amendment?

Mr. WEEKS. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I want to state before it is tendered that the other day, when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] offered an amendment with regard to the Slavic Legion, this amendment had been prepared, and I intended to offer it at the time, but was called from the Chamber. I have presented it to the members of the Military Affairs Committee, and, so far as I know, it has met with their approval.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, after the word "same," in line 20, it is proposed to insert:

RUSSIAN LEGION.

That, under such regulations as the President may prescribe, a force of volunteer unit or units, as he may direct, may be raised to be composed of Russians resident in the United States, but not citizens thereof. Such force shall be known as the Russian Legion or by such other description as the President may prescribe. No man shall be enlisted in it until he has furnished satisfactory evidence that he will faithfully and loyally serve the cause of the United States and the cause of a united and independent Russia and that he desires to fight the Imperial Government of Germany and the Imperial Government of Austria and any other nations with which the United States and its allies are now at war. The force so raised and duly sworn into the service may be equipped, maintained, and trained with our own troops or separately, as the President may direct, and thereafter may be transported to Russia to be used against the common enemy either with our own troops or with those of Russia or any nation associated with the United States in the present war; and the several items of expense involved in the equipment, maintenance, training, and transportation of such force may be paid from the respective appropriations herein made or from any subsequent appropriations for the same.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am in hearty sympathy with the spirit of this amendment and shall not attempt to oppose it. There are some rather complex aspects to the situation, however. I was wondering what would be meant by the oath which these men would have to take to support a united Russia.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in the preparation of that amendment I followed in the main the language that was found in the amendment tendered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator mean a Russia reunited for the purpose of being our ally in this war?

Mr. KING. I have in mind an independent Russian Government, such a Government as we would recognize and could deal with, and, of course, one that would be our ally, at least potentially and morally, if not in a strictly military sense.

Mr. WADSWORTH. For example, a Government that we had recognized?

Mr. KING. That we shall recognize.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It must be remembered—I think my recollection is correct—that we have not recognized any Government in Russia.

Mr. KING. That is true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And there is one doubt in this situation respecting this amendment—whether these men, who I sincerely hope will join the fighting line, will be required to take an oath to support the Russian Government that we eventually recognize, regardless of whether that Government is a belligerent ally of ours or not.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to an amendment of that character.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I have just come into the Senate Chamber, and I have not had time to read the amendment; but we ought to be extremely careful, because of the Poles. I hope to live to see the day when there is an independent Republic of Poland. There are three Polands—the German Poland, the Austrian Poland, and the Russian Poland—but they are all Poles, all one nationality, one religion, and one speech. The Russian Poles have been turned loose by the bolshevik government. They are derelicts at the present moment, and we must find some way of giving some recognition to the Polish people. I hope the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee will be able to prepare a bill which will cover that point; but we should be very careful, in drawing up an amendment of this kind, not to involve the Poles. They have been left out of the clause for the Slavic Legion. We have not attempted to establish any Polish Legion, which I understand is satisfactory to them, because a Polish Legion for France is being formed in this country. They are not Russians at this moment.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LODGE. I am taking the time of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I yield; certainly.

Mr. FALL. If we desire to enroll this Russian Legion, would it not be perfectly satisfactory simply to say, with reference to their oath or their allegiance, "who shall swear allegiance to the cause of the United States during this war," and stop there?

Mr. LODGE. The amendment as offered reads:

> No man shall be enlisted in it until he has furnished satisfactory evidence that he will faithfully and loyally serve the cause of the United States—

I should leave out "and the cause of a united and independent Russia," because we do not know anything about it. Russia before included a large part of Poland; and I do not want to do anything that would look like handing back part of Poland to Russia and part to Germany or part to Austria. Then it will read:

> No man shall be enlisted in it until he has furnished satisfactory evidence that he will faithfully and loyally serve the cause of the United States, and that he desires to fight the Imperial Government of Germany and the Imperial Government of Austria—

And so forth. We do not know what "a united and independent Russia" is.

Mr. KING. I am willing to accept the amendment, but believe that it may somewhat weaken the amendment. Senators will perceive that this amendment, if enacted into law, may be regarded by the Russian people who desire to be emancipated from the tyranny of bolshevikism and the merciless oppression of Germany as a message speaking sympathy and a promise of genuine help to them. There are those in Russia who long for an independent, united Russia, a Russia of substantially the same territory as that embraced within the Empire before the war came. There are Russians temporarily within our borders to whom the words "a united and independent Russia" carry a meaning and a message which will inspire them to patriotic service for Russia and a determination to drive Germany from their fatherland.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question or two, because I came in while this amendment was being read. I want to see if I understand the amendment in all of its aspects.

These are Russians who are to be recruited. Am I right in that?

Mr. KING. Russians in the United States, and who are not citizens of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. And when they are so recruited they will be under American officers, and a part of the American Army to as full an extent as though they were American citizens drafted into the Army. Is that correct?

Mr. KING. The amendment provides that they shall be used in Russia, either independently or in connection with the allies or our own troops.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator mean to say that they can not be used upon the French front?

Mr. KING. This amendment does not contemplate that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, Mr. President, suppose they were sent over to Russia as a separate American army, under their own officers, and they should become imbued with the bolshevik sentiment of Russia, and conclude that under their peculiar democracy they should submit to a referendum the war program, whether they should advance or retreat, whether they should charge or whether they should not—what control would we have over them?

Mr. KING. Of course, Mr. President, we can conceive of Russians proving false to the aspirations of their people and dead to any national aspirations. It is possible to conceive of betrayals of Russia by some of her people. Indeed, there has been a betrayal by the group supporting Lenine and Trotsky of Russia and the liberties of the Russian people. It is possible that the cause of liberty may be assailed by others than Russians, but because we can conceive of a base betrayal of a righteous cause by those who should support it would not justify a mere negative course when affirmative action might bring results greatly to be desired. If I may be pardoned for a moment, I would like to submit a few observations, general in character, in support of this amendment. I do not purpose taking the time to sketch the matter even in broad lines, but a few words will present to Senators some of the reasons justifying, in my opinion, the legislation proposed.

This proposed legislation does not commit our Nation to the plan of recruiting from Russians who are in the United States troops for over-sea military service; that is, the Commander in Chief of the Army and the military authorities are not compelled to recruit a legion or any troops from Russian nationals in our midst. The President is merely authorized to raise a force of volunteer unit or units to be composed of Russians, resident in the United States, but not citizens thereof. This amendment is in harmony with the spirit of the amendment tendered a day or two ago by the Senator from Nebraska. It will be recalled that under his amendment the President was authorized to raise a force of volunteer troops to be composed of certain races of the Austro-Hungarian Empire resident in the United States, but not citizens thereof, for military service against the common enemy.

I have had a number of conferences with Russians, who are now in the United States, in respect to this matter. Some of those with whom I have conferred are strong adherents of Kerensky and came from Russia since the rise of Bolshevikism. Others came to this country before the overthrow of the Czar, but all with whom I have had conferences appear to be well informed as to conditions in Russia. Of course, I appreciate the fact that it is well-nigh impossible to obtain accurate and definite information concerning conditions in Russia. The situation there changes from day to day. However, they, and I am sure the Senate, are in possession of sufficient facts to enable us to reach conclusions, more or less well founded, concerning the situation in Russia, and the steps required to bring about conditions more favorable to Russian liberty and independence, and conducive to the welfare of this Government and our allies. As stated, we do not pledge this Nation to the raising of a military force under the terms of this amendment. However, the enactment of it into law will, in my opinion, have an effect upon the Russian people that will be of advantage to the allies and make for improved conditions in Russia. If I may be permitted to use the hackneyed expression, "the psychology of the situation" will be improved. Germany has industriously sought to poison the Russian people not only against the allies but against this Nation. She has sown the seeds of suspicion and distrust in all part of Russia and has endeavored to convince the Russian people that the nations opposing the central powers sought territorial acquisitions in Russia.

We are all familiar with the subtle, sinister, and dangerous propaganda carried on by Germany in all nations of the world. She has her agents in every land and under every flag. There is no perfidy, no treachery, that Germany would not practice and no lie that she would not declare that she regarded as making for her advantage; and so she has by treachery and hypocrisy and a most wicked and criminal propaganda destroyed government in Russia, loosened the bonds which should unite the Russian people, created suspicions and enmities among the Slav races within the Russian Nation, and brought economic and industrial destruction to the Russian people and almost succeeded in reducing the great empire of Russia to a condition of abject vassalage. The situation calls for action, vigorous and immediate, upon the part of this Nation and the allied powers. Economic and industrial relief must be given to the Russian people and given quickly. The groping, almost helpless peoples must be rescued from Germany's grasp and defended against her wicked and perfidious designs. In saving Russia our Nation and the allies would not only be rendering services of the highest character to the cause of democracy and civilization, but they would also be weakening Germany and contributing to the ultimate military triumph of the allied powers over their common foe. Of course, this policy could not be supported if the Russian people opposed it and were satisfied to be vassals of Germany. This resolution will be regarded as another declaration on the part of this Nation that we are solicitious for the welfare of the Russian people, and it will corroborate the statement so often made that we have no designs upon Russia; that we desire her independence, and that the great Russian people shall have the opportunity of ordering their own lives, establishing and maintaining their own government, and being freed from the control and domination of the Teutonic or any other power. The willingness of this Nation to recruit Russians who are in our midst and to equip them for military service against the common foe, transport them across the seas to there fight for Russia against the cruel and perfidious foe which is now seeking to reduce the Russian people to servitude, will be a further mark of the disinterested friendship of the people of the United States in behalf of Russia and a powerful weapon to meet the poisonous and destructive propaganda now carried on by Germany in Russia. Certainly this amendment under no view can be harmful, but on the contrary it can not do other than serve a highly useful purpose and be regarded as a message of succor and support emanating from this great Nation to a people with whom our relations have always been most cordial and for whose sorrows this Nation feels the profoundest sympathy.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator certainly undertands, as we all understand, that we can save Russia for Russia only by first defeating Germany. Therefore, if there are any patriotic Russians who want to serve the fatherland they ought to be sufficiently patriotic to be willing to join with those of the allies who wish to accomplish the same result by fighting anywhere along the line where that result may be best accomplished.

I for one am opposed to taking into the American Army any division or any unit to whom we may not say, "You shall battle where the President directs." I am opposed, so far as my voice can go, to saying to any unit, "You are foreigners. We will arm you. We will supply you. You can go to your fatherland, but if we want you to advance beyond the border of that fatherland—if we want to ask you to invade Bulgaria, for instance—you can say, 'No; we did not agree to do that. We simply agreed to go back to Russia and fight for Russia upon Russian soil.'"

We may be able to accomplish far more by sending a real patriotic army to help the Serbians, to assist the Roumanians, to battle against the Bulgarians; and yet, if I understand the Senator's amendment, it does not provide for any of these things. But the vital objection is that under this amendment you say to the world that we have a unit in the American Army that we can not control absolutely. That idea is what destroyed Russia, and we do not want to introduce that in the slightest degree into our American military program.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. KING. Would the Senator's objections to the amendment be met if the words "be transported to Russia to be used in Russia" were eliminated, and if the amendment were to provide, the same as the amendment which we have already adopted as to the Slavic Legion, that they may be used against the common enemy? That would leave it to the President to use them wherever they could be of service in the cause of Russia and the allies.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think the Senator can accomplish that by striking out the words "to Russia," in line 5 of page 2.

Mr. KING. Yes; I had that in mind.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then it would read:

The force so raised and duly sworn into the service may be equipped, maintained, and trained with our own troops or separately, as the President may direct, and thereafter may be transported to be used against the common enemy—

And so forth.

Mr. KING. I will perfect the amendment by striking out the words "to Russia" in line 5, page 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah, as modified.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Utah if the words in line 10 of page 1, to wit, "and the cause of a united and independent Russia," have been stricken out?

Mr. KING. Those words have been stricken out.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah, as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have here two amendments that I should like to have agreed to for the purpose of permitting them to be considered in conference. The first amendment, I know, raises a vexed question, but it has to come up sooner or later, and I should like to have it at least on record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the pay clerks of the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, now on the retired list shall hereafter have the rank, pay, and allowance of a second lieutenant, and the President is hereby authorized to appoint and commission them, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, second lieutenants in the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, and place them on the retired list as such: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall operate to reduce the pay or allowance now authorized by law for pay clerks of the Quartermaster Corps.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I raise the point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah raises the point of order.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator just had an amendment go through against which a point of order could have been raised.

Mr. KING. The amendment which the Senator from Utah offered was a very meritorious and beneficial one.

Mr. PENROSE. I think this is meritorious enough for consideration. I shall be glad if the Senator will permit it to go to conference. I do not expect that it will have a long life there, but I should like to have it have a little breathing spell.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania state to the Senator from Utah whether his amendment has the approval of the full Military Affairs Committee?

Mr. PENROSE. No, I can not; and I do not know that the amendment of the Senator from Utah has the approval of the full Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will not try to institute a comparison between the amendment which he has offered and the one which I had the honor to tender a moment ago.

Mr. PENROSE. I thought the Senator's amendment had been introduced with very little consideration and without much authority from anybody except himself. I am not prepared to say that it was not wise; but if points of order are going to be started on these amendments, a lot of them have been permitted to go through in a very haphazard way.

Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator that I will withdraw the point of order, but will vote against his amendment, and hope that the Senate will vote it down.

Mr. PENROSE. That is all right.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think I ought to say that my recollection is that the Committee on Military Affairs had this matter under consideration and rejected it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think I ought to say the same thing. I am quite sure it does not meet with the approval of the committee.

Mr. PENROSE. I had not that information before. In view of that information, I shall not press the amendment. I will ask to have it lie on the table or be postponed indefinitely. I had not been so informed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to offer an amendment which I think should properly come in after line 7, page 43.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, after line 7, insert:

That all uniforms, accouterments, and equipment required for any officer of the military or naval forces of the United States, including cadets at the Military and Naval Academies, shall be furnished and issued to such officers by the Government at cost price, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, and the same shall be similar in quality and price for all officers of the same rank.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will permit me, that provision was inserted on the floor of the Senate in the Military Academy appropriation bill, and we were unable to get the House members to accept it and it went out in conference. I have no objection to its going on the bill, but I wish to say to the Senator now it is very doubtful if the conferees on the part of the House will agree to it because the House has declined to act favorably on the proposition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have a letter here, or, rather, a memorandum, prepared by The Adjutant General of the Army, with reference to the matter which I desire to have inserted in the RECORD. This memorandum shows that the Secretary of War is making provision now for furnishing to officers their uniforms upon a different basis from that heretofore. Under this the cloth is taken by the Government and furnished to the officers at cost. The War Department makes a contract for the conversion of the cloth into uniforms and endeavors to see that the price paid, of course, is not exorbitant.

The statement the Senator has made with reference to this matter is correct, but the provision passed the Senate as a separate bill. I have been unable to learn any reason why the House members do not accept this provision. I hope the conferees on the part of the Senate will insist upon it or insist upon mighty good reasons for putting it out. In my judgment it is really a shame that the Government permits men whom it is making officers to command our Army to be the prey of the uniform makers throughout the country.

I received a letter a day or two ago with reference to a major in the Army, in which it is stated that it will soon be necessary for him to get a new uniform, and he is waiting till legislation of this kind can be passed, because it is impossible for him to secure the uniform a major really requires for less than a thousand or more dollars. The same writer of that letter states the case of another major who paid $1,250 for a uniform. I hope the chairman of the committee will get these facts and remember them in the consideration of the measure in conference.

These persons have had to pay for their uniforms almost, if not entirely, a hundred per cent more than the Government could furnish the uniforms to these men for. I was told by one of the officers of the War Department, in talking with him in reference to this matter, that the officers are paying now $35 for a pair of boots that ought to be gotten for $18. Mr. President, that is simply indefensible, and it is an outrage upon these men that we leave it so that they are compelled to make payments of that character.

A Member of the House told me the other day that the War Department had prescribed a certain kind of watches that the officers must have and made certain specifications that they must come up to, and then they named watches of a certain make that would comply with these specifications. After that was done a contract was let under which a certain class of watch is furnished, and the officers must pay $21 per watch, and that this watch is sold regularly in job lots for railroad purposes at $10 apiece; in other words, every officer who gets one of these watches is really robbed of $11. The Government requires the officers to have the watches.

The Government ought either to see to it that they get them at a reasonable rate, or the Government ought to furnish them, and it ought to furnish the equipment and all the accoutrements and uniforms that the officers are required to have.

Mr. President, I ask that this letter may be printed in the RECORD, so that the officers may know what steps are being taken. If this legislation does not pass, it may be possible for them to save something in the uniforms that they may get, but I do hope that the conferees on the part of the Senate will insist upon this amendment.

I wish to call attention to the fact that the War Department in a letter sent down some time ago said they could comply with this proposed legislation; they made no objection to it; so that there can be no excuse on that account for not including this provision in the bill. I ask that the memorandum may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be printed in the RECORD.

The memorandum is as follows:

JUNE 6, 1918.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ADJUTANT GENERAL OF THE ARMY.

Subject: Officers' uniforms.

1. The Secretary of War directs that the following instructions be published for the information and guidance of the Army:

(1) The following cloths are adopted as standard materials for officers' uniforms, and all uniforms for officers made in the future in the United States will be of one of these prescribed standards:

For coat and breeches—summer wear:
(a) An O. D. cotton.
(b) A 13-ounce all-wool worsted gabardine.

For coats and breeches and overcoats:
(a) A 12-ounce worsted serge.
(b) A 17-ounce whipcord.
(c) A 21-ounce whipcord or elastique.

For riding breeches:
(a) A 24-ounce bedford cord.

For overcoats:
(a) A 30-ounce melton or kersey.

Samples, according to standards adopted and on file in the office of the Quartermaster General, will be supplied to all local quartermasters and kept available for inspection by officers. All cloth will be supplied at cost by the Quartermaster Corps, and a sufficient quantity will be kept on hand by the various depot, camp, post, and station quartermasters to meet the contemplated requirements.

(2) The Quartermaster Corps will invite bids for making uniforms; the contracts will be let at a specified cost per uniform, one contract (or more, if necessary) to be let for each general supply depot; all uniforms or material purchased within the zone of jurisdiction of any depot to be supplied under the provisions of the contract of such depot. Contracts will be let in the usual manner to the lowest responsible bidder, care being taken that only firms experienced in making uniforms to measure should be considered responsible in this connection.

(3) Contractors must have representatives at all camps, posts, and stations in the territory covered by their contracts, not necessarily living there but to go there upon call of the local quartermaster, to measure, fit, and make delivery of uniforms and such alterations as may be required, the Government to furnish a suitable room or building for this purpose. Other tailoring in the nature of repairs, pressing, etc., is authorized at rates to be determined by local commanding officers. Every garment must be guaranteed by the contractor to fit and be made to fit, the officer's acceptance being proof thereof. All changes or alterations will be made at the expense of the contractor.

(4) All properly fitted garments not delivered through no fault of the contractor will be taken by the local quartermaster at contract price for delivery to officers if practicable. If this is impracticable, the garments will be placed in stock for sale or issue.

(5) All orders for uniforms will be made through the office of the local quartermaster, who will have supervision over the contractor's agent. The cost of the uniform will be the contract price plus the cost of the cloth. Officers purchasing uniforms will pay the local quartermaster the same, who, in turn, will settle with the contractor.

(6) In addition to furnishing cloth to contractors as above noted, the Quartermaster Corps will furnish cloth at cost direct to officers who desire to have tailoring done by firms with which the Government does not have a contract.

(7) Upon notice from the Quartermaster General that firms with which contracts have been made are prepared to make uniforms, all other contracts or agreements made by any branch or department of the Army for making officers' uniforms which interfere with the operation of this order, or contract executed in compliance therewith, will be terminated at once.

2. The Secretary of War further directs that the attached papers be returned to the Quartermaster General, by indorsement, with information of the above action.

HENRY JERVEY,
Brigadier General, National Army,
Acting Assistant Chief of Staff, Director of Operations.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer the following amendment to be added to the bill at the proper place.

The SECRETARY. At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

That captains and lieutenants of Philippine Scouts who are citizens of the United States shall hereafter be retired in the grade held by them at the date of retirement and shall be retired for disability under the same conditions, including pay, as officers of the Regular Army, and that they shall receive as retired pay 2½ per cent a year for each year of service, to a maximum of 75 per cent of the active pay of their grades at date of retirement and retired pay being increased for the additional years of service up to the maximum of 75 per cent of the active pay: Provided, That hereafter when an officer of Philippine Scouts has served 20 years he shall be eligible for retirement under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That all officers of Philippine Scouts on the date of the passage of this act be commissioned, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and not examined after entrance except upon promotion to the next higher grade: And provided further, That all officers of Philippine Scouts now borne on the retired list as such shall be transferred to the retired list created by this section and shall thereafter receive the retired pay and allowances provided by this section for other officers of Philippine Scouts: And provided further, That any former officer of Philippine Scouts who vacated his office in the Philippine Scouts by discharge or resignation on account of disability contracted in line of duty shall be placed on the retired list created by this section and shall thereafter receive the retired pay and allowances authorized by this section: And provided further, That officers of Philippine Scouts retired under the provisions of this act shall not form part of the limited retired list now authorized by law.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I hope there will be no objection to this addition to the Army bill. It was introduced as an independent bill. It was carefully considered by the Committee on Military Affairs. It was reported favorably by a unanimous committee, and is now on the calendar for consideration by the Senate.

I recognize that the amendment is subject to a point of order, but in view of the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs, after the most careful consideration, has given its approval to the measure, I hope the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], whom I see watching me, will not object. It is a very worthy proposal. I could very easily convince the Senator from Utah of the truth of that fact if I dared to take the time to do it. I do not want to postpone the conclusion of the Army bill, but I hope the Senator from Utah, remembering that it has received the unanimouse support of the Military Affairs Committee, that it is accompanied by a written report which states fully and particularly the reasons which moved the committee to give it a favorable recommendation, will not object to the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is very hard for one to deny to the Senator from Iowa any request which he makes, because there is no man in this Chamber who is fairer in the consideration of legislation than the distinguished Senator. I am opposed to the amendment. I think it is improper legislation. It is in line, however, I know with some legislation of this Congress in the determination to put everybody upon the retired list. I would have some amendments to offer to it and some observations to submit. I feel constrained, unpleasant as it is, to raise the point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CUMMINS. I could make another proposal but it must bear the same fate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. CALDER] is compelled to be absent this afternoon on important business. Before leaving he asked me to present for him an amendment to the bill. May I say to the chairman of the committee and to other Senators who take an interest in the bill that this amendment of my colleague's is really but a bill which has already passed the Senate, I remember, upon two occasions, authorizing the President to place upon the retired list with the rank of brigadier general Col. Brainard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, after line 4, insert:

That, in view of the conspicuous service in the Arctic of Col. David L. Brainard, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, he being one of the 7 survivors of the original 25 members of the Greely Expedition, and of the injury to his eyesight resulting from exposure while in said service, which injury will necessitate his early retirement from active service, the President is hereby authorized to place that officer on the retired list of the Army, after over 40 years' active service, as a brigadier general, with the pay and emoluments of a retired officer of that grade, and to grant him a commission in accordance with such advanced rank.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. KING. Before it is passed upon I desire to ask the Senator from New York whether there is any other reason for taking this case out of the general law than the fact that Col. Brainard is one of the survivors of the Greely expedition? Because if that is all, I shall feel constrained to raise a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Col. Brainard upon that expedition suffered very grave misfortune in a particularly severe injury to his eyesight, which compelled his retirement. He had been until that time—and I may say he has been since, although upon the retired list—regarded as one of the most brilliant officers in the Army. The Secretary of War himself recommends the passage of this legislation. I may say to the Senator that since our entrance into the European war Col. Brainard, although suffering to some extent from impaired vision, has been summoned back from the retired list and placed upon active duty for this emergency, showing that his talents are thoroughly appreciated by the officials of the War Department.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether he has rendered such military service as would entitle him to the distinction of being a brigadier general?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The War Department itself is of that opinion, not only because of his services upon that particular expedition, but he has taken part in several Indian campaigns, in which he has done excellent service.

Mr. WARREN. I trust the point of order will not be made against this amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has twice passed the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Col. Brainard is a gallant officer, as has been stated. He underwent tremendous suffering and privations during his service in the Arctic region. He has been able and industrious at the front or at his desk or field, wherever sent; is in the service now, although entitled to retirement, and I think he ought to have the privilege of retirement as a brigadier general.

Mr. KING. I have had occasion heretofore to call the attention of the Senate to the lavish manner in which it was dealing with the Public Treasury and to the gratuities and benefits and pensions which were being bestowed in so many directions. I have insisted that Congress was not conserving the Public Treasury or protecting it from demands made with persistence and power, and many of which lack merit and should be ignored. There is too much sentiment back of many measures receiving our attention. Senators respond more or less to the emotional and hysterical situation presented in great crises. There is so much that can be said in favor even of unworthy and improper legislation, particularly if it relates to services rendered by individuals in behalf of the Nation, that we are often swept from the path of safety and rational conduct, and legislate under the spell of emotionalism. I have urged that the strictest economy be observed in dealing with the Public Treasury; that appropriations for the prosecution of the war should be more than liberal, but that in dealing with other questions not pressing, not imperative, we should practice the most rigid economy. There should be billions for the war—there should be little for demands that can wait until the war is over; and, as I have had occasion heretofore to say, under the war fever there is much unwise and, indeed, dangerous legislation enacted. We forget ancient and guiding landmarks and rush into all sorts of special and ephemeral legislation. Advantage is taken of the emotional, unstable, and, if I may be pardoned for stating it, hysterical feeling that finds expression everywhere. The whole Nation is charged with it, and it is reflected in the conduct of high officials. So far as it is possible, we should resist these influences and deal with questions presented in a deliberate, dispassionate, and rational way. This is a time for coolness, not frenzy—for wise legislation, not neurotic and hysterical legislative expression. It is hard to resist dangerous precedents at this hour. It is so easy to find pretexts, and, indeed, most sophistical arguments in support of almost every demand. The amendment just offered does not commend itself to me. It is in line with the sentiment which I have just condemned and it will prove an embarrassing precedent which we will have to meet in the future. I shall not press the point of order, but shall vote against the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FALL. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 120, before line 8, insert the following:

The President is also hereby authorized, and the Secretary of War directed, to call into the service of the United States, by enlistment for the term of the present war, three or more regiments of mounted volunteers, in addition to any other forces herein or otherwise provided, such mounted volunteers to be selected from men between the ages of 18 and 21 years, and from those between 31 and 45 years, and under the provisions of section 3 of the act of May 18, 1917, and to be used in protecting property and citizens in any portion of the United States and upon the borders thereof and in any State, and also to be used in any foreign country, as the President may direct: Provided, That the President is hereby authorized to appoint officers for such volunteer force as in said act provided for other forces, and also from any civilians as he may think best.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, a similar amendment passed the Senate on a yea-and-nay vote by 43, I think, to 17—a record vote. I shall have nothing further to say about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. FALL. I shall have to ask for a yea-and-nay vote on it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can not help that, of course; but I hope the Senator will not insist on the amendment. Let me state to the Senate that when the same proposition involved in this amendment passed the Senate once before, the House would not stand for it, although they had previously passed the same bill.

Mr. FALL. This is not a general proposition at all with reference to volunteers, but simply leaving it in the discretion of the President as to whether he wants to raise more than three regiments of volunteers without the age limit—that is, from 18 to 21 and from 31 to 45 for special purposes—on the border particularly or wherever he may desire to use them. It is the same proposition which passed the Senate before on a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Under those circumstances, and because of my anxiety to get the bill through I shall not object to it, but I do not believe the House will stand for it.

Mr. FALL. Of course I shall have very little hope of its being finally enacted as legislation if it will go into conference with that feeling on the part of the Senator. I hope, however, that he will insist upon the amendment in the conference.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the chairman of the committee a question to get some information? Has the committee amendment, on page 79, relating to the importation of certain war materials free of duty been stricken out?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Was a roll call had upon it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think not, but objection was made to it by the Senator from Utah, and finally it was eliminated from the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was not present when that objection was made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate. One amendment has been reserved. Are there further reservations?

Mr. CUMMINS. A parliamentary inquiry. Is the amendment I just offered in order in the Senate without a reservation?

Mr. LODGE. It was not adopted, and the Senator can offer it again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was rejected as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CUMMINS. A point of order was made against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can be reoffered in the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. It was offered in Committee of the Whole, and a point of order was made against it and sustained. I have some reason to think it will not be made again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can be reoffered in the Senate and the point of order remade against it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not help that.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certain amendments were made as in Committee of the Whole, and the question is on concurring in those amendments save as to the one reserved.

The amendments were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the one reserved amendment. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Page 106——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, we adopted yesterday an amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. It was presented as a substitute for the amendment offered by the committee. I supposed it was presented as an amendment to the amendment offered by the committee. That would leave it simply as an amendment to the existing law, and in that form as it passed yesterday it contained an open contradiction. It was necessary to reenact the words of the existing law, leaving out a line which conflicts with the proviso. Therefore I offer it in that form. The proviso is verbatim what was adopted by the Senate yesterday. The first part is the existing law made to conform to the proviso.

I also promised yesterday Senators who were interested in it to offer an amendment to the Hitchcock amendment as adopted, and I suppose I can offer it to this amendment which I present, because this was not adopted by the Senate yesterday. I will ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state it.

The Secretary read as follows:

Such draft as herein provided shall be based upon liability to military service of all male citizens or male persons not alien enemies, or aliens not enemies who are covered by treaties or conventions as provided in Chapter — of this act who have declared their intention to become citizens between the ages of 21 and 30 years, both inclusive, and shall take place and be maintained under such regulations as the President may prescribe not inconsistent with the terms of this act: Provided, That a citizen or subject of a country neutral in the present war who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States shall be relieved from liability to military service upon his making a declaration, in accordance with such regulations as the President may prescribe, withdrawing his intention to become a citizen of the United States, which shall operate and be held to cancel his declaration of intention to become an American citizen, and he shall not be entitled to make a new declaration during the existence of the war in which the United States is now engaged.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the first part of that amendment, as I said, is the existing law modified to meet the proviso. The first part covers two classes of aliens, alien enemies and aliens of the country with which we are allied or associated in the war. The former we can not and would not take in any event. The latter, friendly aliens, we are providing for by treaty.

The proviso which was adopted in these very words yesterday by the Senate deals with the neutral aliens. I move to amend the amendment by adding at the end the following words, which are those employed by the Senator from Nebraska when he first introduced the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the proposed amendment the words:

And shall forever be debarred from becoming a citizen of the United States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator? Was the last amendment suggested a part of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. LODGE. I offer it as an amendment to the amendment because I told the Senate yesterday I would offer it and there were a number of Senators who desire to have it go in.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will yield I want to ask him whether it ought not to be a substitute for the last phrase in the amendment that was adopted with reference to making a new declaration?

Mr. LODGE. No; the amendment as originally proposed by the Senator from Nebraska covered both points, and I think both must be covered, first, the withdrawal of cancellation of the declaration and then the barring from American citizenship.

Mr. LENROOT. But the amendment in the latter part as it was finally adopted provided that he should not make a new declaration during the existence of the war. That ought to be stricken out.

Mr. LODGE. That is not necessary. I will ask the Secretary to strike out the words "and he shall not be entitled to make a new declaration during the existence of the war in which the United States is now engaged," and substitute "be held to cancel his declaration of intention to become an American citizen and he shall forever be debarred," because the second one includes the first.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator to ask if he thinks that last clause is violative of our conventions and treaties with reference to the admission of aliens to this country?

Mr. LODGE. It does not interfere and can not interfere with any treaty we have ever made. No country would submit for one moment to an agreement with another affecting the conditions on which a foreigner could become a citizen. All we have ever done in the treaties that were read here is to recognize the right of expatriation. There was a long contest, we being the first to champion it, against the doctrine of indefeasible allegiance. We gradually have got all the world except Russia and Turkey to agree with our position on the right of expatriation. Some of our treaties with Norway, with Costa Rica, with Great Britain, and other countries, recognize formally the right of expatriation by providing that if a citizen of either country becomes a citizen of the other country in conformity with their laws he is recognized as a citizen of that country. That is a mere recognition, but, of course, if anybody will reflect upon it there can not possibly be any restriction upon the conditions any country chooses to impose upon naturalization.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Under the draft law certain classes of people are exempt from military duty. I believe certain religious sects or students of divinity are exempt. I desire to ask the Senator whether a student of divinity residing in this country having declared his intention to become a citizen would be interfered with in any way by this amendment?

Mr. LODGE. Not in the least. It only makes them subject to the draft law. It only applies when they plead their foreign citizenship.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In exemption?

Mr. LODGE. That is all. It touches nothing else. It reaches only those neutrals who live in this country, who have made their declarations of intention, and yet claim citizenship in the country of origin in order to protect themselves from military service. They will not go home to their own country and serve in the armies there, the armies of the neutral countries being all mobilized, but they remain here and will not serve in our country. I think that sort of dual citizenship should not be permitted. At all events, they should not be given the privileges, as they are in many States, of American citizens. They have in some States the privilege of voting, and every other privilege. The naturalized American and the native-born American are taken into the draft and sent to the war while these men stay here, protected from their own country by residence here and protected from our draft by their claim of foreign citizenship. Under those circumstances those people ought not to be given the privileges of citizenship which they now have in many States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have very slightly changed the amendment which I heretofore offered, and I do not think it will now meet with the point of order, nor do I suppose it is necessary to have it reread.

The amendment referred to is to insert the following:

That captains and lieutenants of Philippine Scouts who are citizens of the United States shall hereafter be retired in the grade held by them at the date of retirement and shall be retired for disability under the same conditions, including pay, as officers of the Regular Army, and that they shall receive as retired pay 2½ per cent a year for each year of service, to a maximum of 75 per cent of the active pay of their grades at date of retirement and retired pay being increased for the additional years of service up to the maximum of 75 per cent of the active pay: Provided, That hereafter when an officer of Philippine Scouts has served 20 years he shall be eligible for retirement under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That all officers of Philippine Scouts on the date of the passage of this act be commissioned, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and not examined after entrance except upon promotion to the next higher grade: And provided further, That all officers of Philippine Scouts now borne on the retired list as such shall be transferred to the retired list created by this section and shall thereafter receive the retired pay and allowances provided by this section for other officers of Philippine Scouts: And provided further, That any former officer of Philippine Scouts who vacated his office in the Philippine Scouts by discharge or resignation on account of disability contracted in line of duty shall be placed on the retired list created by this section and shall thereafter receive the retired pay and allowances authorized by this section: And provided further, That officers of Philippine Scouts retired under the provisions of this act shall not form part of the limited retired list now authorized by law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is a point of order raised against the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa? The Chair hears none; and without objection the amendment is agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask the consent of the Senate that the Secretary in the enrollment of the bill may correct the numbers of the sections and chapters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That order will be made in the absence of objection.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate request a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. WARREN managers at the conference on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I submit the conference report on House bill 11692, being the District appropriation bill, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 61, and 83 to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have not been able to agree.

JOHN WALTER SMITH,
JOE T. ROBINSON,
J. H. GALLINGER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
T. U. SISSON,
JAMES MCANDREWS,
C. R. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments still in disagreement, request a further conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. GALLINGER managers at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I offered some days ago instructing the Senate conferees on the Agricultural appropriation bill in respect to the fixing of the price of wheat may be now taken up for consideration by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Chair lays the resolution referred to by the Senator from Virginia before the Senate. It will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 268), as follows:

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the Senate at the conference on the bill (H. R. 9054) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," be, and they are hereby, instructed to recede from the amendment of the Senate No. 44.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Virginia to what does amendment numbered 44 of the resolution apply?

Mr. MARTIN. It is the amendment proposing to fix the minimum price for wheat of $2.50 a bushel.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, Mr. President, I hope the resolution may be defeated.

Mr. MARTIN. The question is to get the resolution before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I am not going to enter into any discussion of the resolution. I want simply to say that the Agricultural appropriation bill went into conference on the 5th day of April and has been in conference since that time. The conferees on the part of the Senate, who will, of course, speak for themselves, assure me that it has got to a point where the Agricultural appropriation bill must be abandoned or the amendment proposing to fix the price of wheat must be abandoned; that the conferees have been in a deadlock since the 5th day of April; and that they have no sort of hope of reaching an agreement. Under those circumstances, it seems to me that public interests require that the Senate should recede from the amendment fixing the price of wheat. The parliamentary situation is such that I can not make a motion that the Senate recede because the House conferees would not unite in a report. The bill, therefore, is not before the Senate; and, while the Senate can not recede from its amendment, it can instruct its conferees in reference to it.

I offered this resolution in order to try to relieve the deadlock, so that the appropriations, which are urgently needed on the 1st day of July, may be permitted to be made.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia has correctly stated the situation as it exists so far as I understand it. It is true that this bill has been in conference since the 5th or 6th day of April and that it has been impossible for the conferees to agree. Without violating any confidence, I think I may state that the Senate conferees have made several propositions to the House conferees, but they have not felt that they could agree to any change whatever.

Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that it has been deemed necessary to take this action. Of course, I find no fault with the distinguished Senator from Virginia; he is doing the only thing that can be done in order that the bill may be passed. I personally think it ought to be passed.

However, I want to say that it is a mistake, and not only the Senate of the United States but the people of the United States will find that it is a mistake, to limit the price of wheat as proposed in the order which has been promulgated by the President of the United States. While it has been stated that the price of wheat would not be changed, we all know that it has been changed in a slight degree; that instructions have been given to the Food Administration that an increase of the price of wheat may be made to offset the increase in freight rates.

Mr. President, I ask, was that not a violation of the agreement? I may say, for the benefit of the Senate, that those who are opposed to the increase in the price of wheat predicate their opposition to it upon the fact that agreements have been made with foreign countries that the price shall remain as at present. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to reiterate what I have before said, that it is an injustice to the farmer. I believe, however, it goes deeper than that. I believe, sir, that it is an injustice to the people of the United States. I want to say to this body that right now, at a time when the American dollar is worth but a little more than 50 cents, it is hardly fair to say to people engaged in an industry which has never had the opportunity of getting prices for its product which have been unusually high, an industry which is pursued by people who can not by the very condition of things control prices, that no increase shall be allowed on their product.

That, however, does not concern me so much, Mr. President, as the fact that it is not only a possibility, but it is a probability that we shall be short of food. That is the most important consideration. Instead of enacting laws which will create conditions such as to make the balance of trade against us, at a time when—and I betray no confidence when I say this, for everybody who is acquainted with financial affairs must know it—at a time when the pound sterling is at a discount of 46 per cent, when it takes only 18 pesetas in Spain to buy a pound sterling, while in ordinary times it takes 26½ pesetas, we should adopt just the opposite policy. These burdens fall as heavily upon the farmer as upon any other class.

I shall not, however, oppose this motion. The Members of the Senate have overwhelmingly voted in favor of $2.50 per bushel as the price for wheat.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota if it would not be better for the other House to vote upon this question? I noticed that when the question was presented to the other House there were 127 votes for $2.50 wheat, 180 votes against it, and that there were 120 absentees. I think, in view of that vote, that those of us who are in favor of $2.50 wheat are entitled to a vote in the other House when there is somewhere near a full vote present.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Kansas, but unfortunately the parliamentary situation is that the Senate has the papers involved in the case, and the Senate will first have to vote. As has been suggested, I believe if the papers were sent back to the House the House would instruct its conferees at least to agree to a reasonable price. That is my belief.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to ask the Senator who made the motion, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], if he expects to dispose of this motion this afternoon; but he seems to be absent; so I will suggest, in his absence, that I do not think we can dispose of it to-day.

Mr. GRONNA. Well, Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate any longer. I know that every Senator is anxious to get through with the appropriation bills before we take a recess.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I suggest that, in view of the fact that two of the important appropriation bills have been vetoed, we need not be talking about a recess?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota a little further about the suggestion he makes with reference to increasing the price of wheat by reason of the advance in freight rates. As I understand, the maximum price now is $2.20.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes, at certain terminal points.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And have there been regulations promulgated which raise this figure?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes, sir. I will say to the Senator, as he of course knows, that freight rates have been increased all over the country.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There has been a general increase.

Mr. GRONNA. A general increase. That would, of course, affect the price of wheat; and the price to the farmer would be less than $2.20 or $2.17 or $2.15, or whatever it may be.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It would be the maximum price provided by law, less the increase in freight rates imposed by the regulations?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; and an order has been made giving authority to the food commissioner to increase the price to the amount——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Of the increased freight?

Mr. GRONNA. Of the increased freight.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota permit an interruption?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. Is not the $2.20 price, the price fixed by the price fixing committee for the 1917 crop, and did we not fix by statute a minimum price of $2 per bushel for the 1918 crop?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; that is true, Mr. President. The minimum price was fixed at $2; but I will say to the Senator that I think the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate are unanimously of the opinion that this price was supposed to be a minimum price, and not a maximum price. The Senator knows, however, that the price fixed by the price-fixing board or by the food commission has been made the maximum price. In fact, I think I ought to state that there are instances where men who are handling grain have been threatened with prosecution if they pay any more than the fixed price.

Mr. STERLING. Does the Senator now mean the price fixed by statute or the minimum price of $2.20, the price fixed by the price-fixing committee?

Mr. GRONNA. I mean the price fixed by the price-fixing committee.

Mr. STERLING. Very well. Now, I understood the Senator to say that an increase in the price had been authorized for the purpose of compensating for the higher freight rate.

Mr. GRONNA. I so understand.

Mr. STERLING. Are any figures given as to the increase? Has it been stated what the increase shall be?

Mr. GRONNA. No; I think not.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I may say that I received a letter from the department to the effect that the increase would be enough to meet the freight-rate changes.

Mr. GRONNA. That is as I understand it, but no certain figures have been given. The increase is simply sufficient to offset the increase in freight rates.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, freight rates from what point? From the point where the grain is loaded upon the cars or from the main terminal points?

Mr. CURTIS. I judge from the letter I received that it is from the place where the wheat is sold or delivered to the market place.

Mr. BORAH. That is, not as it was last year, at certain terminals?

Mr. CURTIS. No; at one of the central market places, of which there are 21.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that there are 21 of these terminal markets, and, of course, the freight would be adjusted to those 21 different markets to conform to the changes in freight rates.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator's view as to the price for the 1918 crop, which is almost due now. The fall wheat crop in the southern part of the United States is being harvested, or has been harvested already. The minimum price for the 1918 crop is now fixed by statute at $2.

Mr. GRONNA. That is correct.

Mr. STERLING. Has the Senator any information as to what will be authorized over and above that $2 minimum price?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that the President has issued his proclamation, or, in other words, the price-fixing board has fixed the price at $2.20, and the only change is that the prices have been set at the 21 different terminals, while last year everything was based upon the price at Chicago; and, then, with certain reductions at the other terminals of the country.

Mr. President, I do not care to further occupy the floor. I simply want to say that I regret exceedingly that we have to take this action. I believe it is unjust to the farmer, and I believe it will result detrimentally to the people of the country.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, what I am about to say will be a repetition of what I said a few moments ago; but I desire to emphasize the fact that there is nothing else for us to do than to take the action proposed in the resolution I have offered. The Senate conferees are present on the floor. I introduced the pending resolution after they told me that it was a question whether the bill should be lost or the amendment fixing the price of wheat should be lost; that it was absolutely impossible to reach an agreement; that they had struggled with the matter since the 5th day of April; and that they had not the slightest hope of coming to an agreement with the House. So the question now up to the Senate is, Shall the Agricultural appropriation bill fail or shall the Senate yield on the amendment fixing the price of wheat? That is the single question before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MARTIN. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor. I wish to take the floor in my own right.

Mr. MARTIN. I will yield in a second. That is a concise statement of the case.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN. Shall we have an appropriation bill for agricultural purposes or not? If you insist on the wheat amendment, you can not get this appropriation for the Agricultural Department of the Government. The conferees are on the floor, as I have said, and I have no doubt will express themselves. They expressed themselves in those words to me before I introduced the resolution, and I introduced it as a last resort, to save the appropriations for the Agricultural Department of the Government.

Now I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does the Senator feel the necessity of urging a conclusion of this matter this afternoon?

Mr. MARTIN. I feel that if it can ever be done it can be done now. I have stated the sole question involved, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. BORAH. There is a good deal more than that in it to those who are not on the floor of the Senate, and some of them have representatives here. So far as I am concerned, I want to know before this matter is disposed of what the program is with reference to fixing the price of wheat this year. I have seen a statement made and I have some letters from the department in regard to it. I have no desire, if the program should be a reasonable one, to interfere; but if there is not some definite and specific program outlined, so that we may know where we are and what we can depend upon, so far as I am concerned, I would prefer to see the Agricultural appropriation bill fail. I want to know definitely what the program is.

Mr. MARTIN. The program is that the Agricultural appropriation bill fails unless the Senate recedes on this amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I know that; but what is the program with reference to the price of wheat?

Mr. MARTIN. I know nothing about that; I am only dealing with the legislative matter that is before the Senate. I have no authority over any program.

Mr. BORAH. Some of us feel that we ought to know something about that.

Mr. MARTIN. Well, I do not know anybody who can advise the Senator. Congress will have to act for itself; I can not speak for it.

Mr. BORAH. I think there must be some one connected with the Agricultural Committee or with the conference committee who perhaps has some knowledge in regard to this matter.

Mr. MARTIN. They are here and can speak for themselves.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator is aware that the food-control bill, which became a law on the 10th of August, fixed a guaranteed price on wheat for the crop of 1918 at $2 per bushel. A number of Senators, including myself, and Representatives from the Western States, together with a number of farmers, had a conference with Mr. Hoover upon this subject. He expressed the opinion at that conference that the $2 price was a fixed price; that it was an absolute price; a maximum as well as a minimum price. I knew that it was not so intended by Congress, and I advised Mr. Hoover at the time of the conference that I would take steps to obtain an official interpretation of the act from the Attorney General as to whether the $2 price was a minimum price or was an absolute maximum price. I communicated with the Secretary of Agriculture, who, being the head of the department, had the right to call upon the Attorney General for an official opinion. I received a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, who evidently did not take the matter up with the Attorney General, but advised me that there could be no doubt that the price of $2 fixed in the law was subject to increase by the President. I ought to say, in passing, that he advised me that Mr. Hoover concurred with him in that opinion.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, did not the act itself provide that the price should not be less than $2?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CURTIS. That naturally would give the President the right to increase it beyond that minimum.

Mr. GORE. It was a guaranteed price of $2, and there was not any room, so far as I could see, for controversy upon the point. It was intended in both Houses and by everybody concerned to be a minimum price; and at the time it was enacted it was supposed that the law of supply and demand would be left to operate above that minimum price; and if the supply compared with the demand justified a price of $2.50 or $3, the farmers would be allowed to receive that price. I imagine that the contrary opinion never entered the mind of a single Senator or a single Member of the other House. It has worked out, however, to be an absolute price, a maximum price. While the law of supply and demand would have warranted a higher price, the farmer is not allowed to receive a higher price. So I introduced the amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill the day after this conference with Mr. Hoover, raising the price to $2.50 and also lowering the grade from No. 1, an ideal grade, to No. 2, an actual grade. The Senate, I think, with great wisdom and with an appreciation of its public duty, adopted that amendment by an overwhelming vote. It testified not only to its own high sense of duty but to its solicitude and regard for the welfare of the farmers of this country. I wish to say, in passing, that no legislative body in this country or in any other has testified a higher respect or a sounder appreciation of the agricultural needs of the country than the Senate of the United States.

Soon after the agitation for the $2.50 wheat was instituted, the President issued a proclamation advancing the price for this year's crop from $2 to $2.20 at Chicago. At Oklahoma City, I believe, it is $2.05. It varies at the different terminal markets throughout the country.

I saw in the public prints a few days since that it had been determined to grant a further increase on account of recent advances in freight rates. The promised advance is to cover the recent increase in freight rates. It will not insure a larger net return to the farmer than he received under the previous proclamation of the President.

I may say that I have here now a letter from one of my constituents advising me that the council of defense for his county has increased the wages for harvest hands $1 as against the wages paid last season, and that the council of defense for his county has advanced the price for thrashing wheat 3 cents a bushel. It seems that everybody, from a county council of defense up to Mr. Hoover, has jurisdiction over the farmer, and is able to raise wages and to raise his expense account and revise his cost sheet upward. I think that only justifies the wisdom of the Senate when it undertook to increase the price that the farmer should receive to cover increased and increasing expenses.

The Senate suspended its rules by a two-thirds majority, and adopted this amendment by a vote of 49 to 18. For that reason the conferees of the Senate have felt doubly bound not to recede from the amendment. We were acting merely as delegates, and our instructions were so solemn and so exceptional that we did not feel warranted in abandoning or disregarding those instructions. For that reason the Senate conferees have not consented and, I may say, will not consent without express direction on the part of the Senate, to recede from this amendment; and I am one of the majority who maintain that position.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GORE. I yield; yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Where are the papers in this matter?

Mr. GORE. The papers belong to the Senate conferees.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Are the papers here?

Mr. GORE. If they are not they will be here presently.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This attempt to have the Senate recede before the House has acted is, in my opinion, to assume that the House of Representatives would desire us to do so.

Mr. GORE. I think possibly the Senator misunderstands the parliamentary situation. The House of Representatives asked for the conference, which, of course, entitled the Senate to the papers; and the House having the papers, of course has to act first. The papers are, therefore in the hands of the Senate conferees, at least constructively, and the Senate must act in advance of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. I should like to see the Senate insist upon the $2.50 price and insist upon it until the snow flies and insist upon it until the House accedes to it; but if the Senate does not feel justified in insisting on so high a price as two dollars and a half per bushel, then I think the Senate ought to instruct its conferees to agree to a somewhat lower figure, say $2.40, and let the House take a vote on that proposition. I believe that if the House will not accede to $2.40 it will accede to some figure in that vicinity.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator permit another interruption?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I sincerely hope that the Senator will make the motion that he has just indicated his desire to make, and we can very soon test the sentiment of the Senate upon that motion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to ask the Senator why the conferees have not reported a disagreement?

Mr. GORE. The conferees reported one disagreement when they reported an agreement on the other amendments, and the Senate in effect insisted upon this amendment and sent it back and asked for another conference.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But if a disagreement should be reported now, then there would be a way opened through which the House would have an opportunity to vote.

Mr. GORE. The trouble is, I will say to the Senator, that the Senate would have to act first.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true. We would simply disagree and appoint conferees.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I think the Senator is mistaken. If the Senate decides to insist upon its amendment and the matter goes back to the House of Representatives, then it is for them to act.

Mr. GORE. The Senator is right about that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And I think we should put that situation before them.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to do it and follow the leadership of the Senator from Oklahoma on that question.

Mr. GORE. I did not understand the Senator's proposition. In my judgment he is correct in that. If the Senate should instruct its conferees to insist further upon this amendment, my judgment, offhand, is that the parliamentary status is that that would refer the question back to the House. On that point I am not certain. I will look into it, but I believe I have nothing further to say at this time. The price for the current crop now being harvested is $2.20, with a promised increase to cover the recent increase in freight rates.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that is the point upon which I am trying to secure information. The Senator says "with a promised increase."

Mr. GORE. The promised increase will be, I suppose, 4 or 5 cents.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator had any statement from any official source as to the proposition that it would be increased; and if so, how much?

Mr. GORE. I have not. My only information is based upon a statement in the newspapers, I think last Sunday, and as to the amount of the increase I do not know, further than that it was to be measured by the increase in freight rates, which I assume to be 4 or 5 cents a bushel.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is assumed, is it not, simply to cover the advance in freight rates, and nothing else?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCUMBER. And that probably would average about 5 cents a bushel throughout the United States.

Mr. GORE. The net return to the farmer would not be increased. I will say that I think the representatives of another body would not have consented even to that increase unless other authorities had signified a willingness, and even then they did not agree to it, but those who fixed the price at $2.20 now admit that that price ought to be increased, and yet the Congress of the United States seems to be unwilling to discharge its duty and appropriate to itself what little credit might come from discharging its duty.

Mr. McCUMBER. The question I wanted to ask the Senator was this: The price was fixed at $2.20 per bushel through the Food Administration and by the President something over a year ago, was it not?

Mr. GORE. No, sir; not for the current year.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I know; but the time when it was fixed at $2.20 a bushel was over a year ago, was it not?

Mr. GORE. It was the last week of August or the first week of September.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but I am considering the time when it was fixed. Has the Senator any information as to how much more it costs to produce a bushel of wheat to-day than it did then, with the present rate of wages and the present higher cost of everything that goes into the raising of grain?

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that we had extended hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on that subject, and the testimony was uniform and unanimous that the cost of production was greatly increased this season as against last season. One would assume that the increased cost of production this year as against last year would have justified and necessitated a larger price for the current crop than for the crop of last season, but that does not seem to have convinced the judgment of those who had this matter in hand.

Mr. McCUMBER. Has not farm labor, and has not twine, and has not machinery and everything else increased fully 25 per cent since then?

Mr. GORE. Twine has increased perhaps 50 per cent; farm labor has increased perhaps 50 per cent; farm machinery has increased 50 to 100 per cent; and the farmer not only has to pay higher wages this year than last year, but he can not get the labor at any wages.

Mr. McCUMBER. And yet they propose not to allow any real increase in the farmer's price after you have considered the matter of freight.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; and subtracting the cost of production from the $2.20 this year and last year leaves a much larger return for the farmer last year than this year.

Mr. McCUMBER. It seems to me, then, Mr. President, that if we are right upon this proposition, the responsibility for defeating this legislation ought to be upon the body which is in the wrong, and not upon the Senate.

Mr. GORE. I think so. I entirely agree with the Senator. I do not think the Senate ought to adopt the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. GORE. I do; certainly.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask how long this bill has been held in conference?

Mr. GORE. I think since the 4th of April—the 4th or 6th.

Mr. REED. I want to ask, further, if the statement has not been freely made that it was proposed to hold it in conference until the spring planting was over?

Mr. GORE. There have been those of us who feared that from the beginning. There were two grounds upon which Senators acted when they voted for $2.50 wheat. One was to encourage the sowing of a large acreage of spring wheat, which was a sufficient reason, and which was a reason of sufficient public importance to justify the votes of those who voted for the amendment. There were others who voted for the $2.50 amendment because it was an act of common justice. The farmer had been forced to take less for his product than it was worth. It was qualified, although unjustified, confiscation. In so far as the farmer was obliged to take less for his wheat than it was worth, it was nothing more nor less than confiscation, no matter what sweet title may be applied to the transaction. There were Senators who voted for the amendment because it was an act of common justice, and because until the prices of all products should be regulated the farmers ought not to be segregated and treated differently and treated worse than any other class of our citizens.

I believe the President, in his message last December, declared that the farmers complained, not without justice, that they were obliged to sell in a regulated market, and to buy in an unregulated market. That of course did not furnish the ground upon which Senators acted, but it was in confirmation of the conclusion which we had independently arrived at; and there can be no justification for isolating the farmer. When it is admitted that food is essential to the winning of this war, and that of all foodstuffs wheat is the primary and paramount article, why it should be treated differently and treated worse than any other single product or commodity in the United States can receive no explanation that is either intelligent or just. But it has been segregated; the farmers have been isolated as a class, treated differently and treated worse than any other class; and of all the farmers the wheat producers have been isolated and treated differently and treated worse than any other class.

I shall not insult the patriotism of the farmers of this country by defending them. They are as patriotic as any other class of our citizenship. They are willing to bear any burden that may be necessary. They are willing to make any sacrifice that may be necessary to maintain our Army and our Navy and to carry our arms to triumph. They only ask, Mr. President, and they have a right to ask, that the burdens and sacrifices shall be fairly apportioned as between themselves and their fellow citizens. If that be done, the farmers will be the last to complain.

I am glad that the Senate sought to do that. The Senate is entitled to commendation for its public service and for its regard for the welfare of the farmers, who must feed our civilian population and must feed the armies of this country and of our allies. We did our duty. I hope the necessity has not arisen for reversing that action.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12441) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 86) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Aurelio Collazo, a citizen of Cuba, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia temporarily to lay aside the pending resolution in order that I may have an opportunity to report the fortifications appropriation bill and ask for its consideration. I think the bill will take only a short time, and it is a very important supply bill.

Mr. MARTIN. I am perfectly willing to have that course taken, and I ask unanimous consent that the pending resolution be laid aside temporarily, without losing its place, to enable the Senator from Alabama to dispose of the appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 12541) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

and I submit a report (No. 532) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12541) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand that a bond bill will be presented to-day or on Monday, and before that bill is presented I wish to take about 10 minutes of the time of the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will yield for a moment, I desire to ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the Committee to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in this contest we have no right to take anything for granted, for we are in a war that will likely require the exertion of all our powers, great as they are, and may cause the imposition of war taxes which will be exceedingly hard to bear.

The strength, the power, the position, the methods, and the ample preparedness of the enemy make it necessary for us to prepare for a war of the greatest magnitude, and make it essential for us to conserve our foodstuffs, economize in our every expenditure, and save in every way possible.

The most difficult problem with which we are confronted to-day is that of devising the best plan for raising the funds with which to carry on the present great war. In order to raise the money needed for that purpose we should formulate a systematic plan or program of taxation and bond issue. Before a definite plan or program is adopted a careful study should be made of our vast resources, our enormous business transactions, the income of our people, the use of luxuries, the importation of goods that compete with the products of American factories, farms, and labor, and the large war profits of our business concerns.

A mistake at this time might disarrange our currency, injure our credit, and greatly cripple business, while the adoption of a sound revenue program will enable the Government to raise all the funds that may be needed without disturbing confidence or in any way interrupting business. A carefully considered plan will enable Congress to place the burdens where they can most easily be borne, and in that way treat all our people with perfect fairness.

We will be wise, indeed, in view of the vast sums to be raised for our own use and to be loaned to our allies if we resort to both taxation and bond issues. The important question to be settled is what part of the funds needed shall be raised by taxation and what part shall be obtained from the sale of bonds. The proper solution of this question will require the very best there is in us. The proportion to be raised from each should be determined after a most careful consideration of the subject; and we must not forget that there is but a small, if any, foreign market in which our securities, no matter how good, may be sold.

Mr. President, I think we should raise of the needed funds as large a part as possible by taxation. In a speech on the revenue bill delivered in the Senate on August 17, 1917, I took the position that—

> The expenses of the war, so far as possible, should be paid by those making large profits out of war contracts, those who have large incomes, and those who enjoy luxuries which only the rich can afford.

On the 7th of May, 1918, the President addressed the Congress, and I quote the following from his speech:

> We shall naturally turn, therefore, I suppose to war profits and incomes and luxuries for the additional taxes.

I am glad the President has taken the position that some of us suggested in August, 1917. I hope the Committee on Finance may give this question of raising revenue most careful consideration, and that a bill may be reported which will contain provisions that will be easily understood by all and under which the forms for tax returns may be greatly simplified.

I agree with the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that we should have a genuine war-profits tax. The tax levied in the revenue measures heretofore enacted by Congress falls upon all earnings above 9 per cent on the actual investment, irrespective of whether the war has increased or decreased profits. The British war tax falls exclusively upon profits due to the war, and is assessed upon earnings, large or small, over and above those of normal times.

Under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the existing revenue acts, a tax as high as 80 per cent is imposed upon war profits, and the collection of this amount would not impose one cent additional tax on the average amount of profits earned by any company during the five years preceding the war.

If more revenue is needed than can fairly and justly be raised from war profits, big incomes, and luxuries, why not increase the duties on imports? Great Britain's receipts from customs duties during the first fiscal year of her participation in the war totaled $188,000,000; in 1918 they amounted to $346,000,000; while the estimate for 1919 is $460,000,000. Receipts of the United States from customs revenues during our first full fiscal year of war totaled $180,000,000; they will be considerably less in 1919 under the present rates of duty. The average rate of duty on all imports under the present law is 6 per cent, while under the act of 1909 it was 18 per cent. Had the 1918 imports—$3,000,000,000 in value—paid the average rate of the act of 1909, our Treasury would have realized $540,000,000. Under the Democratic law about 75 per cent of imports come in free of duty. With a material increase in the rates of duty on ordinary imports and a large increase on imported luxuries, at least $1,000,000,000 annually could be raised from a source which now pays into the Treasury about one-sixth that sum. An increase of duties on imports would not only add to our revenues but it would enable our producers to prepare for the competition that is bound to come when this great world war is over.

It is not my purpose at this time to discuss any questions that may be raised by the proposed revenue measure, but to express the hope that it may be reported soon—the sooner the better. I can assure those on the majority side that we on the Republican side have been in favor of disposing of all war measures as soon as possible after they have been presented to the Senate, and we have opposed any unnecessary delay. When it was first suggested that additional revenue must be raised, we on the Republican side expressed our willingness to take the question up at once and dispose of it. We had then, and we have now, no desire to delay action. All we ask is that the measure be so drawn as to treat all our people fairly, and that the burdens be placed on those who can most easily bear them.

We on the Republican side have raised no political issues in matters pertaining to the war, and we have no intention of doing so. We are ready and willing to vote for any legislation which may be needed to bring the war to an early and successful conclusion, and we are ready and willing to do whatever may be required to win a decisive victory for humanity and civilization. We on this side of the Chamber have realized from the first that legislation must be enacted which would enable us to win the war in the quickest and the most efficient manner possible, and that this could only be done by supporting the measures recommended by the Government intended to bring about the desired results.

We on the Republican side, as well as you on the Democratic side, have stood, and will continue to stand, by our Government. We Republicans cite the votes cast on war measures as the best evidence of our attitude; and we insist that the votes show conclusively that on measures pertaining to the war party lines have not been drawn.

A few weeks ago I called to the attention of the Senate the record of the vote on war measures from the date when we were drawn into this great world conflict—April 6, 1917—to the 10th of September, 1917. That record showed that of the votes cast on the Republican side a little over 76 per cent were in favor of the war measures voted upon in the Senate, while of the votes cast on the Democratic side a little less than 75 per cent were in favor of such measures.

I have examined the record on 51 roll calls on war measures in the Senate between April 6, 1917—the date when it was declared that a state of war existed—and the 20th day of May, 1918; and I find that of the votes cast by Republicans 72 per cent have been in favor of such measures, while only 67 per cent of the votes cast on the Democratic side were in favor of such measures. We are justly proud of the record made by the Members on the Republican side.

We appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, the sum of $21,000,000,000—$19,000,000,000 direct appropriations and $2,000,000,000 authorizations—and the estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, will amount to $24,000,000,000. Additional estimates are coming in, and the amounts required for the fiscal year 1919 may reach $30,000,000,000. The vast sum appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, has been met without a murmur, and that needed for the next year will be met in the same spirit; but the people at home are still asking to be taken into the full confidence of those who are to expend these vast sums. Those who pay the taxes desire to know how the money is being expended. They are also anxious to know why the expenses of our Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, will cost our people over $24,000,000,000, while the expenses for war purposes for the last three years has cost Great Britain only $40,000,000,000, and it is estimated that her expenditures for the year 1919 will amount to about $14,000,000,000.

Our people want the Congress to appropriate every dollar that may be needed to help win the war, but they ask to be assured that there will be the greatest economy in the expenditures and that no favoritism will be shown to one section of the country over another section. They ask more, and that is that all graft shall be eliminated from every war contract and that the grafters shall be apprehended and prosecuted to the fullest extent. They also demand that profiteering shall be done away with and that those who are engaged in that pernicious practice shall be punished to the full extent of the law heretofore enacted by Congress. They further ask that the red tape shall be cut out wherever it is found and that everything needed to win the war shall be done as speedily as possible.

In a speech delivered in the Senate on September 25, 1917, the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and floor leader on the Democratic side, used the following language:

It has not been six months since Congress declared war on Germany. The resolution declaring war passed on the 6th day of April. Since that time, speaking from memory, in a general way, I believe Congress has appropriated about $20,000,000,000. Twenty billion dollars have been appropriated in about five months for the prosecution of the war. No such outlay has been made by the European countries whose very life is involved in the struggle. We have appropriated and expended money with an extravagance, or at least with a liberality, that is unknown to our allies in Europe.

It is appalling to me to see the freedom with which money is being called for by our administrative departments and is being appropriated by Congress. This bill came here from the House, and it had not been here more than three days before we received over $400,000,000 of additional estimates that had not even been presented to the House. Although the House had passed the bill carrying over $7,000,000,000, I say, in less than three days we received estimates for over $400,000,000 in addition; and I do not think I hazard anything when I say there has not been a day from that time down to this moment when additional estimates have not come to us from the administrative departments of the Government.

Mr. President, I am willing to consider all the estimates, and I am determined, so far as my vote goes, to appropriate every dollar that is necessary; but the time has come for us to scrutinize most closely the extravagant—I am almost tempted to say the reckless—estimates that are pouring in on us from the administrative departments of the Government.

I quote this language because it comes from a Senator who should, and does, know what he is talking about. The fact that he is surprised at the large estimates sent in by the heads of the departments is full justification for the taxpayers asking to be informed.

Mr. President, the national response to the call of the country has been magnificent. We are proud of the young men who have offered their all to the cause of their country. We are proud of the loyal men and women who are doing everything they can to help win the war. This war must be, and it will be, won.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12541) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Fortifications and other works of defense," subhead "Engineer Department," on page 2, line 10, after the word "fortifications," to insert "for purchase and installation of searchlights for seacoast defenses, including searchlights for antiaircraft defenses and accessories therefor," so as to make the clause read:

The unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for "installation and replacement of electric-light and power plants at seacoast fortifications," for "purchase and installation of searchlights for seacoast defenses, including searchlights for antiaircraft defenses and accessories therefor," and for "purchase and installation of searchlights for seacoast defenses" in the United States are consolidated and made available for the following purposes: For the installation and replacement of electric-light and power plants at seacoast fortifications in the United States; the purchase and installation of searchlights for seacoast defenses in the United States, including searchlights for antiaircraft defenses and accessories therefor; and the procurement and installation of sound-ranging equipment for use in the United States, the insular possessions, and the Panama Canal, and for salaries of electrical experts, engineers, and other employees necessary to procure and install the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Armament of fortifications," on page 6, line 21, before the word "for," to strike out "$1,995,000" and insert "$1,900,000"; in line 23, after the words "and so forth," to strike out "$400,000 for contingent expenses incident to the construction of seacoast fortifications and their accessories"; and on page 7, line 4, after the words "in all," to strike out "$10,159,540.19" and insert "$9,664,540.19," so as to make the clause read:

The following portions of the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for fortifications in the continental United States, respectively, shall be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury, namely, $2,000,000 for construction of gun and mortar batteries; $20,540.19 for procurement or reclamation of land, or rights pertaining thereto, etc.; $1,900,000 for the construction of land defenses in the United States, etc.; $3,744,000 for purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon for coast defense, etc.; and $2,000,000 for the alteration and maintenance of seacoast artillery, etc.; in all, $9,664,540.19.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Proving grounds," on page 7, line 19, after the date "1917," to strike out "$6,300,000" and insert "$8,480,000," so as to make the clause read:

Proving grounds: For additional for increasing facilities for the proof and test of ordnance matériel, including the same objects, and under the same authority and conditions, specified in the appropriation for this purpose in the deficiency appropriation act approved October 6, 1917, $8,480,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, before we vote on this amendment which raises the amount for proving grounds from $6,300,000 to $8,480,000, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if under this item is to be defrayed the cost of purchase of Mulberry Island, on the James River, or whether that island has already been purchased?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not understand that this item includes the purchase of Mulberry Island. The Acting Chief of Ordnance states that the funds requested are needed for additional facilities at the Aberdeen Proving Grounds to enable his department to do promptly the proof and experimental work which is necessary, and that it is essential that the work should be completed before winter in order that the proof of ammunition material may be carried on in increased volume during the period of next spring. I do not understand that this additional amount is for land, but for actual tests.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was not certain myself. I am somewhat familiar with the Aberdeen Proving Grounds, having recently visited them, and I am somewhat familiar with the Mulberry Island Proving Grounds, or artillery range, as it is called, having visited that tract of land. Does the Senator know under what appropriation the Mulberry Island purchase was made?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not. I am not advised as to that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not criticizing the site as such. It seems to me a very available one; but I think it would be well worth the while of the committee which has in charge appropriations for the payment for the site, if it has not already been paid for, to look into the amount of money that is to be paid for it per acre.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. So far as the testimony before the committee is concerned, the Mulberry Island site was not brought before us. Although this item does not specify, my understanding from the testimony that came before the committee is that it is not involved in this appropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not in this bill at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not that I know of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Fortifications in insular possessions," subhead "Engineer Department," on page 8, after line 11, to strike out:

For purchase and installation of searchlights for the defenses of most important harbors in the Hawaiian Islands, $10,000.

And insert:

For purchase and installation of searchlights for the defenses of most important harbors, at the following localities:
In the Hawaiian Islands, $20,000;
In the Philippine Islands, $33,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 9, to insert:

For installation and replacement of electric light and power plants at the defenses of the Hawaiian Islands, $17,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 9, to insert:

For the construction of an engineer wharf at Honolulu, Hawaii, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Panama Canal fortifications," on page 11, line 3, after the word "batteries," to strike out "$210,000" and insert "$553,700," so as to make the clause read:

For the construction of seacoast batteries, $553,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 6, to insert:

For the purchase or reclamation of land required for the defense of the Panama Canal, $155,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 15, to insert:

For the construction of fire-control stations and the purchase and installation of accessories therefor, $345,888.85.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 16, to insert:

UNDER THE DIRECTOR OF MILITARY AERONAUTICS.

For the establishment of one aviation station, a supply depot, and a repair depot in connection with the defenses of the Panama Canal Zone, including buildings, heating, lighting, plumbing, water, sewers, roads, and walks, $1,000,000: Provided, That the construction of buildings hereunder shall be under the direction of the Governor of the Panama Canal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 26, after the words "Panama Canal," to strike out "$1,527,900" and insert "$3,372,488.85," so as to make the clause read:

In all, specifically for fortifications and armament thereof for the Panama Canal, $3,372,488.85.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that the report, which is very short, may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12541) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, reports the same to the Senate with amendments, and presents herewith information relating thereto:

The House bill contains contract authorizations amounting to $2,623,465,845 concerning which the Senate committee recommend no change.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if he will point out the item in the bill under which some 6-inch guns, which prior to this time had been discarded by the Navy, are to be repurchased by the Government; and I will state to him, in that connection, that I notice that there was a colloquy in the other House on that point and the name of a Mr. Bannerman was brought into the discussion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know that a question has been raised in regard to the repurchase of those guns, but the question does not in any way relate to the amendments offered by the Senate committee. My understanding is that it comes in a paragraph on page 6, for alteration and maintenance of the mobile artillery.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, perhaps for the purpose of what I desire to do it is not necessary to locate the exact item. I do not intend to delay the Senate in the consideration of the bill nor to criticize the item, whichever it may be, under which these 6-inch guns are being purchased. The story that has come to me of the predicament and experiences of Mr. Bannerman is such a strange mixture of tragedy and farce comedy that I could not refrain from bringing it to the attention of the Senate. I shall not do so at this time at length.

Senators who have traveled up the Hudson River on the New York Central Railway may have noticed that in that stream, as I remember, not far from Iona Island, which is the naval magazine, there is another and smaller island, covered in large part by large stone buildings built in the semblance of arsenals and magazines, known as Bannerman's Arsenal. This gentleman, who is a Scotchman by birth, came to this country when he was 3 years old, and has been for many, many years in the business of purchasing second-hand military equipment and selling it to rifle clubs, home-defense leagues, and, with the permission of the United States Government, from time to time to foreign governments.

According to the information that reached me, he purchased from the Navy Department some guns that had been discarded. The information that comes to me is that he protested against the sale of those guns, but was informed back in 1912 or 1913, when the purchase took place, that the Navy Department did not need them. It turns out now that they are valuable guns, perhaps of limited value, but nevertheless plenty good enough to be used, and the Army has proposed to purchase them, and the unfortunate Mr. Bannerman has been charged in the other House with profiteering.

He was charged, furthermore, with attempting to get from the Government a price of $15,000 apiece for these guns. The fact is, as shown by the correspondence, that he has asked $5,000 apiece for the guns; for those of the guns that are unmounted exactly the same price that was offered to him by the Cuban Government this calendar year, and for the guns for which he has manufactured some mobile steel mounts he is asking $7,500 apiece. He is in receipt of a letter from the Ordnance Department accepting his prices and stating that they were entirely satisfactory. I think this should be said in his defense and in explanation, for he has been charged not only upon the floor of another House but in the New York newspapers of gross profiteering.

Now, Mr. President, what to my mind appears to be the farce-comedy side of this situation is that the War Department to-day has 24 soldiers occupying this man's island in the Hudson River, having seized his entire property, including his house, on the theory or some kind of a supposition that he is a dangerous character. They have possessed the place for two months and a half, and passengers upon steamers going up and down the Hudson and upon the New York Central Railroad, which runs within close view of this island, wonder by the thousand if Mr. Bannerman is an enemy to his country and a traitor. My information is that for two and a half months he has made steady inquiry here at Washington to ascertain, if possible, why his property has been seized and is thus guarded. He has received a letter from the Attorney General of the United States in which that official states that there is no charge or suspicion of disloyalty against him. He has received a letter from the Secretary of the Navy to the same effect.

It might be well to state, Mr. President, that the first time an organized military raid was made upon this man's property it was carried out by a boatload of sailors approaching the property in a scout patrol and 14 men and 4 officers were landed, magazines broken into, samples taken that were stored there, although Mr. Bannerman was not there at the time and although his employees, who incidentally had been made deputy sheriffs in the county of Dutchess, State of New York, asked the officer in charge of the landing party or the scouting party to wait until Mr. Bannerman could give them the keys to the magazine.

The combination of the two things, Mr. President, has done this man, in my humble judgment and if my information is anywhere near complete, a very grave injustice. On the one side he stands in the position of a suspected character and on the other phase of it he is suspected of attempting to profiteer. There are many phases of this case which the Senate has not the time to listen to, but they are intensely interesting and in part amusing.

I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a letter addressed by Mr. Bannerman to Hon. EDMUND PLATT, a Member of the House of Representatives from that district, which reached Mr. PLATT too late to be of service at the time a colloquy occurred in the House of Representatives the other day. I ask leave to make this a part of my remarks in order that this man may have an opportunity to present his case in such a way that Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives will read it. I may say that I am not acquainted with him, and I know nothing other than the information contained in this document, which I recommend to Senators as most interesting reading.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, June 26, 1918.

Hon. EDMUND PLATT,
Congressman Twenty-sixth New York District,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: My attention was called yesterday to a sensational article in the New York World in which I was accused of attempted profiteering in the sale of cannon to the United States Government. The accusation was based upon statements claimed to have been made on the preceding day by Representative BORLAND, of Missouri, in the House of Representatives. According to these statements, I was represented as having demanded from the Government $15,000 apiece for thirty 6-inch cannon of obsolete type and worth not over $5,000 or $6,000 apiece, and which I had purchased for a trifling amount four or five years ago from the United States Navy. It was said that Mr. BORLAND described the transaction as "the boldest piece of effrontery that had ever come to his attention since he had been a Member of Congress."

As these statements are entirely without foundation, and as the effect of their utterance and publication has been to hold me up to public scorn and contempt, not only in the Halls of Congress but in the city of New York where I am in business, I am writing to you to lay before you certain facts in connection with this matter and to ask you to take such steps as you may think proper to right the wrong that has been done me.

The price at which I offered these guns to the Government was not $15,000 apiece but $5,000 apiece for the unmounted guns and $7,500 apiece for the mounted guns with carriages. These were the prices at which these guns have been held by me for years past, the prices at which they were listed in my printed catalogue, the prices at which they were offered to public and private purchasers, and the prices which the Cuban Republic has offered for them and is still willing to pay for them. As shown by the full transcript of Representative BORLAND'S speech contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the price for the unmounted guns is exactly the same as the price which the Navy Department is now charging the Army Department for guns of the same character. The guns could not be manufactured or produced to-day for twice the amount that I asked for them. As far back as April, 1914, the American & British Manufacturing Co., of Bridgeport, Conn., quoted me $5,500 apiece for cannon of one-half the caliber and of about one-fifth the weight of these guns. (See annexed letter A.) Over 10 years ago I had occasion to buy from the Bethlehem Steel Co. a used gun which was exactly similar to the guns in question, and I had to pay $6,000 for it. A new gun at that time would have cost about $11,000.

Of the 30 guns which the Government proposed purchasing from me, 18 (price $5,000) were unmounted. The remaining 12 were mounted on pedestal mounts and weighed, with carriages, about 10 tons apiece. My price for these was $7,500, allowing $2,500 for the carriages. These carriages could not be produced to-day, in my opinion, for less than $10,000 apiece.

The guns are all in excellent condition and very little used. The 12 mounted guns had been altered up to the model of 1912 at the Washington Gun Factory, and had accompanying them breech blocks and sights still in their original boxes.

It is not true that these guns were all purchased by me from the Navy Department. Only 12 of the guns were purchased from the Navy Department by me. The rest of them were purchased from dealers who outbid me at the Navy auction sales. It is true, however, that they were purchased for a comparatively small amount. It is also probably true that they should never have been sold at all, even though they were obsolete for Navy uses. They should have been retained by the Government for use on land defenses. But such was not the policy of those in charge of the Government in 1912 and 1913. I know this, because at the time I attended the first sale in 1912 (when the unmounted guns were offered) I protested as a citizen to the officer in charge against the scrapping and sale of such good guns. The only result of my protest was that I was told that the Government considered its investment in guns as a form of insurance, and that it did not believe in retaining guns of obsolete pattern. But if the administration of 1912 pursued a mistaken policy in this connection is it fair to hold me responsible for it? I was not a member of the administration and never have been. I had nothing to do with the holding of this sale, except that I received a printed notice of the sale, attended it with others, protested against the sale, and was a successful bidder on 12 of the guns. I have no doubt that it was supposed that I would scrap these guns for the metal that was in them. In fact, Army and Navy officers have repeatedly ridiculed me for what they believed to be my stupidity in saving the guns from the melting pot and holding them for sale. This I did, however, and have preserved the guns for use at the present time. This has cost me a large amount of money. I was obliged to transport these guns, weighing over 200 tons, by freight and lighter to my arsenal at Polopel's Island in the Hudson River. Here I was obliged to build a cement dock, at an expense of several thousand dollars, on which to store the heavier guns, and I was also put to no little expense in replacing various parts that were missing. Having assumed the hazards of this venture and held these guns for the past four or five years, am I now to be branded as a profiteer because I have offered them to the Government at a price at which they are readily salable in any market and at which a customer is now waiting to take them?

On June 11, 1918, Col. Golderman, a member of the United States Army, engaged in assisting the Cuban Republic in its purchase of munitions in this country for Cuban defense, wired me as follows:

"Refer extended option 3d instant. Will take Navy guns for Cuban Government if release can be obtained. Acknowledge by mail." (See annexed telegram marked B.)

A few days before this, however—June 7, 1918—our Government had decided not to release these guns to Cuba, but to purchase them for its own use, and wrote me a letter (see annexed letter marked C) containing the following:

"1. I am instructed by the Acting Chief of Ordnance to acknowledge your letter of June 3 informing us of the present situation pertaining to the 6-inch, 30-caliber Navy gun, which are desired both by ourselves and the Cuban Government, as represented by Col. P. S. Golderman.

"2. Col. Golderman presented his case to the Chief of Staff, and the Chief of Staff has ruled that the guns shall come to the United States Government. We are, therefore, writing you to start our final negotiations. You are herewith advised definitely that we will purchase these guns from you. We accept your proposal of $5,000 each for 18 guns and $7,500 each for 12 guns, the latter including pedestal mounts."

Believing that this amounted to a sale of these guns to my own Government, and wishing to deal more generously with them than I would have been willing to do with the Cuban Government, I determined to make a gift to my Government of one of these guns with $20,000 in cash for the purpose of mounting it on modern field carriage, and under date of June 12 I wrote Maj. Gen. William Crozier, Chief of Ordnance of the United States Army, as follows (see annexed copy of letter marked D):

"MY DEAR GENERAL: I have just concluded negotiations with the Army Procurement Division for the purchase of thirty 6-inch B/1 Navy cannons, and now write to know if you can arrange it so that I could give one of these 6-inch guns as a free gift to my country, together with my check for $20,000 toward paying for the cost of mounting gun on modern field carriage.

"I have in the past three years helped our British allies, and would dearly love to be represented on the French battle front with a 'Bannerman gun.' During the war for independence many such gifts to the Government were gladly accepted."

Gen. Crozier's reply to me was as follows (see annexed letter marked "E"):

"I have your note of June 12, in which you speak of your wish to give a 6-inch gun to the Government, together with funds for procuring a suitable field mounting for it.

"As I am not now in charge of the Ordnance Department, having been assigned to duty with the War Council, I am referring your letter to Brig. Gen. C. C. Williams, Acting Chief of Ordnance, to whose office the matter pertains.

"There have been a few instances in the past where patriotic citizens have made gifts of arms to the Government, a comparatively recent one was that of the Astor Battery in the Spanish War. I have no doubt, therefore, that if the technical matters connected with the use of the gun can be arranged by the Ordnance Department, a way can be found to take advantage of your generous offer."

Less than a fortnight later, as a reward for this action on my part, I find myself pilloried in the public press as attempting to sell these guns to the Government at $15,000 apiece. I find my name hawked and blown about the streets as that of a greedy profiteer, indifferent to my country and its cause.

Whether my career since the commencement of the European war has been indicative of greed and indifference to our cause may be judged from the following facts. Documentary proof of certain of these facts is also herewith submitted:

I am a native of Scotland, having come to this country as a small boy in company with my parents. My father fought for the Union in the Civil War, and died a few years after the end of the war as a result of injuries received in his country's service. He refused the United States bounty awarded him, and never accepted a pension.

When the European war broke out I found myself unable to preserve that degree of neutrality in mind and act, which was considered the officially proper attitude of American citizens at that time. I believed in the integrity of the allies and in the justice of their cause as strongly at that time as I do to-day. I saw the country of my birth in an unprepared and comparatively defenseless condition hurled into a struggle against overwhelming odds in which she was threatened with annihilation. As the Germans were advancing steadily and unchecked toward Paris, in a moment of impulse I wrote a letter to Lord Kitchener, offering the British Government as a free gift my entire stock of military supplies, representing my accumulations and savings of over 40 years. A copy of my letter to Lord Kitchener is annexed hereto marked "F," and is in part as follows:

"As a native of Scotland, now a naturalized American citizen, but heart and soul loyal to the British in their struggle for humanity, I hereby offer gratuitously, without money, any or all of my stock that you can use, and will be pleased to place material selected on shipboard at New York, as your agents may direct. My proposition must be kept secret for the present, at any rate, in order not to defeat the end desired. * * * In addition to the list inclosed I have 12 United States Navy 6-inch breech loading cannon, mounted on late type Navy stand revolving carriage, which the Dominion of Canada's representative was interested in. This offer is like the widow's mite, my all, my living, in the hope that it will help to stop the German butchers and aid my native country and the land of my adoption."

Fortunately for me and my family there was a law in England, of which I was not aware, prohibiting the acceptance by the British Government of gifts from other than citizens of Great Britain. As a result of this my offer was courteously declined by the British Government.

On December 17, 1914, after German warships had shelled Hartlepool and killed many innocent people, and when a national guard was being formed for home defense, I cabled and wrote to the Lord Mayor of London, offering "as a free gift from an American Scotchman" to fit out 1,000 Scotch National Guardsmen with military supplies, including the following: One thousand hats, shirts, blouse coats, khaki breeches, wool blankets, wool overcoats, knapsacks, haversacks, canteens, Springfield rifles, angular bayonets, gun slings, steel scabbards and cartridge belts, 1,000 pairs of shoes, 1,000 pairs of khaki leggins, 1,000 sets of knife, fork, and spoon, 100,000 cartridges, 3 machine guns, caliber .45, 2 machine-gun field carriages, 2 machine-gun field carriage limbers, 2 sets machine gun lead harness, 2 sets machine gun wheel harness, 20 officers' automatic pistols, and 20,000 rounds smokeless powder. (See annexed copy of letter to Lord Mayor December 17, 1914, marked "G"). In this letter I stated:

"I am a native of Dundee, Scotland, residing in New York City since childhood; am an American citizen, but with a heart full of love and loyalty to my native land in their great struggle against German tigers."

When it appeared that the uniforms which I had were not of a pattern acceptable to the British War Department, I immediately cabled £1,500 toward the purchase of uniforms for the Scotch regiment, and provided for a further payment of £1,000 to cover port and landing charges, etc. (See annexed letter to Lord Mayor of London, dated January 14, 1915, marked "H"). In this letter I stated:

"I thank you and your associates for the high honor you have done me in giving me the privilege of contributing my mite toward the defense of my native land in helping to arm and equip some of my fellow countrymen; and praying that it may be the will of our merciful Father to shorten these terrible days of agony and suffering and to put the desire for a lasting peace in the hearts of all people and to give victory to the just and righteous cause of our dear ones."

This offer was accepted, and under date of January 29, 1915, the lord mayor wrote me a personal letter (see annexed copy of letter, marked "I") incorporating resolutions passed by the committee of the City of London National Guard thanking me for the contribution and stating:

"I beg leave to say that your thoughtful generosity has been of real encouragement and material assistance to the City of London National Guard, and I have further to add that the kind expression of your feelings toward our country and ourselves and your touching assurance of faith in our cause have made a deep impression upon us."

The outfitting of this regiment cost me upward of $70,000.

Later on, upon learning of King George's expressed regrets that the London volunteers did not have sufficient arms to drill with, I sent another letter to the Lord Mayor of London offering as a further free gift 1,000 Springfield and Mauser rifles and equipment, with a stock of cartridges, for use by the regulars (see annexed copy of letter, Aug. 27, 1915, marked "J"), in which I stated:

"If it is a fact that the law of the realm prevents the Government accepting free gifts, then His Majesty can send me a penny in payment. The sample gun is being forwarded you by express. If the rifle is satisfactory for the regulars, on receipt of a cablegram saying "Accepted" the lot will be shipped free to London as fast as they can go from the gun shops."

The King, through a letter written by Lord Sandringham, accepted my offer under the impression that I was a British subject. I thereupon shipped the rifles, and when they had been received and it was too late to decline the gift I wrote a further letter, dated February 16, 1916, explaining that I was not a British subject, and concluding:

"My motive has been a matter of conscience, with the thought that our Father had given me these guns, money, etc., for just such a time as this.

"'As Christ who died to make men holy,
"'So Briton's sons are dying to keep men free.'

"Please make known to His Gracious Majesty that while I am and always will be a true lover of my native land, ready to do all that I can for its welfare, I am an American citizen."

In February, 1917, after the infamous proposal of the German Government to permit certain of our ships to pass through the war zone with immunity, provided they were given certain designated markings, I offered President Franklin, of the American Line, as a free gift, to fit out the steamship St. Louis with one 6-inch quick-firing, breech-loading cannon, with 5-mile range, on naval gun mount, together with explosive projectiles; with one Hotchkiss rapid-fire revolving cannon shooting 80 shots a minute, and with two Colt rapid-fire machine guns shooting 500 shots a minute, an outfit which could not have been purchased at that time for less than $20,000. My letter to President Franklin was dated February 26, 1917, and a copy is annexed hereto, marked "K."

President Franklin decided not to permit the boat to go out, for reasons stated in his letter to me of February 27, 1917 (a copy of which is annexed and marked "L"), in which he said:

"Yours of the 26th received, and we greatly appreciate your kind offer to place at our disposal, free of charge, the equipment referred to, as it is very gratifying to know that you, as a good American citizen, fully realize the unfortunate position in which the American Line is placed in consequence of having its steamers tied up here indefinitely owing to causes beyond its control."

Upon the entrance of the United States into the war I was prepared to give the Government the benefit of anything that I had that could be of any service in the war. I saw Col. Mitcham, commanding officer of the New York Arsenal, and told him that the Government was welcome to anything I had on any terms that they saw fit to make. He said that he was not in a position to tell me what was needed, but advised me to send lists of my stock to the various Government departments. I thereupon prepared lists as suggested and sent them to the various Government departments. The lists included the 30 cannon now in question. In a letter to the Quartermaster General of April 11, 1917, I said: "If your department can use any of these items, the prices will be arranged to your satisfaction." The replies which I received from these departments were to the effect that they were not interested in any of my stock, with the exception of certain haversacks. These I offered to them at a price equal to about a third of what they would cost to manufacture, and my offer was accepted as satisfactory and the haversacks promptly furnished. There were over 100,000 of these haversacks, and Col. Mitcham said to me, "Your supply of these haversacks has been a godsend to us."

I also sold to the War Department a large number of cartridges which I had on hand at a price of perhaps 50 per cent less than they could have been obtained for from the manufacturers.

So far as the cannon were concerned the Government reported to me that they had no use for them, and I received no intimation to the contrary until the early part of 1918, when I was negotiating for their sale to the Brazilian Government. The Government then notified me that they were interested in the cannon and would like to inspect them. Arrangements were then made for an inspection at Polopel's Island, and the inspection took place on March 5, 1918. The inspectors expressed themselves as well pleased with the cannon, believing that they would be serviceable. They went away and I heard nothing further regarding the guns during the month of March.

This was the situation on April 1, 1918, a most memorable date to me, for on that day there commenced a series of most astonishing occurrences, which I shall now describe to you. If they had happened in the case of anyone else and had been described to me, I should have been unable to credit them as possibilities in any nation or country existing under a constitutional form of government.

I have already mentioned Polopel's Island. It belongs to me and is located in the Hudson River, near the town of Cornwall. This island has been used by me for many years past, not only as a summer residence, for my family but as a place of storage for my stock of goods. There is an arsenal located upon the island and a powder magazine. I inclose, for your examination, a photograph of the island, which gives a view of a part of the arsenal and shows the concrete dock which I built, with the cannon resting upon it (see annexed photograph marked "M").

Several months before the United States entered the war, and when there were rumors of possible uprisings, I became alarmed as to the safety of my stores on this island and applied to the Federal Government for protection. I was referred by the Federal Government to the State authorities, and I thereupon wrote a letter to Gov. Whitman, under date of February 5, 1917, applying to him for protection. I had some correspondence with him in the matter (see photographs of letter from military secretary and adjutant general, dated, respectively, February 6 and April 5, 1917, and marked "N" and "O"), in which I was referred to the county authorities, and it was suggested that I should be sworn in by the sheriff of Dutchess County as deputy sheriff for the purpose of guarding the island. I immediately adopted this advice, and shortly thereafter the sheriff of Dutchess County appointed me and five of my men deputy sheriffs and put us in charge of Polopel's Island. At about this time, and with the knowledge and authority of the sheriff of Dutchess County, I mounted four rapid-fire machine guns upon the tower of my arsenal, so that those in charge of the island would be in a position to make a proper defense of it.

On April 1, 1918, at about 12.30 p. m., a submarine-boat chaser (S. P. 899), with an armed guard of about 15 men, in command of 4 officers wearing the insignia of the United States Navy, landed on Polopel's Island and demanded immediate entrance into the magazine located there. I was not upon the island at the time, and my men, one of whom was one of the deputy sheriffs mentioned, although they had the keys to the arsenal, had not been entrusted with the keys to the magazine, which were under my personal control, so that it was impossible for them to get into the magazine without my assistance. The Navy officers were informed of this condition, as well as of the fact that I was in New York and was expected to arrive with Mrs. Bannerman to take up my residence there on the following day. They were also informed of the fact that I was then at my office at 501 Broadway, New York, where I could be readily reached by telephone and would be in a position to furnish them with the keys, so that they could obtain immediate admission into the magazine. Without making any effort to get in touch with me or to ascertain where the keys could be obtained, and not heeding the protests of the caretakers in charge of the magazine, the Naval officers, although they carried no warrant and were clothed with no authority permitting them so to do, demanded a hack saw to cut out the brass padlock on the outer steel doors of the magazine. Before the caretakers could get to them with the hack saw, the officers and men proceeded to force the outer doors of the magazine from their hinges and threw them flat upon the ground. They then kicked in the inner wooden door, although they were told that if they would wait for a moment the key to this door would be produced, and entered the magazine. They were ordinary leather shoes containing steel or iron nails, in violation of the well-known rule requiring rubber shoes to be worn in powder magazines to prevent sparks, and they obtained for use in the magazine a steel ax and an iron bolt, also in violation of a rule requiring only copper or wooden tools to be used in connection with work upon explosives. With these implements they proceeded to force open various boxes containing explosive shells and charges of powder, all of which, with the exception of one box, they opened inside the magazine. When some of my caretakers looked into the magazine to see what was being done they were ordered off by the guards, who pointed their pistols at them; and when one of the men, not understanding the gravity of the situation, failed to move quickly enough to satisfy one of the guards, he aimed a pistol directly at the man, saying, "Didn't I tell you to get out of here?" After opening the boxes they took out samples of projectiles and powder charges, which they carried away with them.

They then entered every arsenal building on the place, some of the men helping themselves to cartridge belts and some of them taking away a patent model set of leather equipment. They also entered and went through my private dwelling, including Mrs. Bannerman's bedrooms, and finally went out through one of the windows and climbed to the top roof of the Bannerman home building, where they took some photographs.

One of the officers then proceeded to remove the firing mechanism from one of the machine guns which I have mentioned as located in the tower of my arsenal, being the one on the side facing the direction in which the boat departed, this being done evidently on the theory that the gun might be used to attack the boat.

In fact, throughout this entire affair these naval officers and their men conducted themselves as if they believed that I was a dangerous enemy alien or a traitor to the United States.

Upon learning from my men of this outrageous proceeding I communicated with my counsel in New York, and on April 13, 1918, a letter was addressed by them to Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, in which they stated to him the facts which I have hereinbefore related and requested him to ascertain and tell me why this raid was made, who was primarily responsible for it, and what the grounds were upon which it was believed in the Navy Department that the raid was justified, to make an investigation of those grounds sufficiently adequate and complete to exonerate me to the satisfaction of such members of the department as had knowledge of the fact of the raid and to clear my name upon the records of the Navy relating to this event, and finally to take such corrective measures as would prevent a recurrence of outrages of this kind in the future, either at Polopels Island or elsewhere.

No reply was received by me or my counsel to this letter until May 3, 1918, when I received a short letter from Mr. Daniels (a photographic copy of which is annexed and marked "P"), in which he said:

"I desire to personally assure you that there is no question in my mind of your entire loyalty and devotion.

"The recent action of the War Department in taking over your arsenal for the storage of military goods was recommended as a measure of safety and for the best interests of the national defense. Such action was not predicated, however, as far as I am informed and believe, on any doubt or question of your loyalty, and I am glad to be able to give you my assurance to this effect."

In the meantime, however, and while my counsel's letter was awaiting a reply other occurrences took place the effect of which upon my good name has been nothing less than tragic. I had had in my employ upon this island for many years an elderly man by the name of Kovac, an honest, thrifty, and loyal workman of Hungarian birth. Like many men of Austrian and Hungarian origin, he was bitterly opposed to the Germans in this war and to the best of my knowledge and belief was as sincerely loyal to the allied cause as anyone I know. You will recall that even after our declaration of war with Austria no law was passed which forbade the employment of Austrian enemy aliens in positions such as Kovac was holding. Nevertheless, the matter of Kovac's presence on Polopels Island was taken up between myself and the Department of Justice, represented by the Federal district attorney in New York City, with the result that the district attorney gave me express permission to retain Kovac on the island for the time being. For corroboration of this statement I beg leave to refer to a confirmatory letter addressed to me by the Hon. T. W. Gregory, Attorney General of the United States, dated May 25, 1918, and hereto annexed as Q, in which he says:

"Kovac's presence on your island was known to the Department of Justice, and early in 1918, after an investigation by it, you were given permission to retain Kovac until further notice."

This permission had never been revoked or even questioned, when, on the 19th of April, 1918, a United States marshal arrested Kovac and took him into custody, and about the same time I was notified by the War Department of the United States that Polopels Island was to be immediately taken into custody of the War Department and an armed guard placed thereon, and that I was not to be permitted to remove any of my goods from the island without the permission both of the War Department and of the Department of Justice. This seizure, it was said, was made as a measure of safety at the recommendation of the Navy Department. I have since been informed that the arrest of Kovac was also made upon the like recommendation.

Not wishing to embarrass the Government or to attract the public notice to what I had regarded as at the most a mistake on the part of some irresponsible subordinate, I had carefully refrained from giving any publicity to the matter of the raid upon the island by the Navy Department on April 1. It appeared, however, that it was not the policy of Government officials to give me similar consideration. On the day after the arrest of Kovac all the leading newspapers of New York came out with sensational articles describing the raid which had taken place on April 1 on the island and the arrest of Kovac on the preceding day. These articles had evidently been inspired by some one who was familiar with the raid on April 1, as they contained an account of the "discovery" of machine guns in my arsenal, together with "a large quantity of shells and other ammunition," which it was announced had "been found on the island." Kovac was described as "a prominent Teuton," and his arrest was announced as having been made "under instructions from Washington" and by "agents of the Naval Intelligence Service." My name figured prominently in these articles, each and every one of which contained the implication that I was under grave suspicion of disloyalty to the Government. The New York World stated, "The island was searched last February by agents of the Naval Intelligence Bureau and later by the crew of a submarine chaser. Both inspections disclosed that machine guns were mounted on the island and that on top of a tower on the warehouse were four guns." The headlines of one article in the New York Sun were "Three spy-law arrests in Hudson Valley—Guns found at castle on Bannerman's Island." These publications were not confined to the city of New York, but were widely circulated, especially in the region where I have lived for many years, a hitherto respected citizen. For example, in the Cornwall Press the following appeared.

"It is earnestly hoped by the many in this section who have had friendly relations with him that he may be able at the proper time to entirely vindicate himself of any suspicion which may now point his way."

I annex, marked R, photographic copies of a number of these publications.

I am a man of nearly 70 years of age. Since last July I have been in very feeble health, owing to a surgical operation which left a wound in my body which is still open. All my life I have tried to be a loyal citizen of these United States. The motto of my family is "For God and country we uphold our banner." To be practically accused of treason by the officials of my Government at this time, in the evening of my life, to find many of my former neighbors and friends looking askance at me and to know that my name has been associated in the minds of thousands of people with one of the worst crimes that a man can be guilty of has been a cross to me which it seems at times that it would be impossible for me to bear. I am a member of the Presbyterian Church, and not long after these scandalous articles appeared I made a statement in my church, in which I requested my friends and neighbors to withhold judgment until this matter had been investigated and the truth made known.

Although nearly three months have gone by since my property was seized, and although repeated efforts have been made by my counsel to ascertain the facts, I have not as yet received any definite reply to the inquiries which were addressed to the Secretary of the Navy on April 13. Armed guards still hold possession of my property, including my residence, where my wife and I live like Belgians under Prussian rule. Thousands of people who know my name pass daily in steamers and trains up and down the Hudson River, where my arsenal, always a conspicuous object, is now doubly so by reason of the armed guard upon it and the sensational stories which have been circulated about it and about me. The longer this situation continues the more confirmed becomes the opinion of my guilt and the more complete the ruin of my reputation.

Why was my property raided by the Navy Department? Why was it seized by the War Department? Why is it being held to-day by armed forces of this Government? These are questions which are being asked daily, both by people who know me and by people who do not know me. Sometimes these questions are asked of me. What answers can I give? None, for it is an astonishing fact that in spite of all efforts that have been made by me to learn the truth I am as ignorant of it as I was three months ago.

Is it because, as indicated by the newspaper articles, my loyalty to the Government is questioned by the Department of the Navy? Apparently not, for Secretary Daniels has written to me, assuring me that there is no question in his mind as to my loyalty and devotion.

Is it because any conduct of mine in connection with the employment of Kovac has been displeasing to the Department of Justice? Apparently not, for Kovac was thoroughly examined by the Department of Justice and was released, no fault being found in him. Attorney General Gregory has written to me, exonerating me completely from all blame and criticism (see letter of Attorney General, dated May 25, 1918, annexed and marked Q):

"You have directed my attention to certain statements published in the newspapers of New York City during the month of April last stating, in substance, that Charles Kovac, an Austrian and one of your employees, had been brought in to the Alien Enemy Bureau for investigation; further stating that Bannermans Island had been several times searched by Government officials, intimating that this island was under suspicion, and that some criticism might attach to you for permitting Kovac to be employed on your island.

"Kovac's presence on your island was known to the Department of Justice, and early in 1918, after an investigation by it, you were given permission to retain Kovac until further notice. * * * So far as I am aware, no question has ever been presented to this department as to your own loyalty or devotion to the cause of the United States and its allies."

Is it because the Government does not believe that my property was properly guarded? Apparently not, for when I asked for a Federal guard, before the island was put under State protection, my request was refused.

Is it because the Government wishes to commandeer the contents of my arsenal and magazine? Hardly that, for the Government has told me that it was not interested in acquiring any of my stock in trade, with the exception of the 30 cannon, and as to these it has always known that they might be acquired by purchase at any time.

Is it because they wish to use the magazine and arsenal for Government purposes? Evidently not, for no Government use has ever been made of either of these buildings, and they have seized not only these buildings but my dwelling house as well.

Why have they done this? Why do they continue to do it? My counsel went to Washington and asked these questions of the Navy Department. He was referred by them to the War Department. He went to the War Department and he asked these questions of the War Department. They were unable to answer him. They said they would investigate and find out. That was weeks ago, and whether their investigations in the meantime have enlightened them as to why they have seized the island and why they are holding it I can not say, for as yet they have told me nothing. At the time the seizure was made there were upon the island quantities of stores which had been sold to State and home defense organizations in different parts of this country. Many of them had been paid for and were awaiting delivery. I applied to the War Department for their release, but it took weeks of time and a special trip to Washington before I was able to obtain even this slight relief. As to the rest of my property on the island, it has been to all intents and purposes confiscated and rendered useless to me, all without the slighest grounds of justification.

I have been recently notified that the Navy Department also, after months of inactivity and loss to me, is now conducting an investigation of the matter. Thus investigation follows investigation, while hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of my property lies tied up and idle and 24 soldiers, sorely needed on the war front, are paid month after month by the United States Government to patrol a little island on the Hudson with a show of protecting it from me, from whom it needs no protection.

But even this is apparently not enough. In addition to the rôle of traitor, I am now called upon to play the part of the bold profiteer. Members of Congress arise in their seats and denounce me for demanding of the War Department $15,000 apiece for cannon of a kind which they state the War Department was purchasing from the Navy Department for only a third of that amount. To be sure the fact was that my price was also a third of that amount. But what of that? To be sure my price was a matter of written record, available to any man who would take the trouble to read my correspondence with the Government. But what of that? If it wasn't $15,000 it might just as well have been. A man who will harbor spies and secrete machine guns upon his premises and maintain magazines that have to be raided by naval detectives at regular intervals can hardly complain at such a comparatively trivial charge as profiteering.

If my words seem bitter can you blame me? Could you yourself accept with complacency the treatment which I have been subjected to for the past three months? Could Representative BORLAND? Could any man?

In the report of Mr. BORLAND'S speech, contained in the New York World, I read: "'Is the estimate of $450,000 for the Bannerman guns in the bill?' Representative SNYDER inquired. 'Not a dollar of it,' thundered Mr. BORLAND, who promised that if Mr. Bannerman didn't accept a fair price the guns would be commandeered."

Commandeered! One would suppose, to read this statement, that the Government had made repeated efforts to purchase these guns from me at some price which they considered fair and reasonable and that their offers had been repeatedly refused. Yet the fact is that this Government has never, since the commencement of the war, made me any proposal with reference to these guns or any other of my stock which has not been promptly and cheerfully accepted and acted upon, and if Government officials had come to me prior to the 1st day of April, 1918, and requested me to make the United States a present of these guns, I believe I should have been strongly inclined to grant their request.

As matters stand, however, at the present time I see no reason why I should not receive for these guns a fair and reasonable price commensurate with their present market value. So long as those in charge of our affairs feel that they can afford to expend approximately $100 a day of the Government's money for the pay, upkeep, and maintenance of the unnecessary force of men now situated on Polopel's Island I shall remain of the opinion that they can also afford to pay me for my 30 cannon as much as the poor little Republic of Cuba is ready, willing, and anxious to pay.

Very truly, yours, FRANCIS BANNERMAN.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from New York, that along with this case ought to go a statement of the arrest of a woman day before yesterday for wearing an iron cross hatpin which somebody had presented to her. She wore it with no malevolent intent whatever, but it created a suspicion of disloyalty. She was arrested as an alien enemy but was discharged. I think all this matter, whether it be comedy or tragedy, goes to show that some of the petty officials of this country are suffering from a mild form of hysteria.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 158) further extending the time within which the joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue temporary permits for additional diversions of water from the Niagara River shall remain in effect, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12599) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 2104. An act to amend sections 4402, 4404, and 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

H. R. 12441. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

DIVERSIONS OF WATER FROM NIAGARA RIVER.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 158) further extending the time within which the joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue temporary permits for additional diversions of water from the Niagara River shall remain in effect, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue permits revocable at will, for the diversion of water in the United States from the Niagara River above the Falls for the creation of power to individuals, companies, or corporations which are now actually producing power from the waters of said river, in quantities which in no event shall exceed in the aggregate a daily diversion at the rate of 20,000 cubic feet per second: Provided, That this resolution shall remain in force until the 1st day of July, 1919, and no longer, at the expiration of which time all permits granted hereunder shall terminate, unless sooner revoked. Any individuals, companies, or corporations violating any of the provisions of said permits, or diverting water from said river above the Falls for the creation of power, except under a permit issued under the authority of this law, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year nor less than 30 days, or both in the discretion of the court; and each and every day on which such violation occurs or is committed shall be deemed a separate offense: Provided, That where such violation is charged against the company or corporate body, the offense shall be taken and deemed to be that of any director, officer, agent, or employee of such company or corporate body ordering, directing, or permitting the same.

And to amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue permits for the diversion of water from the Niagara River."

Mr. LODGE. That bill has been examined by members of the Foreign Relations Committee. The amendments of the House are improvements on the bill. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SHORT-LINE RAILROADS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask the Senator from Virginia if he will not yield to me for the purpose of calling up Senate joint resolution 159?

Mr. MARTIN. I am willing to yield to the Senator to get that measure before the Senate on the same condition that I yielded for the appropriation bill, without the resolution losing its place.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think it will take a very few minutes. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 159) to extend the time within which the President may relinquish control of any railroad or system of transportation, as provided in section 14 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, to January 1, 1919.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment, on page 2, line 8, after the words "nineteen hundred and nineteen," to insert:

Provided, however, That the right conferred upon the President to relinquish prior to July 1, 1918, control of all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation without consent of the carrier as provided in section 14 of an act approved March 21, 1918, entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," which right is herein extended to and inclusive of January 1, 1919, shall not be construed to include any railroad engaged as a common carrier in general transportation such as mentioned in section 1 of said act not owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company and which has heretofore competed for traffic with any railroad or railroads of which the President has taken and retained the possession, use, and control; it being the intent of Congress that every railroad not owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company and which has heretofore competed for traffic with a railroad or railroads which the President has taken and retains the possession, use, or control, or which connects with such railroad and is engaged as a common carrier in general transportation, shall be held and considered as within Federal control as defined in said act, and to be entitled to the benefits of all the provisions of said act so long as the railroad or railroads with which it has heretofore competed for traffic or with which it connects shall be retained under Federal control.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to address an inquiry to the Senator from South Carolina. It it difficult for me to understand the full scope of the joint resolution by simply hearing it read by the Secretary. I should like to ask whether the purpose of the resolution is to provide for the situation presented by the so-called short-line railroads?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is just to carry out a defined purpose of section 1 of the act in an amendment offered on the floor of the Senate and accepted.

Mr. PENROSE. I would be glad if the Senator would explain it in a few words, for I have a good many such short-line roads in Pennsylvania and I am in receipt of a good many communications.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The object is this: The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] introduced an amendment when the bill was on its passage to the effect that all lines connecting or competing with a line or system taken over by the Government should be considered under Government control as long as the line with which it connected or competed was under Government control. The interpretation of that by the administration under section 14 of the railroad law was that any or all parts of a given railroad could be relinquished without respect to that amendment of the Senator from Iowa. So, the effect of the situation would be this, that under the present interpretation of the act any short-line railroad could be relinquished at their will, and as we have already closed the money market by an act of Congress and given them the power to route freight wherever they see fit to carry it, it simply amounts to this, that a short line which was relinquished would be left absolutely helpless, whether it was able to live or not. That is the situation

Mr. PENROSE. What does the joint resolution do?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It makes it obligatory upon them to hold these short lines as long as they connect and compete with lines taken over.

Mr. PENROSE. In the opinion of the Senator from South Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, does this measure meet the complaint of the owners of the short-line roads?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Absolutely.

Mr. PENROSE. In the case of short-line railroads which have not already been taken over, what would happen to them?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. This will apply to them.

Mr. PENROSE. The Government will be compelled to take them over also.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It will be compelled to take them over also.

Mr. PENROSE. I am glad that the committee has done that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the committee amendment the following proviso:

Provided further, That nothing in this resolution or in the said act of March 21, 1918, shall be construed as requiring the President either to take or retain the possession, use, and control of any street railway, whether the same be owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company or not, nor to require the President to take or retain the possession, use, and control of any interurban or other similar railroad which does not receive at least 25 per cent of its operating revenue from the transportation of freight, and which, prior to December 29, 1917, did not have through routes or joint rates with one or more steam road carriers.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, this is to make certain that the roads which were intended to be excepted from Federal control in the original act shall still remain in that position, with the discretion on the part of the President to take them or not to take them. The idea is that roads which do a general business and which connect and compete with other roads and do not do purely an interurban or a passenger business shall be taken over, but those which do a street railway business need not be taken over unless the President sees fit to do it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I merely want to say that I am heartily in favor of the proposal submitted by the Senator from South Carolina in behalf of the Committee on Interstate Commerce. In my judgment, it would not have been necessary to submit this proposition if any reasonable and fair construction had been given to the legislation and to the effect that Congress intended to give to the law.

I am also very heartily in favor for exactly the same reason of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa. I should like to know what would become of the Hudson tube under its operation.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is not difficult to answer. The Hudson tube would not be required to be taken over by the President if he chose to exercise the discretion in another way, but I assume the Government can take it over if the President desires to do so.

Mr. HARDWICK. I was in hopes that the Senator's amendment would be so framed that it would be taken over.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I do not know whether there will be a roll call on this joint resolution. I wish to state that I can not vote for it, because the amendment offered in the committee and adopted by the committee, in my opinion, compels the Government to take over every short-line railroad in the United States, and I am not willing to force the Government to take over all short lines, whether they are useful to the Government or whether they are worth anything or not. I voted against the amendment in the original bill for the same reason. I wished to state my position before a vote is taken on the joint resolution.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me that I may ask a question of the Senator from Minnesota? If they are not taken over, will not the necessary effect be to destroy all the short-line railroads of the country?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think so.

Mr. McKELLAR. How else are they going to live under the present conditions, the Government having taken over all the long lines and having left them out entirely without the possibility of getting necessary financial aid to live for a long time?

Mr. KELLOGG. I think they will be given a fair division with the original lines and be allowed to live in the same way they did before the railroads were taken over. They, of course, in common with all other enterprises in the country, are suffering from the fact that the Government is making use of the money.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the one case, that of the larger railroads, the Government takes them over and carries them on through this trial system; and if they are turned back, they will be turned back in better order than they were when the Government took them over. In the other case the short lines will merely be gobbled up by the great lines of the country, and that will be an end to them.

Mr. KELLOGG. The short lines can not be gobbled up by the great lines of the country while they are in the hands of the Government. I think it is the intention of the Railroad Administration to do what they can to help the short lines and to take them over by the Government where they should be taken over, even though it costs the Government more money, where those short lines render valuable service to local communities; but I am not willing to say that the Government must take over every short line in this country, whether it is worth anything or not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, the Senator has stated that virtually every long line had to be taken over, and certainly it is proper and right to put them all in the same category, in my judgment.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will permit me on that point, I desire to say that, as I understand, the Government diverts traffic to Government owned and controlled railroads, and practically leaves the competing short lines in a condition with no freight, no income, no credit, and the sheriff approaching them.

Mr. KELLOGG. Of course, I am unable to say to what extent the Government has diverted traffic from the short lines to the long lines.

Mr. PENROSE. Everybody knows it.

Mr. KELLOGG. The representatives of the Railroad Administration before the committee denied that. Some of the gentlemen representing the short lines stated that their traffic had decreased owing to being diverted to the long-line railroads or the Government-controlled railroads. I do not think that it is the intention of the Railroad Administration to divert such traffic; but I think it is their intention to deal liberally with the short lines. Of course I am not the Railroad Administration, and I do not speak for the Railroad Administration.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I want very briefly to announce my position.

Like the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], I was opposed to what was known as the Cummins amendment when this legislation was before the Senate. If Senators will note the law as passed, that is, as it is construed by certain officials, it requires the Government to take over all short lines which are connected with or are competing with lines which are taken over. Under section 14, to which reference has been made, the Railroad Director was authorized to relinquish such roads, or of any of them that he might see fit to relinquish on or before July 1 of this year. As I understand, the Director of Railroads did not have the time to investigate each of these cases—and there were very many of them—so as to ascertain from the standpoint of the Government whether or not such roads should in fact be kept in control of the Government. He asked simply an extension of the time within which this right or privilege on the part of the Government could be exercised; that is all. It would not, in my judgment, have changed the status of any of these railroads.

The amendment which was presented originally by the chairman of the committee in the form of a joint resolution provided for an extension of the time within which the Railroad Director could exercise this right. It is proposed by the committee to give this right; but at the same time it says in effect, "You shall not exercise this right with reference to any road which is connected with any line which has been taken over or which competes with it."

Senators ought not to mistake the effects of this proposition. It means practically that every short line in existence is to be taken over, whether or not it is going to be of any value to the country at large. Do not mistake that. It means that every road that has been built by some promoter who knew nothing about railroading, but who did know how to get money out of the people, shall be taken over; that is all. It means that many roads will be taken over; the chief asset of which is the amount of bonds and of stock, whose chief value is their value as waste paper. That is what it means. The entire burden of the financing of these roads is to be placed upon the Government. I, for one Senator, will not go that far.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I hope we may have a speedy vote. I think the Senate has fully made up its mind that this is a complete system; and that when the Government took charge of the railroads we could not have two systems in this country, one privately owned and the other publicly owned, when every man knows the system is a unit; that it is one system; and that we have no right to put into the hands of men other than the courts and this body the railroads——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Just a moment—the railroads of this country for them to arbitrarily destroy the property of a road regardless of what local benefit it may be to a community, because it happens not to earn big dividends in the way of remuneration for its operation. We have got to consider the small communities that are served by these little capillaries that furnish the great veins and arteries of traffic. The committee has testimony to the effect that they were being dropped, regardless of anything except that they were not considered at the time necessary for the movement of the great mass of traffic.

What redress have they got? They are a part of the system. We do not say, neither does this proposed law say, that the Government shall enter into any kind of a specific contract. The Government can determine whether these roads have a lot of junk for bonds; the Government will have an opportunity to ascertain whether the stock has been watered, or whether it has not been watered. The redress that these roads will have is the redress that every American citizen has to go to the courts to determine if they and the Railroad Administration may not agree, and not go to the Railroad Administration to know whether or not they are to be destroyed or are to be protected.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that the most conspicuous example of stock watering and bond control are the large roads of this country, and not the small roads.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Precisely.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina whether he construes that this amendment will take care of the large feeding short lines which feed the trunk lines but which are independent roads, along which there may be large quantities of coal and coke produced, and which are now almost strangled by the conditions which surround them—the trunk lines raising wages and they being unable to meet the competition? The trunk lines have increased rates; and of these rates the short lines get no larger proportion than they did before the Government regulation went into effect.

As I understand this law which is now proposed, one of its conditions is that the short lines must have been competing railroads. These feeders were not competing railroads.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Or connected with them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It does not say "connected."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; it says "competing or connecting."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator from South Carolina will show me that language, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The joint resolution refers to a definition contained in section 1 of the law as it now stands.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will read the language here, he will find that it reads—

It being the intent of Congress that every railroad not owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company and which has heretofore competed for traffic with a railroad or railroads which the President has taken and retains the possession, use, or control or which connects with such railroad——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. "Or which connects."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I see that that language covers that case.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; entirely.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to say before I yield, in just a moment, that there is one of these short-line railroads in my State which carries 5,000 tons of coal a day, which is produced along the line of the road. The Government has failed to take over that road and has indicated no intention in regard to it. The road has given notice to the shippers on the line that if the Government does not take the road over by July 1 they are going to shut the railroad down, because they are absolutely unable to live under the conditions under which they are forced to operate at this time.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. GORE. Another instance illustrating the injustice of this measure has been cited by a Member of the other House. It was stated that there were two trunk lines paralleling each other, about 20 miles apart, and at one point there was an independently owned road connecting directly between the two, a distance of 20 miles—I will say connecting A and B on the two trunk lines. The trunk lines form a junction about 70 miles from A and B at a point I will call C. Under the present system freight is routed from A to B by way of C, a distance of 70 miles from A to C and 70 from C to B, instead of being routed directly across from A to B, a distance of only 20 miles, which, of course, would shrink and shrivel up the smaller road, as is entirely evident.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I wish to say one word. With all due respect to the chairman of the committee, he has discussed this as though it were a question between Government-owned and private-owned roads. He overlooks the fact that there is no Government-owned road; that it is a question simply between roads temporarily controlled for the time being by the Government and private-owned roads. All of the meritorious roads unquestionably will be taken over, and control will be kept of them; but this joint resolution requires the Government to take over all these roads, whether they are good, bad, or indifferent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 20, after the word "railroad," it is proposed to insert the words "or interurban electric railroad."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have been told by members of the committee that they think the language is broad enough to include the class of roads referred to in the amendment, but, in any event, the amendment I have offered will make it more definite and certain.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will notice the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, he will see that it takes care of the very matter the Senator desires to cover.

Mr. CURTIS. If the amendment of the Senator from Iowa does so, and if the Senator will agree to the amendment I have offered, it may be stricken out in conference, if necessary, but I should like to have it go in the joint resolution.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I merely wish to call attention to the fact that this joint resolution will not go to conference. The House, if I may so state, are in a position to act on the joint resolution to-day if we will pass it now, and it will become a law and will save untold hardship if we can pass it this afternoon.

Mr. CURTIS. If, in the judgment of the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Iowa, the amendment of the Senator from Iowa includes the roads to which my amendment refers I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. In my opinion the matter is fully covered. It makes no difference whether a railroad is moved by electricity or whether it is moved by steam, the character of the railroad determines whether it is within or without the provisions of the law, and while I would have no objection in the world to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas; yet, in my judgment, it is not necessary, and would tend to delay the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. On that statement I withdraw my amendment, and offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Kansas will remember that there has been added to the joint resolution, as reported by the committee, a provision that this shall not be compulsory in the case of any street railway or any interurban railway that does not derive at least 25 per cent of its revenue from the movement of freight.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if, under this joint resolution, we can take in the Mount Pleasant car line?

Mr. CUMMINS. It does not affect that at all. If we could take it in and could improve it any, the Lord knows I would like to take it in.

Mr. THOMAS. I presume it has "taken in" the Senator several times. [Laughter.]

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 11, after the word "be," it is proposed to add the words "taken in and," so as to read "carrier in general transportation shall be taken in and held and considered."

Mr. CURTIS. I presume the Senator has no objection to that amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that the amendment be again stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the public will be "taken in" anyway, will it not? [Laughter.]

Mr. POMERENE. They are "taken in" all the time.

Mr. PENROSE. They are "taken in" already.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will accept the amendment. The provision will mean after it is amended just what it means now.

Mr. CURTIS. I think so; but it makes the provision more definite.

Mr. CUMMINS. It makes it perfectly clear.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question.

Mr. PENROSE. I will inquire if the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas has been agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. May we have a vote on the amendment offered by me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I hope the Senator will not insist on the amendment, for the reason that any considerable change in the joint resolution will delay its passage, and we desire to get it finished this afternoon.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that the joint resolution is already engrossed and ready to be signed, and it is feared that if amendments are made it will delay the measure. In view of that fact, I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President I should like to ask a question of the Senator from South Carolina. As I understand, this joint resolution simply extends the time to January 1 when the President may designate which roads he will relinquish control of. Now, if the President on January 1 decides that any short-line road——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; let me explain to the Senator——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Is not a competing or connecting line, he can relinquish control of it; it lies within his power to do so.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; after January, 1919; but he can not relinquish any competing line or any line connecting with a line that is under Government control.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, what can he relinquish?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It would have to be an isolated road, for if it competes with any line or connects with any line that is controlled by the Government, ipso facto it comes under Government control.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask, Mr. President, if there is any such isolated line in the United States?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I hope not.

Mr. THOMAS. If there is such a line, it ought to be rounded up and put in a corral.

Mr. KELLOGG. If there is any line which commences in the desert and ends in the desert, and does not approach any other railroad, I presume the President might relinquish it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to address an inquiry to the chairman of the committee, the Senator from South Carolina. If it is not violating any state secret, I am curious to know whether the wording of this resolution as amended came from the Treasury Department?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will state to the Senator that this is the splendid product of members of the committee.

Mr. PENROSE. Sometimes the committee stand sponsor for a parentage for which they are not responsible.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The committee gave birth to this.

Mr. PENROSE. Did the rude draft come from the Treasury Department?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The draft came from members of the committee. It was conceived in their brains and put in this form.

Mr. PENROSE. Was there any substratum of phraseology furnished by the Treasury Department?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Not so far as any of the committee knows.

Mr. PENROSE. I was going to make a passing observation, in which I hoped that I might be able to spare the feelings of the committee; but I am afraid I shall not be able to do so, because I want to state that I have seldom come across a legislative document more filled with obscurities, ambiguities, and incomprehensible sentences; and hence the occasion has arisen for a number of Senators to address these queries to the chairman of the committee, so that they might have in the RECORD a statement of what this obscure legislative proposition really means.

I had hoped that my observations would apply only to the Treasury Department. During the winter I have had occasion to regret that they did not have up there clerks more versed in the elegancies and technicalities of statutory law, and it is with very deep regret that part of my passing reflections must fall upon my colleagues in this Chamber who are members of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It has done no damage.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee as to whether it is understood that this amendment to the joint resolution comprehends the street railways and the electric railways that run out of a city making connections for interurban traffic?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is expressly eliminated by the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, which has been adopted.

Mr. LEWIS. I did not hear it. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the preamble be disagreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution (S. Res. No. 268) relative to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which is now before the Senate, be laid aside until 12 o'clock noon on Wednesday next, the 1st day of July.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SENATOR FROM WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 269, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate resolution 269, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That HOWARD SUTHERLAND has been elected as Senator from the State of West Virginia for a term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1917, and that he is entitled to a seat in the Senate as such Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I may say that the report was presented by me the other day and it was the unanimous report of the committee. I therefore move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

MEDICAL SOCIETY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2653. It is a bill that will meet with no opposition, being simply an amendment to the charter of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2653) to revive with amendments an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia," which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 8, after the word "successors," to strike out "are" and insert "be, and they"; on line 9, after the word "hereby," to insert "are"; and in the same line, after the word "are," to strike out "incorporated" and insert "constituted a body corporate of the District of Columbia," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That Drs. George Wythe Cook, Frank Leech, J. W. Chappell, E. G. Seibert, P. S. Roy, R. T. Holden, W. M. Barton, E. Y. Davidson, J. B. Nichols, A. L. Stavely, C. W. Franzoni, H. C. Macatee, D. S. Lamb, A. W. Boswell, and J. Lawn Thompson, and such other persons as they may associate with themselves and their successors be, and they hereby are, constituted a body corporate of the District of Columbia, under the name and title of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, for the purpose of promoting and disseminating medical and surgical knowledge, and for no other purpose.

SEC. 2. That the Medical Society of the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, empowered to own, mortgage, and convey such property as may be necessary for its purposes, and to make such rules and regulations as it may require, and which may not be repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or annul this act of incorporation of said society.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10854) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 303) to extend the time within which the President may relinquish control of any railroad or system of transportation, as provided in section 14 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, to January 1, 1919, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 158) further extending the time within which the joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue temporary permits for additional diversions of water from the Niagara River shall remain in effect, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

H. R. 12599. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, this is a House bill, and under the rule of the Senate it can not be acted upon without reference to the committee, except by unanimous consent.

I do not care to further discuss this question. It has been thoroughly discussed and acted upon twice. I have reference to the provision of the original bill which provided for the continuance of the pneumatic-tube service. The House and Senate conferees agreed to a compromise, in the hope that it would be passed, and it was passed; but the President, in his wisdom, saw proper to veto the bill for the reason that it contained that provision which authorized the continuance of the pneumatic-tube service until the 4th of March and the reference of the matter to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I am not going to ask to have the bill read. I understand that it is an exact copy of the bill heretofore passed by the two Houses. The Post Office bill, as will be remembered, was considered and passed with this single exception. That bill now comes back to the Senate. It is highly important that the bill should be passed before the 1st of July, in order that the machinery of the Post Office Department may not be disturbed. Of course I will be pardoned if I say that, in my judgment, the passage of the bill in its present shape will create great dissatisfaction and great inconvenience in those cities which have been relying for 20 years upon the pneumatic-tube system for the dispatch of their first-class mail. However, that question is eliminated. Neither the Senate nor the House will be responsible for whatever may happen. Therefore, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to consider this House bill without its reference to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WEEKS subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to say one word which I did not have an opportunity to say on account of what seemed to me to be the haste of the proceedings relative to the passage of the Post Office bill.

I do not propose to take any definite time to discuss what has transpired in connection with this bill, but I should not be doing justice to myself if I did not enter my protest against the action which has destroyed several millions of dollars of property and has destroyed the mail facilities in five of the largest cities of this country, and those cities produce a net revenue of sixty-odd millions of dollars a year. There is not, and never has been, a word of testimony against that service from any man who has been getting the benefit of it, but, on the contrary, universal testimony in favor of its continuance.

In the name of those people who have been paying such a large revenue to the Government for all these years, and who wish the service of the pneumatic tubes continued, I enter my protest against the high-handed method which has been adopted in this connection, destroying the property of the companies and destroying the mail facilities of the people who have been enjoying them.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11945.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will not press his motion at this late hour.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that my purpose was to ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and then to ask to lay it aside.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator from Oklahoma intend to proceed with the consideration of the measure this evening?

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that my purpose was to have that motion adopted, ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and then request unanimous consent to temporarily lay it aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. The Chair understands that a moment ago the Senate, by unanimous consent, agreed that the unfinished business should go over until 12 o'clock on Monday. The Chair will rule that, without unanimous consent, what the Senator from Oklahoma proposes can not be done.

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, it can not be done.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I submit a report from the conference committee on the naval bill and ask for its immediate consideration. It will take but a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report will be read.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10854) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 37, 47, 52, and 170.

B. R. TILLMAN,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
JOHN WALTER SMITH,
BOIES PENROSE,
H. C. LODGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED C. TALBOTT,
D. J. RIORDAN,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
WILLIAM J. BROWNING,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

MICHIGAN AVENUE CONDUIT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask the permission of the Senate to allow the consideration of a bill that will take but a minute. It merely gives permission to lay a conduit in the street toward one of the buildings of the Catholic University. I present it at the instance of the Committee on the District of Columbia. It carries no appropriation nor anything of the kind. It merely grants permission to place pipes under a street to convey heat from one part of the University to another.

Mr. PENROSE. Let it be read for information, Mr. President.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; of course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 3929), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to grant permission to the Catholic University of America to lay a conduit for the transmission of power from their power house under and across Michigan Avenue northeast between Harewood Road and Brookland Avenue, in the District of Columbia, into and upon the property of the associated professors of St. Mary's Seminary, of Baltimore, Md., known as the Sulpician College, under the regulations and subject to the limitations prescribed in the act entitled "An act regulating permits for private conduits in the District of Columbia," approved May 26, 1900.

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m., Saturday, June 29, 1918) the Senate took a recess until Monday, July 1, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 29, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our God and our Father, for that friend toward the higher civilization, which has ever characterized us as a Nation, we lift up our hearts in love and praise and beseech Thee to continue that inspiration to grander heights of glory, until we indeed shall become the ideal Nation of the earth, and to Thee we shall ascribe all praise in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

EXPEDITING APPROPRIATION BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to make a very short announcement, and that is that so far as he can act as a steering committee he is going to have the right of way given to these appropriation bills and such things as must be signed to-day or make trouble. The Chair thinks everybody agrees that that should be done. [Applause.]

CONFERENCE REPORT ON SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the sundry civil bill (H. R. 12441) and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BROWNE rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BROWNE. To ask that the gentleman from Kentucky yield to me a moment while I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in regard to war legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in regard to war legislation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FARM CONDITIONS.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to briefly extend my remarks on farm conditions—the farm and the farmer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on farm conditions. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are they the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; they are my own remarks, but they include brief resolutions passed by a grange. The whole article will not take up more than a column of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House and the administrative authorities to some resolutions adopted by one of the granges in my district, and to be permitted to make just a few brief observations relative thereto.

The success of this terrible war depends not alone on the men in the trenches. Our brave boys can not fight the Huns on empty stomachs. We must feed and clothe them, and do it well. To whom do we look for these mighty resources but to the farm and the man who farms the farm? I believe the American farmer is bending every energy to meet the heavy requirements now upon him, notwithstanding the fact that the farm boys are being called in great numbers to the colors and the harvest is ripe and the laborers are few. I have ofttimes doubted whether or not we are giving the farmer the encouragement justly due him. We fix the price on many of the things he produces, but do we give enough consideration while in the fixing business to the things the farmer must buy in order to produce the necessities of civil and military life?

I was born on a farm and am proud to own and operate the farm my grandfather cleared up and settled a century ago. I think, therefore, that I have first-hand knowledge of farm life and farm conditions. The daylight law does not affect the farmer. You can turn the clock forward or backward by legislation as you like, but it is before sunup until after the sun has sunk in the west with the American farmer. While we are crowding and urging the farmer to produce, produce, and still keep on producing more and more, let us see to it that he gets a fair shake and a fair deal. Inquire what the farmer has to pay for his binder and binder twine and machinery of all kinds. Labor is from two to three times more than in prewar times. The farmer made as much money before the war as he can make now with wool at $1 per pound and wheat at $2.50 to $2.75 per bushel. There is no doubt about the truth of this statement.

I have voted to increase the pay of the laboring man, the Government clerks, the rural carriers, et al., because I believed they were entitled to have their pay increased, but I beg of you, my friends who represent the great industrial centers and know but little about the conditions on the farm, to not forget "Old Rube" back on the farm, who is bending his back to carry the great load upon him. He feels satisfied and happy when he cleans up a thousand or two per annum for investment in his farm, and throws in his own labor and that of his faithful wife and children for good measure. There are no millionaire farmers. Let's fix the other fellow up some and give the faithful farmer and his household a chance to take a half holiday.

But my granger friends tell their own story better than I can tell it for them in the following resolutions:

NEW LONDON, OHIO, June 1, 1918.

WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK, M. C.

DEAR SIR: We ask, Why isn't the farmer entitled to the same interest on his investment as the city man? Industrial enterprises pay 7 per cent on their preferred stock and often more on their common, but the farmer who can get 6 per cent on his investment is mighty lucky.

When a big business concern wants to make an improvement or extension, they are safe in doing so, knowing they can increase the price of their output and soon get back the money expended for improvements. The farmer has to take just what is offered when he sells and pay what is asked when he buys.

Is there any business man under the sun who is denied the privilege of naming his selling price and thereby being sure of at least the cost of production?

We, the members of Ruggles Grange, No. 2119, of Ashland County, Ohio, have—

Resolved, That we should be granted a better price for our products, that we may have a small profit above cost of production. We understand that a fixed price is to be paid on all wool in the hands of producers.

Resolved, That while we recognize the exigencies of war and yield to none in patriotism and love of our country, yet we nevertheless appeal for an impartial hearing before the War Industries Board on the sale and movement of wool from the producer to the consumer, and we request this honorable board to withhold final decision upon this vital subject as to the methods of sale and prices until such hearings are completed.

We ask our lawmaking body to not curtail the selling price of our products without doing the same on articles we must buy, to wit: Machinery, fertilizer, twine, clothing, etc.

It is of great importance that the farmer be able to sell his products at a living profit if he continues to raise wheat and wool or takes a vacation in raising these commodities.

Very respectfully,

E. J. CRITTENDEN,
J. M. FAIR,
M. G. GITON,
Committee on Resolutions.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
F. W. MONDELL,
Manager on the part of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Washington rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I want to see if I can secure time to ask a question of the chairman in charge of the bill (H. R. 12441) in connection with the sundry civil bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is recognized for an hour.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will wait, I would like to make a statement to the House, and then I will yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amended this sundry civil bill, considering its size, perhaps less than any other sundry civil bill has been amended in a great many years. There were 72 amendments. With the exception of three of them, there was none of major importance, considering the matters that we are dealing with in the bill.

They added in round figures about $53,000,000 to the bill. Of that amount $45,000,000 was represented in two items in connection with the shipping program, $25,000,000 being an increase in appropriations and authorizations for the housing of employees incident to their work and $20,000,000 being for transportation purposes in connection with the housing program. There was also added in connection with the program of the Labor Bureau an increase from $1,500,000 to $7,000,000 in connection with the employment of labor.

Those increases made a total of about $52,000,000. The other increases were scattered over a number of items and amounted to not a great deal, the detail of which is set out in the statement and in the report.

The House conferees agreed to the Senate amendment touching the shipping program. In point of fact, the need for these increases had been brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations too late to be considered in connection with the bill, but they were of sufficient importance for the committee to suggest that they be taken up in the Senate committee, where a statement as to the needs could be made and where, if the Senate thought it necessary to make the appropriations, the matter could then be dealt with in conference. The Senate did feel that the increase of $25,000,000 for housing and $20,000,000 for transportation in connection with the housing was warranted.

In point of fact, the testimony before the committee showed that they had already allotted more than the amount of money that had been given them, and that they had not solved the problem and could not solve it for the money that was allowed as the bill passed the House. They also were in doubt as to whether the language that authorized them to deal with this housing program permitted the dealing with it by an increase in the facilities for transportation, and yet it had developed that that was one of the economical and desirable methods.

What was meant by that is this: There are a number of places where, by aiding transportation companies in affording transportation facilities for laborers, they brought into the usable field areas where housing could be obtained that otherwise could not be used by the employees in connection with the work at the shipping plants.

In regard to the labor situation, I would like to state that there has been a very unfortunate condition the country over, known to everybody who has kept up at all with the industrial program that this country was facing. We have had to revolutionize in many particulars the industrial activity of this country. We have had to divert labor that in peace time was employed in work which was much to be desired, and yet which in war times was not permissible if the work of the Nation was to be done in the prosecution of this war. That has resulted in throwing out of adjustment all the old-time conditions in connection with the demand and supply of labor, and with the disruption of the old status grew up a situation of competitive bidding on the part of different departments of the Government and different industries of the country which resulted repeatedly in increasing the price of labor and in causing undue movement and turnover in labor.

Labor agents were going over the country seeking to obtain labor needed by their respective industries, and in order to obtain it outbidding the people where the labor was employed. The result was that there were any number of instances in which war activities had labor taken away for some other war activity, and then in turn outbidding the men who had first outbid them they brought that labor back, and we had the spectacle of dozens and dozens of agencies in this country, some of them governmental agencies, maintaining expensive bureaus to obtain supplies of labor and interfering most seriously with the production of the country by this constant shifting of labor from one center to another. The matter became so acute that it was necessary to take some drastic action by the Government. That action has been taken. The President has issued a proclamation requesting all of the manufacturers of the country after August to desist from endeavoring on their own initiative to obtain laborers, requesting that they apply only to the Government for the labor that may be necessary; and with that order has come a centralization into one source of the entire activities of the Government touching the recruiting of labor. Instead of the ordnance people and the shipping people and numerous other bureaus undertaking to have labor agencies, it has all now been centered in the Department of Labor. Part of that program had come into existence at the time that the hearings were held before the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and for the purpose of establishing governmental agencies looking to the employment of labor and the distribution of it as it might be needed, the sum of $2,000,000 was asked at that time before that committee. The committee reported in favor of $1,500,000, and that amount was acquiesced in by the House and was carried into the bill. After the hearing was had before the House committee, and prior to the hearings before the Senate committee, it was determined not only to centralize the procurement and distribution of labor for governmental purposes in one department, but there was determined upon the cessation on the part of individual manufacturers of any effort to obtain labor.

That meant a tremendous enlargement of the field of activities that had to be occupied by the Department of Labor in connection with the mobilization and distribution of labor. Accordingly, they asked an additional amount of $7,600,000, which amount was allowed by the Senate committee and approved by the Senate. The matter then went into conference. The conferees have agreed on a sum of $5,500,000. It was strenuously insisted on the part of the Senate conferees that the entire amount requested was needed. I believe the House conferees have an appreciation of this problem. It is in some respects the greatest problem that confronts this Nation, and upon its correct solution depends absolutely the full carrying out of the plans of the Government in the prosecution of this war.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I should like to conclude my general statement and then I will be glad to yield.

The House conferees would not in any way minimize the importance of the work to be undertaken, and we have agreed to that part of the Senate amendment which carries some legislation looking to the enforcement of the determination that will be arrived at by the War Labor Policies Board touching the amounts of money that should be paid. That will be found in this language:

Provided, That no money now or hereafter appropriated for the payment of wages not fixed by statute shall be available to pay wages in excess of the standard determined upon by the War Labor Policies Board.

The reason for that is not only to provide agencies for getting labor but to see to it that when a scale is agreed upon as a result of the activities of the War Labor Policies Board it shall not then be disregarded by any department of the Government in any way, so as to provide absolutely that the bidding of department against department shall cease and that the zeal of men to accomplish their particular work shall not carry them away from a national policy, to the detriment of the work of other departments and of other men.

Touching the amount of money that was needed by the Department of Labor in establishing agencies, there was, of course, room for difference of opinion, and, as I stated, the Senate insisted that the full amount of $7,600,000 should be allowed. We believed that it was impossible to spend that amount of money wisely at once in connection with this work, and that if we were mistaken in that view the situation could be readily met by Congress at its next session, but that to give now the total amount asked was to invite an expenditure that in every instance would not be wise. It is one thing to establish agencies; it is another thing to consider that it is necessary to have an agency started everywhere with paid employees for the carrying out of the work. My own belief is—and I hope it will be the policy of Mr. Densmore, who has charge of this employment department—that there can be obtained in every State of this Union men of very great capacity who will gladly give their services in connection with the carrying out of this most important work in their respective States, just as they have done it in connection with the Food and the Fuel Administrations, and that thereby we will get men of a caliber, experience, and talent that can not be hoped for at salaries which the Government could or would pay, and that then, under these men, can be put such paid employees as are necessary to do the merely clerical work in connection with the carrying out of the program. We therefore insisted upon a reduction of the amount. We might have been willing to go lower than the amount stated, but the amount that has been fixed was the one finally agreed upon between the conferees of the two Houses after several days of very strenuous discussion touching the matter.

Mr. NOLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield first to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], and then I will yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I should like to inquire in reference to the standardization of wages. I have gathered from the gentleman's very clear and full statement that the activities of this branch of the Department of Labor extend over three things: First, the procuring and regulating of employees for Government work; second, the procuring and regulating of employees for private manufacturing concerns; and third—and this the gentleman has not touched upon, but it is suggested by the language of the bill—the standardization of wages. It is proposed by this that the War Labor Policies Board shall have the power, if it finds wages paid in any particular place not high enough in their judgment, to have hearings and raise the wages?

Mr. SHERLEY. It would have the power to fix the wage that should be paid by any governmental agency engaged in governmental work, the idea being that where the work was similar in character, instead of leaving the wages to vary, as they have in the past, to standardize them.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If that is to be done, and I am willing to admit that it is highly important work and ought to be done, the idea of it is an extremely difficult thing to carry out, and the board having it in charge should be composed of the highest type of men. Can the gentleman inform the House as to the character of the men which will compose it?

Mr. SHERLEY. The board is composed of representatives of the Shipping Board, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Railroad Administration, and the Agricultural Department.

I say to the gentleman that Mr. Densmore, who has charge of these employment agencies in the mobilization of labor, has nothing directly to do with the War Labor Policies Board, except that it is expected that through his agency he will be able to give to the board information as to rates of wages, conditions of labor, and supply of labor to aid them in the administration of their problem.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the board is to have charge, as indicated by the gentleman, of labor in Government work and practically of private manufacturers, that pretty nearly gives Government control of the labor of the country.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course they have no power to determine by any legislation here or elsewhere the wage that shall be paid by private establishments. They can indirectly effect it, of course. The President has no power under the proclamation to compel the private manufacturers to secure such labor as they desire through governmental agency.

But the President has requested it by proclamation, and I have no doubt that the patriotism of the employees generally will cause them to acquiesce in the proclamation issued. He has of course indirect power. The Government by virtue of its control over priority, over fuel, over material needed by the manufacturers, can interfere with manufacture by denying them the fuel or material they want, and they could very easily be compelled to acquiesce in the policy of the Government. In point of fact, there is no doubt in my mind that we have reached the point where there will have to be a very marked curtailment of the activities of manufacturers engaged in nonessential manufactures.

I called attention on this floor a few days after the war was declared to the fact that "business as usual," which was the cry that went up in England when the war broke out, which was the cry that was echoed here in America, was a vicious cry, and that it could not be permitted to be the policy of the Nation if we were to do the real work of winning this war.

The industrial capacity of America is not equal to the burden of carrying on the tremendous work of the Nation in prosecuting this war, and at the same time carry on a lot of industries that were perfectly proper in normal peace times, but which now can only exist at the expense of the efficiency of the Nation. The only mistake we have made has been a mistake in delay in enforcing that policy, just as we are going to be forced to the other policy of heavy taxation, that I at the same time spoke of, if we are to preserve the credit of this Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. One question more. The result of this would be that the Government board would practically fix the wages of labor throughout the United States.

Mr. SHERLEY. I hope that will be true.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. NOLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. NOLAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asked the question if this would not be a standardizing of wages in the war industries. The chairman is aware of the fact that in the shipyards the wages are standardized from the Pacific to the Atlantic coast?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. NOLAN. And along that line the effort is to standardize wages.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is an extension of that idea.

Mr. NOLAN. One other question: In relation to the State agencies for cooperation, the gentleman is aware of the fact that quite a number of men are directors in the United States employment that are not under salary?

Mr. SHERLEY. There are some, but as far as possible we ought to obtain in each State men of the first caliber of ability to administer this important work in these respects.

Mr. NOLAN. I call attention to the fact that in California we have a State employment service which is cooperating with the United States employment service.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is one reason why we did not think that they needed $7,500,000. This is as much money as is being given to the entire Food Administration, and is considerably more money than is given to the Fuel Administration.

We thought it was a false perspective that could lead to a belief that so much money was required for this work at this time.

Mr. NOLAN. Although the gentleman understands that their work is being extended into almost every avenue?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do so understand it.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman has touched on what I was going to ask. I would like to ask him, more definitely, whether it is the intention of this War Labor Policies Board to standardize or attempt to standardize, by moral suasion or otherwise, the wages of men employed in private factories throughout the country?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think it is, and I think it is necessary if the scheme is to go through. If you are to have private establishments paying a higher wage, and by a higher wage bidding against the Government, to that extent you are going to have interference with Government work.

Mr. MAPES. This board will attempt to increase the wages where the board thinks the wages are too low and to lower them where it thinks the wages are too high?

Mr. SHERLEY. Perhaps I can answer that by saying they propose to standardize the wages.

Mr. MADDEN. They will not lower them.

Mr. SHERLEY. I hope they will standardize them both ways where the facts warrant it.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Miss RANKIN. Will this board attempt to standardize the wages of Government employees when those wages have been fixed by statute?

Mr. SHERLEY. It could not. Where the wages have been fixed by statute, the statute controls.

Miss RANKIN. And could the board go into bureaus and departments and standardize the wages there?

Mr. SHERLEY. I presume, where those wages are the result not of statute but of agreement, it could; but I say in answer to the lady's inquiry that that is not the real problem confronting the Government. It is a negligible problem compared with the real problem of wages in industry.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am sure that the entire membership of the House appreciates the hard and heavy work done by the Committee on Appropriations. The statement just made by the chairman with regard to the Labor Utilities Bureau is of great importance, and is of interest to all of us. It will be read with interest by the people of the entire Nation. The Committee on Appropriations has had much work to do in connection with the war. It has had to name appropriations without stint for actual war work, and it has had to stand firm against demands for appropriations on account of "near" war work. And then it had to examine all the other requests for appropriations for the general expenditures of the Government—a much wider range than the public generally understands. This will be made quite clear when I ask the chairman, after he has just finished the statement he has made, in regard to a minor item, amendment numbered 45, inserted by the Senate, providing that the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $75,000 made in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1918 for Mount Rainier National Park shall be made available for the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason the House did not carry that item was because the testimony before the committee was that prior to the 1st of July the park authorities would have expended the money. The Senate was misinformed as to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is, the park board found a chance to expend the money prior to the 1st of July of this year?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There is another amendment, No. 28, to which I desire to direct attention, the insertion of the words "and cut-over timberlands" in regard to an appropriation of $100,000 respecting investigations concerning the reclaiming of swamp lands.

Mr. SHERLEY. The difference between the Senate and the House was this: The House inserted language, which I explained at the time the bill was pending, for the purpose of having an investigation made by the Reclamation Service touching lands that by drainage could be made usable, and concerning which it might be desirable to have drained in order to give to returning soldiers a field of useful activity. The Senate committee cut that out, but on the floor an amendment was offered and agreed to substantially the same as the House amendment, except that it made clear that such investigation and survey should be not only of lands that might be reclaimed by drainage, but also of cut-over lands, and provided that the survey should be under the Secretary of the Interior. The House agreed to the Senate amendment with this change only: That it should be, as it had been in the House provision, under the head of the Reclamation Service.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me call attention to the fact that a large part of the cut-over lands and, of course, all of those owned by the Government are in the forest reserves, and the forest reserves are under control of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is nothing here that interferes with the survey of those lands, and all that is provided is a survey.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And it can be carried into the forest-reserve projects?

Mr. SHERLEY. It can be anywhere in the United States.

By unanimous consent, Mr. JOHNSON of Washington was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WALDOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. WALDOW. Do I understand the gentleman correctly to make the statement that the bill carries $53,000,000 in addition to the amount carried by the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. SHERLEY. I could not give to the gentleman the amount exactly, because I have had very little time to verify my memory, but the Senate added approximately $53,000,000, and we have cut out of that something like $3,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to amendment No. 33, which has to do with the Bureau of Mines. We have heard much in the House recently of the need of controlling platinum. I notice that the second part of this amendment places platinum and the compounds of platinum, under the terms, conditions, and limitations of the act of October last, under the Bureau of Mines. Will the gentleman explain the real purpose and need of that special provision?

Mr. SHERLEY. Platinum is a very necessary mineral in connection with the manufacture of high explosives, and in some of the processes used platinum is a necessary agent for the reduction of nitrogen into such inactive form as makes it usable in connection with explosive manufactures. It was believed that the law should be plain to embrace within its scope platinum and its derivatives and compounds.

Mr. Speaker, there is one other matter I desire to call to the attention of the House, because it was a subject of some controversy when the bill was before the House, and that is the appropriation in connection with wages that are to be paid plate printers and other employees in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The House increased the appropriation for the purpose of increasing the wages in regard to the employees other than plate printers $91,600. The Senate gave the entire amount which had been sent as a supplemental estimate by the Treasury Department after the agitation on the part of the employees touching the wage. The conferees have agreed to an additional increase of $69,400, making a total increase of $160,000 for employees other than plate printers. As to plate printers, the House agreed to an increase of $100,000 in appropriation for the purpose of increasing their pay, and the Senate increased it considerably. The conferees have added $70,000 to the House sum, so that there is now an increase of $170,000 for such purposes, making a total of $330,000 of increase as against $669,718, which was submitted in the supplemental estimate of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. I can only repeat what I said on the floor, that in my judgment the House amount was a sufficient amount to increase the pay of the lower-paid employees to $2.24 a day, exclusive of the $120 general increase. The amount now carried will enable them to be paid very considerably more than that amount.

Mr. SANFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. SANFORD. I notice by amendment No. 63 that the Senate provided $30,000 for extra Capitol policemen, and provided that the appointments shall be made solely on account of efficiency and special qualifications, and shall not be in patronage. Do I understand that the House conferees insisted that the Capitol police jobs shall be in patronage?

Mr. SHERLEY. They did not.

Mr. SANFORD. I see in the conference-report agreement those words were stricken out.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will tell the gentleman why. We provided that the appointment of those extra police should be under the Sergeant at Arms of the respective Houses and the Superintendent of the Capitol, Mr. Elliott Woods. They have been employing such extra police for some time past under a special fund that has been in charge of Mr. Elliott Woods, and men have been appointed solely on the ground of efficiency. That policy is to be maintained, and the only reason we struck out the language was that we did not feel that the provision should carry legislative language that seemed to be a reflection upon the respective bodies. For myself I do not believe that any one of those men ought to be or will be appointed for any other reason than his efficiency, and I am pronounced in the belief that they ought not to be and will not be made the subject of patronage on the part of membership of either the House or the Senate, and I do not think it was seemly to carry that sort of language in the report.

Mr. SANFORD. Does the gentleman think, and does the committee think, that it is unseemly for the respective bodies to run their business on the patronage system? For instance, the Capitol police always have been run under the patronage system.

Mr. SHERLEY. The question of the regular police is not involved in this amendment at all. I will say to the gentleman there is nothing here that is going to be done that looked to doing anything more than obtaining necessary efficient employees for the protection of the Capitol at this time.

Mr. SANFORD. That will be a new departure, absolutely.

Mr. SHERLEY. That statement involves a number of matters that we might discuss had we more time, both in regard to the present situation and that which obtained in the days when the gentleman's party was in control.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. DEWALT. The large industrial centers of the country being so vitally interested in regard to this question of the turnover of the employment of labor, I would like the gentleman to state whether I am correct in my figures, namely, that the Senate amendment, to wit, $7,600,000, was cut by the conference committee to $5,500,000.

And there was a tentative understanding, as I gathered from the gentleman's remarks, that if this Employment Service Bureau hereafter should by affirmative proof show that their necessities were larger they would be listened to patiently as well as affirmatively.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, we are not going to have closed minds on this or any other thing. We are inviting this bureau to exercise the economy which should characterize all bureaus, and believe that they have all the money that is needed; but if we are mistaken in that fact I hope we will be big enough to readjust our minds to that fact.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. ROBBINS. I am very much interested in the housing proposition, and I listened with great interest to the gentleman's statement. In this second allotment to be made under the appropriations under this bill is there any change in the method of applying and distributing to the various industrial communities of the country greater housing accommodations for war purposes?

Mr. SHERLEY. This relates only to the Shipping Board problem. The committee has pending in connection with the deficiency bill an estimate of $100,000,000 for the Department of Labor in connection with the housing problem generally outside of the Shipping Board's field.

Mr. ROBBINS. I was very much concerned lest this would not reach the interior points.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is pending before the committee an estimate submitted by the Department of Labor, and advocated by Mr. Eidlitz, of $100,000,000.

Mr. ROBBINS. And that will take care of these industrial centers in the interior of the country?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is what it is intended for.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I used?

The SPEAKER. Thirty-five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I make an inquiry of the gentleman? I understand the lady from Montana is very anxious to have 10 minutes on a matter in which she is deeply interested.

Mr. SHERLEY. I hope to be able to yield to the lady, although not that much time, but as much time as I can. I am under promise to expedite this bill, and minutes are precious in these closing days, and I know that she will appreciate that.

Mr. GILLETT. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no desire to deny time. I hoped not to take all the time that I have taken in making my statement.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I still think the lady from Montana should have 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has only 25 minutes remaining.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] 15 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, when the sundry civil bill was brought into the House I called attention to the very extraordinary character of this legislation. It provides for the activities of the Federal Government, as I then said, from the Virgin Islands to the Philippines, from Panama to the farthest reaches of the North Pacific. Its items relate to the activities of the Federal Government in all of the territory between these widely separated points where the flag floats and where the Federal Government exercises control. The bill is unusually large; necessarily so, in these times of war. But in making up the bill originally every activity of the Federal Government other than those vital to the war and its successful prosecution was trimmed as closely as the committee was justified in trimming it, not to do actual harm and injury to any necessary work in progress. In view of this fact, in view of the fact that the committee were under obligations to keep all of the appropriations for activities not absolutely essential to the prosecution of the war as low as possible, I think the work of the committee and the judgment of the House in support of it are fully sustained in the fact that this bill, carrying a multitude of items of great importance, was amended in so few particulars by the Senate. After a perfectly friendly and harmonious conference the House yielded only on a few items, the more important of which had to do with matters with regard to which the House was not fully informed at the time the bill passed, and relative to which the House committee believed there was a probability of the necessity of considerable increases. The major increases, amounting to $45,000,000, as has already been stated by the chairman of the committee, relate to housing and transportation activities of the Shipping Board. When the bill passed the House it seemed altogether probable that larger sums than those allowed in the House bill would be necessary for these purposes.

After the bill passed the House there came the President's order enlarging the activities of the newly formed Bureau of Employment in the Department of Labor. As one of the House conferees, I shared the opinion of my colleagues that, while there was clearly a necessity for increased appropriations to meet the new activities, the sum that had been requested was unnecessarily large. We did not feel it wise to invite extravagant expenditures at the beginning of the expansion of this very important work, and I am of the opinion that the sum agreed upon will be abundant for the work during the fiscal year. If it is not, Congress will be in session and can make further provisions.

The hearings both in the House and in the Senate relative to the condition of labor in the country emphasized the evils that have been wrought by the constant competition of one Federal activity against another in bidding for labor. This had not been in the interest of labor in the main, for while it had raised wages temporarily at certain points, many of those employments were temporary and a large part of the time of certain classes of labor was spent in joy riding from one place of employment to another. So that it is very doubtful if labor received as large a reward during the period covered by these pullings and haulings hither and yon as it would have received had it remained at its original employment. The worst offenders in this matter were not the Government bureaus themselves, much as they offended, but the so-called cost-plus contractors. They had absolutely no conscience. It was apparently entirely immaterial to them what a work cost, what salaries were paid, how high the expense of an operation ran. A project estimated to cost $21,000,000, like the Hog Island shipyard, for instance, will eventually cost $55,000,000, at least, and others of these activities in proportion.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Does that mean without any amplification in the original project?

Mr. MONDELL. I think there is some amplification in the Hog Island project that would perhaps account for two or three millions of that sum. I should say that one might say very conservatively that the increase was from $21,000,000 to $51,000,000 or $52,000,000 for the original plan. This enormous increase was largely due to failure on the part of the contractors to conduct their enterprise in a businesslike way and in their reckless bidding against all others in the attempt to secure labor. This competitive bidding went on in many instances when these enterprises actually had more men on their work than they could keep properly employed. In the case of Hog Island it was reported by officials in charge on behalf of the Federal Government that during a very considerable period of time there was not over 25 to 30 per cent of labor efficiency; that for certain periods not over a third of the men were given an opportunity to work. They were there in such numbers and material was so delayed and the work so badly organized that they could not be given employment. It was largely these cost-plus contractors that kept labor drifting and shifting from one part of the country to the other, without benefit to labor and to the very great detriment to the interests of the country. This has ceased to a certain extent, owing to orders that have been issued touching those matters, and we hope that it will be further cured through the activities of this bureau.

I do not anticipate that these gentlemen will accomplish as much as they hope for or expect, but it is well that their hopes are high and that they expect to accomplish a very great deal. Otherwise they would accomplish but very little, for the task is an enormous one, and I hope it will be performed to the benefit of the country. While we support this appropriation, we of the minority can not overlook the fact that this Labor Employment Bureau can be made a mighty engine to help in making the country safe for Democratic candidates.

If we were disposed to be captious and suspicious we might with reason claim that the hope of political advantage through the appointment of thousands of "deserving Democrats" to carry on active political work at public expense was one of the controlling reasons for asking for these large appropriations.

I do not make that charge; and yet I realize that there is great temptation to use these great lump-sum appropriations which are granted and the tens of thousands of men who will be appointed under them for political purposes. Notwithstanding this danger, we of the minority are faithfully supporting these activities of the Government, realizing that whatever political activity there may be in connection with them will be for the benefit of the Democrats.

We have now the great organizations of the Federal Food and Fuel Administrations, the Committee on Public Information, the increased activities of the Agricultural, Interior, Commerce, and other departments, nation-wide and liberally endowed, and to these we now add the nation-wide Labor Employment Bureau. All these could be utilized tremendously for political purposes. I fear they will be to a large extent, but we support them, notwithstanding, as a part of a general plan believed to be helpful in the winning of the war.

If anything further were necessary to prove the unwavering fidelity of the Republican Members of Congress to every object and purpose claimed or hoped to be useful in the prosecution of the war, it is found in their support of vast appropriations to be used in building up great nation-wide organizations like the Bureau of Public Information and the Food, Fuel, and Labor Employment Bureaus, which can and may be used to further the political interests of the party in power. I would support these activities so far as I believe them essential, though I believed they would be used to a certain extent for political purposes; but I suggest to my Democratic friends that they may easily overdo these things. I do not believe the people will tolerate an extensive use of appropriations and patronage for political purposes in this time of war if they become fully aware of it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are some items in this bill relating to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, with regard to which there has been some difference of opinion and some controversy. The House subcommittee took up the matter of increased wages for the low-paid employees of the bureau. No estimates had been made contemplating any increase. I do not say that in criticism of anyone. But that was the situation with regard to the original estimates. Estimates to cover increased wages were invited, and a hearing of the employees was had. The House gave the bureau in the items covering these employments what they believed was a sufficient sum to advance the low-paid employees in the amounts which it had been suggested they were entitled to.

There were some who did not believe the sum allowed was sufficient to cover the increased wages. The Senate allowed the full amount of the estimates. That not only meant the full amount of the original estimates, which might or might not have been reasonable, but also the full amount of the supplemental estimates, and of course the committee was forced to take into consideration the whole matter. It was claimed that, while the amount allowed by the House might provide for, and probably would provide for, advancing all of the low-paid employees, it was doubtful if it would also allow an advance above these lowest-paid employees in the various grades running up to the highly skilled employees. In order to make it quite certain that a reasonable sum should be available for that purpose, the House conferees agreed to some considerable increases in both of the two items affecting these employees; increases which, in my opinion, with the repay work, are abundant to provide the increases that have been suggested and to give to these employees whose pay has been unquestionably too low a very considerable increase. The House expects those increases to be made, and believes there are abundant sums provided for making those increases.

Mr. Speaker, other than these items to which I have referred, the amendments of the Senate are in the main not particularly material. The conferees of the House were in full agreement in all the matters in conference, as they were originally in the making up of the bill. We believe that the sundry civil bill, as now presented to the House, takes care of every war industry provided for in the bill abundantly, provides for every other useful activity of the Government appropriated for in the bill reasonably, and will afford abundant funds with which to pay the increased salaries and wages contemplated in certain cases and keep the wheels of Government running smoothly, so far as they receive lubrication from this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SISSON). The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, the lady from Montana takes up so little of the time of the House and I take so much that I suggest that the gentleman from Kentucky yield to her my time.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield the lady five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The lady from Montana is recognized for five minutes.

Miss RANKIN addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say just this in reply: Any basis of estimate upon repay work that places it at $40,000 is so necessarily erroneous as to make the calculation all out of line, and that must be apparent to anybody who knows the expenses of the Government now as compared with the expenditures heretofore.

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Four minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Could unanimous consent be given for five minutes, not to be taken out of the hour, so as to leave the gentleman from Kentucky four minutes?

Mr. SHERLEY. In the closing days when we have so much to do I do not think it is fair to the House to enlarge the time for the discussion of a matter that is settled. I do not understand that the lady from Montana [Miss RANKIN] desires to make any motion, so that this discussion leads nowhere. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] if he desires any time out of the four minutes remaining?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; if I may have it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETTE], reserving a quarter of a minute to myself in which to make a motion.

Mr. GILLETT. Inasmuch as very often in past years when coming out of conferences on this sundry civil bill, which covers all the various interests of the country, I have had occasion to criticize the Senate for what I thought was their loading up of the bill with matters for their personal and local interests rather than for the good of the whole country, I wish to say that I am very happy that in this instance I can, on the contrary, commend them, and state that they have departed from what I sometimes thought was their custom, and they have recognized the emergency of war times and have to a large extent ignored their individual interests, so that this bill deals mainly with the interests of the whole country and is not blotted with the perquisites of individual Senators. I wish to say a few words about what, it seems to me, is the most serious and far-reaching item in this whole bill, this appropriation for the marshaling of the labor of the country. I doubt if the Members of the House appreciate what a tremendous innovation that is touching all our industrial forces. If it is carried out as the Senate hearings indicate is the intention of the Labor Industries Board, it really means that all the labor of this country is going to be held in the grasp of this board. As a member of the minority I am not blind to the political possibilities of such a tremendous engine, reaching all over the country, with its branches in every State and in every considerable city, and influencing all labor; but I appreciate that we have shut our eyes, or at least we have taken our chances already on many such opportunities, and I am ready here to hope again that the administration will not take the advantage which is so completely put in their power to make it a political engine. But whether they do or not, I believe some such organization is indispensable for war production, and no matter what its political results I favor it. But aside from the political possibilities, the operation of this new bureau excites some apprehension. It is incumbent upon us to try it; but it strikes me that the great difficulty is going to be, not in the employment feature of the provision, but in the wage feature of it, in the standardization of wages. While the provision preventing wages to be paid in the different departments above the amount fixed by this bureau controls the Government offices, it does not in the slightest degree affect private individuals, and there, it seems to me, will come the difficulty. Of course, the Government itself has had the power to remedy that in the past, but it has not been done. We have seen constantly one bureau here in Washington bidding against another for labor. I remember an instance when the Navy Department took men from the Superintendent of the Capitol, paying bricklayers $8 a day where they had been paid $6 a day. That is simply a specimen of the way different departments have bid against one another. Of course, it was inevitable. Each department feels the urgency of its work and is a little reckless as to how it shall carry it out. It does not consider much the relative importance of the work of other departments, but bends all its energies to get its own work accomplished, and the others do the same, and so there has ensued reckless competition and bidding against each other for labor. The administration has seemed powerless to prevent that, even right here in Washington, and my fear is that when it starts out to prevent it throughout the country by private as well as Government employers, it will find it has tackled a problem too vast for it effectively to cope with. But I believe something of this sort must be done. I have not been able to think out a better plan, and so I indorse this with best wishes for its mastery of a most difficult and intricate problem.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing certain correspondence with Col. Myron M. Parker, of Washington, in regard to certain statements made in debate on the floor here.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman from Vermont to include in his request that I also be permitted to insert a letter from Mr. Brownlow, one of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and some remarks by myself, to be printed alongside of the matter that the gentleman from Vermont will print in the RECORD.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is only fair, Mr. Speaker, and I am quite content to have such an understanding.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, is this matter of such a public character that it ought to be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is my purpose in asking to have it printed.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that the gentleman from Vermont would not take up the time of the House or the pages of the RECORD with any private affair relating to the Green Mountain State. I will inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky, if the gentleman from Vermont can not furnish the information, whether the correspondence which he seeks to put in the RECORD is of such a public character that the Membership of the House will be interested in it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is a matter of a public nature. I made some remarks the other day, and in those remarks I mentioned the name of Col. M. M. Parker. He has written a letter to the gentleman from Vermont asking that his letter be inserted in the RECORD. I am perfectly willing that that shall be done if I can follow with a letter from the Commissioner of the District, with some remarks of my own.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a matter of crimination and recrimination of remarks that have heretofore taken place.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I started to explain at the outset that this refers to a matter in debate on the floor involving a former constituent of mine who has no Representative in Congress and who desires to have his explanation made a part of the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. If I had heard the gentleman's original remark, I would not have arisen to reserve an objection, but he was speaking in that subdued tone that he sometimes uses, and I did not hear him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont and the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1919, and for other purposes, had further insisted upon its amendments still in disagreement, and asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. GALLINGER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF TIME OF FEDERAL CONTROL OF RAILROADS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk began the reading of House resolution 407.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee (interrupting). Mr. Speaker, if I may interrupt, this is a privileged resolution, and yet I understand that the gentleman who objected to unanimous consent yesterday in the consideration of this joint resolution reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has now no objection to it. So, in order to save time, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order to consider immediately House joint resolution 303.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 303. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 303) to extend the time within which the President may relinquish control of any railroad or system of transportation, as provided in section 14 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, to January 1, 1919.

Whereas it was provided in section 14 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, "that the President may, prior to July 1, 1918, relinquish control of all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation, further Federal control of which the President shall deem not needful or desirable"; and

Whereas it has been found that it can not be determined by July 1, 1918, whether certain railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control are needful or desirable for the successful operation of the railroads during Federal control: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the time within which the President may relinquish control of all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation, further Federal control of which the President shall deem not needful or desirable, as provided in section 14 of said act, be, and it is hereby, extended to, and including, January 1, 1919.

With the following committee amendment:

Add, at the end of the resolution, the following:

"Provided, however, That the right conferred upon the President to relinquish prior to July 1, 1918, control of all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation without consent of the carrier as provided in section 14 of an act approved March 21, 1918, entitled 'An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes,' which right is herein extended to and inclusive of January 1, 1919, shall not be construed to include any railroad engaged as common carrier in general transportation such as mentioned in section 1 of said act, not owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company and which has heretofore competed for traffic with any railroad or railroads of which the President has taken and retained the possession, use, and control, it being the intent of Congress that every railroad not owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company and which has heretofore competed for traffic with a railroad or railroads which the President has taken and retains the possession, use, or control, or which connects with such railroad and is engaged as a common carrier in general transportation shall be held and considered as within Federal control as defined in said act and to be entitled to the benefits of all the provisions of said act so long as the railroad or railroads with which it has heretofore competed for traffic or with which it connects shall be retained under Federal control."

Mr. RUCKER took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the two preambles to this resolution state the reasons given by the administration for asking for this extension of time. While it says "railroads," its practical application will be to the so-called short-line railroads that were brought under Government control by what was known as the Cummins amendment, an amendment offered in the Senate to the railroad-control bill and which amendment when the bill reached the House was concurred in by a vote of the House. Consequently, as far as the Cummins amendment is concerned, it did not go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The Railroad Administration states that inasmuch as practically every one of the short lines differs in conditions from every other short line, depending upon its relation to the trunk lines or connecting lines, it is necessary to consider the special facts and circumstances in the case of each one of these lines. The time they have had has been used up in doing that which was absolutely necessary to do in order to have a standard form of contract for all railroads under Federal control and they have not had the time necessary to investigate each one of the short lines. They say that the general policy of the Railway Administration has been, as shown by the testimony of Mr. Payne, who was before the committee, to relinquish all railroads that were simply plant facilities. They have relinquished a number of short lines with the consent of the owners of those short lines. But the Railway Administration feel, and so construes the law, that it ought to relinquish all railroads that are not necessary for war purposes, not necessary for the Government to control, in order to better promote the prosecution of the war. And it has asked this further time to consider each individual case and to try, if possible, to have a contract in every case so as not to have to finally resort to the courts to decide what may be demanded as a compensation, and that if these lines are kept by force of law within Government control the lines will have the whip hand of the administration in making these contracts; that they will be under Government control and be where they can not be relinquished at the option of the Government whenever it is found it is not to the advantage of the Government to retain them. I have tried to explain the attitude of the administration in wanting further time. It was said by Mr. Payne, who represents the Railway Administration, that in so far as they have investigated these short lines it believes that if all the short-line railroads that were taken over by virtue of the Cummins amendment were retained it would be a great loss to the Government aggregating in the neighborhood of $20,000,000 per annum, and the administration feels that it ought not to retain them at such an expense to the taxpayers.

On the other side, the short-line people by their representatives have been before the committee and have stated in no uncertain language and in no doubtful terms that by virtue of the Government status, the control, whether exercised or not, has greatly reduced their gross earnings in the time that they have been within Government control. Some of them say that their gross earnings have run down 50 per cent; that the Railway Administration through the local officials have been in its treatment hostile, and has in some instances issued an absolute embargo order against freight being shipped over their roads, while others have refused to route freight over their roads where it was for their advantage not to do so.

Therefore, the short lines, by their representatives, contend that if they are relinquished now without any protecting provisions and not having the same benefits of roads which are retained under Federal control, that many of them will have to cease operation and that the communities they serve will be very greatly damaged, and they state in detail a great number of items of damage that will accrue to them, claiming that it will practically ruin some of the local communities that they serve. They insist that a great injustice will be done them, and that even though there is ultimate loss to the Government they should be retained until their connections are released, or the roads with which they are in competition are relinquished. An amendment was offered in the committee by a member of the committee, as set forth in the resolution as reported.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. What is the status of a line that has already been relinquished or might be before this resolution is agreed to?

Mr. SIMS. That is a very pertinent question, and one as to which, so far as this resolution is concerned, I do not wish to vouchsafe an opinion. When Mr. Payne was before the committee I asked the question, whether if this resolution was passed unamended, and they relinquished a railroad or it had already been relinquished, would they, under the law, have the right to bring back into Government control that relinquished railroad, supposing it was not thought to be necessary at the time of the relinquishment, but it was ascertained afterwards that it might be needed by the Government—whether the Government then, without further legislation, could resume Federal control. He answered that the matter was something about which legal minds differed; that the act of 1916 referred alone to systems of transportation, and if we relinquished these roads and took them from under the operation of the Cummins amendment, not being systems of transportation within the meaning of the original act, it was contended by some legal authorities that the President would not have the power to again resume control under the act of 1916, and having been relinquished under this act, it was a doubtful question, while others contended that the administration would have the right to resume control of any road that was once in the control of the Government.

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. SNOOK. I want to say that when the chairman propounded that question to Mr. Payne, the latter part of the short-line amendment was not then being considered. That was afterwards proposed in the Senate. That part beginning with the word "it," on line 4, page 4, was not in the amendment when Mr. Payne's attention was called to the fact.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNOOK. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is the language of the resolution incapable of being interpreted to carry out the intent of the latter part of it as expressed in the language beginning on page 3, line 4, where it sets forth what the intent of Congress is in passing the resolution? If that language was not in there, would not anyone know what the intent was upon reading the resolution?

Mr. SIMS. Answering for myself I would think there would be no question about it.

Mr. WALSH. We have had about forty-seven different varieties of legislative language used during this session, and if you are going to put a concluding paragraph to each act or resolve stating what the intent of Congress is, it seems to me to be the height of absurdity. We better draft our language so that everybody will know what it is. I want to ask the gentleman if he can not interpret this resolution to mean just what it is stated is the intent of Congress without so expressing it.

Mr. SIMS. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] offered this amendment in the committee, I prefer that he make reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I yield to him.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I think the language is absolutely clear without stating that it is the intent of Congress, and I also think that the language in the original act was clear in section 1, where it says:

That every railroad not owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company, and which has heretofore competed for traffic with a railroad or railroads of which the President has taken the possession, use, and control, or which connects with such railroads and is engaged as a common carrier in general transportation, shall be held and considered as within "Federal control," as herein defined.

And that when the House agreed to that amendment that there was no question but that all of these lines that connected with or competed with another carrier would be taken in, but they have not been.

Mr. WALSH. For the reason that they consider the word "railroad" to mean a system.

Mr. RAYBURN. Not at all. The intent of Congress, I think, was expressed in that, but over here in section 14 they did a very peculiar thing. They vested in the President power to turn them loose before the 1st day of July, and this amendment says that he can not do that if he retains the control of the carrier with which it connects or competes.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the opinion of the chairman of the committee which reports the resolution if it would in any way vitiate this resolution if the phraseology expressing the intent of Congress is stricken from the resolution.

Mr. SIMS. Answering offhand, I would not think it would; but, as I did not offer the amendment, and am not responsible for it, I do not want my interpretation to be regarded as conclusive.

Mr. WALSH. But the gentleman is proposing it, and he has the resolution in charge. He is responsible for the resolution as presented to the House.

Mr. SIMS. The committee adopted the resolution.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts agree that the intent that is declared is unnecessary because the proposed amendment otherwise speaks for itself, and that the intent is evident as contained in the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I understand; but from my reading of the resolution without that as with it, it is giving the authority which is expressed in the intent. It is just mere surplusage, and if to every law we pass we are going to hitch on five or a dozen or two dozen lines saying what the intent of Congress is we are going to be kept busy.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will permit, considering the history of this legislation and the difference of opinion that has been expressed as to what the law now is, does not the gentleman think, from his standpoint it being mere surplusage, that it leaves nothing open for construction, so the declaration of intent leaves nothing for construction?

Mr. WALSH. Then we ought to put in another paragraph and say what the intent of Congress was in putting in a paragraph declaring what the intent of Congress was, and so on.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether it is true, if he knows, that the Railroad Administration yesterday and to-day have rushed out a great number of notices to the short-line railroads notifying them they are cut loose from the national system?

Mr. SIMS. Relinquished?

Mr. CRAMTON. Relinquished.

Mr. SIMS. I have no knowledge on that subject.

Mr. CRAMTON. If that is true, if such notices in numbers are being rushed out yesterday and to-day in the face of the adoption of this resolution, would it not be patent it was the desire of the Railroad Administration to avoid the terms of this resolution?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I think that is an argumentative question and does not need a reply. These relinquishments which the gentlemen have heard of as being sent out may be every one of them confined to railroads not doing a general transportation business and not having connection——

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know, and I am quite curious in reference to the question raised by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] whether by rushing out notices of that kind they can avoid the effect of this resolution.

Mr. SIMS. I could not answer any further than I have.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, a member of the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman does not care to yield at this moment, I will wait until the members of the committee have been heard.

Mr. SIMS. How much time have I consumed?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield before that in order to answer one question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used 17 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The question I want to ask is related to the question asked by the gentleman from Indiana and that is, what would be the effect upon the short-line railroads which were relinquished prior to the adoption of this resolution? I understood the gentleman from Tennessee to state that such short-line railroads as have been relinquished have been relinquished by agreements with the owners of those roads?

Mr. SIMS. Very largely; but I do not think it includes all of them; but I am speaking from recollection.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. There are some that have been relinquished over the protest of those short lines?

Mr. SIMS. Over their own protests. Mr. Speaker, how much time does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire?

Mr. ESCH. I think only five minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, the urgency of this resolution impels me to limit the time I shall occupy in explanation. Now, unless this resolution speedily goes over to the Senate it can not be passed prior to the 1st day of July, when certain provisions of the Federal control act become operative. We had supposed when we enacted the Federal control act, including the Cummins amendment to section 1, that the status of the short-line roads had been clearly defined and fixed. It seems, however, that up to date they do not as yet know their status. In fact, but very few lines that have made applications to be brought under Federal control have had them adjudicated. There have been about 40 short lines which have been released upon their own request. There have been a less number that have been relinquished without their consent. There are about 750 short lines in the United States. They cover 30,000 miles of trackage. The capitalization of those railroads amounts to $2,000,000,000. From those facts you can realize the importance of the problem that is presented. These short lines desire to have a chance to live. We by this legislation wish to give them that chance by saying that they shall be retained under Federal control so long as the lines with which they compete or the roads with which they connect are retained under Federal control. When the trunk line has been relinquished the short line goes with it. The short lines do not object to that situation——

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman give us his view as to the case of the railroad coming within the class he is describing but which has heretofore without its consent and over its protest been relinquished? Will the amendment and resolution be of any benefit to such lines?

Mr. ESCH. Where the line has been relinquished?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; over its protest.

Mr. ESCH. And against its protest?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. In my opinion such roads, once having been relinquished, might apply to the President for reinstatement under the provisions of section 9 of the Federal control act, which provides as follows:

> And the President, in addition to the powers conferred by this act, shall have and is hereby given such other and further powers necessary or appropriate to give effect to the powers herein and heretofore conferred. The provisions of this act also apply to any carrier to which Federal control may hereafter be extended.

The question was put to Mr. Payne, the counsel for the Railroad Administrator, as to whether the power granted in the language I have just read would not permit the agencies of the Government to retake such lines. He did not wish to express an opinion, because he said that it might come up to him in his capacity as legal advisor of the administrator, but he said if for purposes of carrying out the war it became necessary to retake such roads, he would not hesitate to so advise the Director General.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. I will.

Mr. GILLETT. Would it not be true that the most that that would provide would be that the President in his discretion could take it if he wished, but the road would have no right to insist on being taken, so that the roads really would not have the same right as the roads under this resolution would have?

Mr. ESCH. The roads that have been relinquished without their consent are comparatively few in number and are such that they could not be directly useful in the conduct of the war and would be able, perhaps, to conduct their business in a successful manner whether under Government control or not. Now, the purpose of the legislation is to give these short lines, as I said, a chance to live. If it were not for the war, if it were not for the Federal control of carriers, these short-line roads would have continued their existence as before. But the taking over of the trunk lines by the Federal Government has handicapped practically every short-line carrier. It has rendered it almost impossible for some of them to live, because of the reduction in the amount of freight which is given to them to carry, because of the financial difficulties, the difficulties in financing their short-time certificates, securing extensions of their loans from the banks and from other money institutions.

We asked the question whether these short-line railroads, in view of the fact that they would have maturities on the 1st of July, could not go to the War Finance Corporation and get relief. We were told efforts were made by some short lines to get such relief, and such relief had been refused.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. ESCH. So that avenue of financial relief seems to have been closed to the short-line carriers. They could not go to their local banks and get extensions, because extensions to the limit have already been granted of four months and of six months. What are they to do when these certificates become due and they can not finance themselves? Some of these short lines have been struggling along by assuring their creditors that the Federal Government would soon take care of the situation and, by placing them under Federal control, enable them to have opportunity for securing advancements and financial protection.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman please refer to the fact that in the meanwhile the securities of these short-line railroads have depreciated remarkably, and therefore they can not raise money on those securities?

Mr. ESCH. The gentleman has stated a fact that has come to the knowledge of the committee and only reinforces what I am saying in reference to the necessity of taking care of these short lines by extending the period for six months within which their situation can be thoroughly examined and their status finally determined.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman yield a moment to me?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. DILLON. I suggest also to the gentleman that none of these short-line roads have been able to obtain a dollar under the finance-corporation bill.

Mr. ESCH. I have just made that statement. The testimony before the committee is to the effect that, notwithstanding a short line is the direct or shortest route for traffic, the Federal administration has routed the freight over the longer road because the longer road was already under Federal control. That resulted in diminution of the traffic of the short line, and as the short line must live by reason of its freight traffic, local and interline, it is seriously damaged by reason of the operation of the Government itself. I know it has been stated here, and it was the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, when he opposed taking over the short lines, that the Government did not want to take over crippled railroads any more than the Secretary of War wanted to take over cripples for war service. That is true as a statement, but when the Government does the crippling, as it does with reference to these short lines, by routing freight over other lines and discriminating against them so far as freights are concerned, then it is a moral obligation, if not a legal one, for the Federal Government to come to the support of the short lines.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. I will.

Mr. DEWALT. Will not the gentleman state that the original purpose of this legislation was, and the amendment proposed by the short-line people was, that there should be a distribution of freight to them, as they were formerly accustomed to, and a distribution of cars, and that has been taken away from them?

Mr. ESCH. That has resulted in very serious damage to them from a financial standpoint. They have offered a tentative contract to the Director General, and under the terms of that contract they do not ask to have a guaranty of 6 per cent on their capitalization as has been charged in certain quarters. They simply wanted a contract made with the Government which would assure them a larger division of the freight rate, which would insure a fair share of the cars and of the motive power. This to date has been denied many of these short lines, and it has come to a very critical condition with reference to many of them. And unless this relief is extended I look to see many of them in financial straits and some of them placed in bankruptcy, and some of them may have to be scrapped.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I would say to my friend that I have some sympathy with the administration in not wanting to take over any institution that might be a losing one financially. Can we take it from what the gentleman has said that we can attribute, in part at least, the hard financial situation of these short lines to the act of taking over all the railroads over which they themselves had no control?

Mr. ESCH. Yes; in a very large degree. And it is because it is beyond their control that they come to Congress and ask this relief.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. I wish the gentleman would state to the committee as a further persuasive argument that these short lines, so called, have been largely, if not exclusively, built by local capital, and that local capital now holds their bonds and vested securities.

Mr. ESCH. Yes. These bonds are not held to any large extent in Wall Street. They are held in the communities which originally built the roads. The small merchant, the small capitalist, the local bank, and local company hold these securities, and they have already depreciated in value, and unless they are given this protection they will still be more largely diminished in value, to the hurt of thousands who hold these bonds and securities.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Are there any of these short-line roads that were not taken over by the Railroad Administration—by the Government?

Mr. ESCH. We can not get any statistics. We have asked for full information, but it is very difficult to pin the administration down so that it would name the roads.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The reason why I ask the question is that some weeks ago I addressed an inquiry to the Railroad Administration about a certain short-line road that ran through territory in my district. Up to this time I have received no answer as to whether that road is or is not under Federal control. Now, the first part of your resolution, as I understand it, provides that the Government can not relinquish control of these roads, and the latter part of it says that the intent of the act is that all competing roads or short-line roads should be under control of the Government. The question to my mind is whether there are any roads that were not taken over by the Government that would come within the meaning of the first part of the resolution.

Mr. ESCH. I think our committee assumed that they were all taken over, and it was our intent that they should be all taken over under the Cummins amendment to section 1 of the railroad control bill.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And if they were not taken over, under the latter part of the resolution they would be?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Certainly.

Mr. DEWALT. Is it not a fact that in the hearings before the committee it was also disclosed that tentative agreements were offered to the short lines, and that the threat was held out—if I may so call it—that unless the short lines agreed to the proposed bargain they would then be relinquished?

Mr. ESCH. Yes. That appeared in the testimony.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. As I understand it, the intent here is to make mandatory the taking over of the short lines that compete and connect with the other roads?

Mr. ESCH. Yes; mandatory.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Now, then, if in the meantime, before this resolution could pass this House and the Senate, a number or any one of the short-line railroads could be dropped and there would be no recourse unless an amendment here would make it mandatory to take over those that had already been dropped?

Mr. ESCH. Some of them wanted to be dropped.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I mean those who cared to be carried.

Mr. ESCH. I think there are so few cases of that kind, where their status has been finally determined by the Director General's office, that we would not need to offer an amendment to this resolution to cover that.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I am a little apprehensive, because I know of one that has just been hanging by the merest thread for some little time, and the thread might be severed at any moment and we would find ourselves without any relief. Already a line 70 miles in length in my district has been abandoned and is liable to be scrapped. It was built by the local people, and we can not finance it now because of the demands of the Government for all the finances to be concentrated here. I really think it is an important point.

Mr. ESCH. Some criticism has been made of the form of the resolution because it closes with a statement of the express intent of Congress with reference thereto. It is because we were not getting an interpretation of the Federal-control act in consonance with the Cummins amendment to section 1 that we thought we would make it so plain that there could be no doubt as to the will and wish of Congress with reference to the short-line roads.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] have so thoroughly covered this question that I feel that anything I might say would be surplusage now. But a situation has developed with reference to the short-line railroads that I think is sufficiently alarming to warrant us in taking some definite action with reference to it.

It was the intention of the Railroad Administration before our act was passed, and has been since that time, not to retain control of the short-line railroads, and they based their action, since the law was enacted, on that clause that gave the Director General, through the President, the power to release those roads before the 1st day of July. According to my way of looking at this question—and it was my way of looking at this question when it first came up—there were two alternatives. One was that if all the short-line railroads of the country were taken into this system it would make a considerable charge against the Treasury of the United States to operate and maintain them under Federal control. The other was, if the short-line railroads were not taken, it amounted to murder to them, so far as that is concerned.

Now, I think that the small sum—the way we speak of sums at this time—of $20,000,000—and that is the estimate that Mr. Payne, the counsel for the railroad directorate makes, as the charge that would be placed upon the Treasury of the United States for taking over these small competing lines—that sum at this time—$20,000,000—compared with the destruction of nearly $2,000,000,000 worth of property, is a small thing indeed in comparison. Not only that, but these people who own the short-line railroads have a great interest in them. They have invested their money in them. They have labored for years and years to build up those short-line railroads. But their interest is not as great or compelling with me as the proposition that people have moved in along these short-line railroads, have established farms, have built up towns and small cities in many instances, have built up factories, and that business must go on if those people do not go into bankruptcy; and they certainly will go into bankruptcy if the Government, since it has taken over the roads with which they compete and with which they connect and which are retained under Federal control, relinquishes control of the short lines.

Now, I believe it was the intent of Congress when it passed the railroad-control act that these short-line railroads were going to be taken into this system. The Railroad Administration is not administering the law from that viewpoint. Hence the amendment that we put on in the committee, which I believe makes it absolute, without any fear whatever, that as long as the line with which these short lines connect and compete are retained under Federal control, these short lines themselves will be retained under Federal control also.

Now, the question came up here a moment ago as to whether a railroad that had already been released from Federal control could come back into the system if this amendment were adopted. I think, whether we adopt this amendment or not, that if we had allowed the President to go on and release the short-line railroads at any time up to the 1st of July there is no question but that the Government could have taken them back under Federal control any time during the life of this law. Now, with this amendment I do not think there is a question in the world but that the lines that have been released before the 1st day of July will be automatically taken back into this system, because the language, it seems to me, is as plain as the English can be written. It goes on to say that the right of the President to relinquish before July 1, and so forth, shall not be construed to include any railroad engaged as a common carrier in general transportation, such as is mentioned in section 1 of said act, not owned, controlled, or operated by another common carrier. It seems to me that that language makes it absolutely certain that these railroads come back automatically under Federal control where they have been released, and that it keeps under Federal control the railroads that have not been released.

Mr. FESS. Is it the gentleman's opinion also that the bad condition of the short-line roads is due largely to recent legislation, by which the Government has taken over the railroads?

Mr. RAYBURN. There is no question about that. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] remarked upon that—about routing freight over other lines that they had definitely taken under Federal control.

Mr. FESS. If that condition were brought about by any private management we would be inclined to give relief here by legislation, would we not?

Mr. RAYBURN. There is no question about it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SNOOK], a member of the committee.

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I had the pleasure of addressing the House upon this subject when the railroad legislation was first before Congress. At that time I expressed the opinion that there was some doubt in my mind as to the proper treatment that these short-line railroads should receive; but since the enactment of the law for Federal control I have had occasion to study the question at first hand by talks with those administering railroad affairs, by observing how it worked when applied to a railroad in our own district, and by talking with other men who have been interested in the short-line railroads. We find this to be a fact: When the Government took over the trunk lines it placed the administration of all the railroad affairs in the hands of men who have heretofore been dealing with trunk-line affairs, and therefore the freight that formerly was routed over the short-line roads was nearly all diverted to the trunk lines. We also find by a study of the question and by talking with the men interested in the short lines that there has been a loss in the receipts of nearly every short-line railroad of from 50 to 75 per cent. That has been the result on the short lines that have not been taken over by the Government.

It shows that if we continue our present policy it will result in the destruction of nearly all these railroads, because they can not survive a loss of 50 per cent of their income, which was all too small to begin with. Although shippers may route their freight over these short-line railroads, the management disregards that routing and ships the freight over the trunk lines, where formerly it was accustomed to be shipped over these short lines.

Then we find another thing that stands in the way of their successful operation, and that is the thing to which the gentleman from Wisconsin has referred. That is the question of finance. The Government has taken over the other lines and left these lines without the protection offered by the law providing for governmental control; therefore they are unable to secure financial aid. These two things, the loss of business and the loss of power to secure financial aid when their obligations are falling due, make it almost certain that they can not be longer operated and that they will be compelled to cease operation and be sold for scrap. Now, what does that mean? There are 765 of them. Many of them run through the very best country in America. It means that the people living along these lines, who have established elevators and manufacturing plants and towns and cities, will be without railroad facilities. We are spending millions of dollars a year to improve the rivers and harbors of the country; we have spent millions in the improvement of the Ohio River in the last 25 years. I am convinced that the loss to the people of my State in one year will be greater if the traffic on the short-line roads is suspended than would be caused by the loss of all the traffic carried on the Ohio River in 10 years. [Applause.]

I want to call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Massachusetts has made some criticism of this amendment, especially of the last paragraph.

In view of the construction that the Railroad Administration put upon the original act, to my mind it is absolutely necessary that the last paragraph of this amendment be retained if we expect to accomplish what we are setting out to do. Judge Paine, on page 9 of the hearings, was asked the question whether he thought the short-line railroads were taken over under the original act. I did not have time to read all he said, but he replied in substance that a short-line road not forming a part of a system of transportation may properly be held not to be included within the purview of an act which gives the President the power to take over systems of transportation. This shows that the Railroad Administration is inclined to take the position that under the terms of the law as it now stands there is doubt on this subject, and is also inclined to hold that it is not compelled by this act to take over the short-line railroads. So this makes it necessary to write into the law something that will make it plain, that those administering the law will understand that it is the intention of Congress that these railroads, whether they have heretofore been taken over and relinquished or whether they are now being operated under Federal control, are to be retained and given the benefit of all the provisions in the original railroad act. I believe when Congress adopted the Cummins amendment, when the original act was passed, it was the belief of most Members that this settled the short-line question. But we see that it did not settle it. The attitude which those in authority assume in my judgment makes it necessary to adopt that part of the amendment which reads as follows:

It being the intent of Congress that every railroad not owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company and which has heretofore competed for traffic with a railroad or railroads which the President has taken and retains the possession, use, or control, or which connects with such railroad and is engaged as a common carrier in general transportation, shall be held and considered as within Federal control as defined in said act and to be entitled to the benefits of all the provisions of said act so long as the railroad or railroads with which it has heretofore competed for traffic or with which it connects shall be retained under Federal control.

The reasons for the adoption of this amendment are many. The fact that the Government is prescribing what may be shipped and how and when any commodity may be transported, and over what routes all shipments shall be made has worked to the advantage of the railroads under Government control and has deprived those not under control of so much of the business they formerly enjoyed that many of them find it impossible to continue operation under such conditions.

I wish to call the attention of the House to several statements on the question made by Mr. Ben B. Cain to our committee during the hearings on this subject. Mr. Cain made a very clear statement of the reasons why this amendment should be adopted, and the quotations which I make from his statement I regard as being especially in point:

We thought that the reasons were sufficient. First, there was the practical reason. We believed that these railroads do serve a useful purpose in the winning of the war. The transportation machine is not alone useful for the purpose of moving men and ammunition. The man in the front-line trenches or behind the cannon over yonder is not the only man necessary for the winning of this war. Behind the Army are the men and the women and children at home. We believe that the short roads should be retained under the absolute control of the Director General, so that they may be utilized and their activities directed as the men in uniform under the direction of the War Department are moved here and there in the great struggle in which we are engaged. And so we said to the Director General upon practical grounds, in order that these short-line properties might function as units in the great transportation machine, that they ought to be preserved; they ought to be put under the power of the Director General for these reasons: That he might exercise the right, as to prescribing priorities of shipment, the right of directing embargo, the right of pooling railroad equipment regardless of ownership, the necessity of coordinating the handling of labor conditions, the importance of precluding the possibility of a conflicting and destructive jurisdiction between State and National railroad commissions and the Federal Railroad Administration, and the necessity of the elimination of waste in the Nation's resources.

And then we gave another reason which applies to the roads themselves, and that is the credit or the financial reason. We said to him in this letter: "Financing has been made impossible. Government loans have preempted banking facilities of the Nation, with the bare exception of commercial transactions based on paper discountable under the rules of the Federal reserve banks. Short-line railroad securities in the amount of thousands of dollars are maturing each month, which under present conditions it is impossible to liquidate. State, private, and national banks all over the country are holders of these securities, so that credit has been interned in this manner, and directly and indirectly the peoples of the Nation are suffering."

Then, in conclusion, let me call your attention to a word picture, in which Mr. Cain clearly shows what a calamity will fall on every rural community that is deprived of the service of one of these short-line railroads and left without railroad facilities:

In conclusion, gentlemen, permit me to say to you that there are people along these roads that are in as much suspense as the roads themselves. Eight years ago, when I started to build that road in Texas, I followed the engineer through cattle ranches that had never known a plow and knew but little of civilization. I had not let the contracts and started grading before the covered wagon began to make its appearance along the line, and here and there a man unloaded his family and his all, and struck his tent and began his little house or lived in that tent and opened his farm. One hundred miles of territory that had theretofore been devoted almost exclusively to the cattle business became a somewhat thickly settled agricultural country, because the land was new and unoccupied and because the territory was good. Tenant farmers who had accumulated nothing in the more thickly settled sections of the State and other States came there and bought that land on credit, and I saw, when the wagons would come by, women and children, some of them 14 and 15 years old, and all of their bedding with them; the cow trailing along behind the wagon and the dog under the wagon—all that they had; but they came to a new country determined to build up and own instead of being tenants. And those boys who were 15 or 16 years old went in and took hold of that opportunity with their father and mother and the other children, and helped pay for these homes. Some of them have been paid for and they own them—the first time they ever owned property in their lives.

I saw those boys drafted into the Government service. Some of them came to me and said, "We can not leave the old folks; they haven't quite paid for the farm, and we want to stay here. Can't you help us keep from going into the Army for a time anyhow?" I said, "I can not help you, boys; it is your duty to go to the front." Those boys left those homes, and when the mother followed them to the front gate to kiss them good-bye, and they looked back at that home that they had helped pay for, and they went out to defend a condition and a country that had made these things possible, they expected their country would take care of what they were leaving behind them. They are over yonder in khaki, and when they come back, if the home is desolate, if the folks have suffered, and the land they left worth $30 and $40 an acre is reduced to $15 or $10 an acre, what are we going to say?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON], a member of the committee.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I simply want to call attention to the Cummins amendment, and read it to you:

That every railroad not owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company, and which has heretofore competed for traffic with a railroad or railroads of which the President has taken the possession, use, and control, or which connects with such railroads and is engaged as a common carrier in general transportation, shall be held and considered as within "Federal control," as herein defined, and necessary for the prosecution of the war, and shall be entitled to the benefit of all the provisions of this act.

Under the Cummins amendment there is not a short-line railroad in the country that is not included under the provisions of the act. That was the intent of Congress when we passed the law.

I now call your attention to the relinquishment clause, which reads as follows:

That the President may, prior to July 1, 1918, relinquish control of all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation, further Federal control of which the President shall deem not needful or desirable; and the President may at any time during the period of Federal control agree with the owners thereof to relinquish all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation.

Under the release clause the Director General says he has the right to turn back any short-line road. The committee thought that the right to do so was not granted by the original act. The Congress never intended to grant such arbitrary power to the Railroad Director. The short lines can not exist without connections with the trunk lines, and this Congress ought not to pass a law that will push them into bankruptcy, for that is what it means for all of these short lines. Communities and towns have been built up along these lines and they ought not to be destroyed. The original intent of Congress was as clear as could be made, that if the short line goes out the connecting lines must go out with it, so that no injury shall be done to any short-line road. It appeared from the examination of Mr. Payne, the solicitor of the Director of Railroads, that the Government intends to hold this right of relinquishment over the short lines and could easily be used as a bludgeon over the short lines by which he could say, "You agree to this contract, or we will eliminate you without any notice," without any hearing upon the part of the line. This, it seems to me, would be an act of manifest injustice to every short-line railroad in the country. It ought not to be done. I favor this resolution. I think it is properly drawn and it ought to have the support of every Member of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to a member of the committee, Judge DEWALT.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, this resolution as now presented contains two distinct ideas. The first is that which was proposed by the administrator of the Railroad Bureau, namely, an extension of time for the relinquishment from the date stated in the original act up to January 1, 1919. That was the resolution as originally proposed by the administrative bureau. The short lines then came in and pleaded for relief, and they introduced an amendment to the resolution. That amendment is the second idea in the resolution. That is simply this, that no short line shall be released until the main or trunk line with which the short line competes or with which it connects is also relinquished. In other words, it places the short line on a parity with the main or trunk line. This proposition further takes into view the capitalization of two billion of dollars as represented by the short lines. It takes into consideration altogether 765 short lines, because that is the number in the United States. One hundred and sixty-five of those lines have already been taken over and the remainder are in a chaotic state, not knowing whether they will be taken over or be relinquished, and the purpose of this resolution is to confine the administrative functions of the Railroad Bureau to this fact, and this alone, that this chaotic condition, so far as the short lines are concerned, must be removed and that they can not be relinquished until the trunk lines with which they compete or with which they are connected are also relinquished. That is the sum and substance of the whole thing. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is very important and necessary, but it is a sad commentary as to the condition into which this Congress has sunk that it should be necessary. The meaning of the act which was heretofore passed was perfectly plain. It is also plain that it has been disregarded. Whatever may be said as to whether there was or has been an actual violation by the Railroad Administration of the law as laid down by this Congress, there can not be the slightest question that the Railroad Administration knew perfectly well that the spirit of the law and the intent of Congress was being violated.

Notwithstanding the law—I believe the law was explicit as to its terms, and surely it was plain as to its meaning and intention, that the short lines should not be relinquished—yet they have proceeded to relinquish them over their protest.

Nor is that all. As gentlemen who have been speaking on the subject before me and others have said, they have proceeded in defiance of the directions of the shipper to route freight over certain other lines in order to kill off the short lines. There can be no question in the minds of any gentleman but that that is illegal and that short lines are being ruined by this practice. I could go on and review other matters to show you that the Railroad Administration has been disregarding and violating the law, but the few moments that have been allotted me are insufficient.

Gentlemen said repeatedly, when we granted great powers to the Railway Administration—powers not only unprecedented in this country but almost unprecedented anywhere—that there was no fear that they would be abused, that no official would overstep reasonable bounds or use them in an oppressive manner, but here we have a positive example of what the Railroad Administration intends to do in the way the short lines have been treated. If there is anybody that ought to be fair, it is those officials who have been placed in charge of the management of the railroads. If there is any institution that ought to be just it is the Government of this country which is represented by them. But they have absolutely ignored the law and have attempted to defy Congress. Then my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] possibly not understanding the situation, has asked why the committee has been so particular to append to this resolution a statement of the express purpose and intent of Congress in enacting it.

It is simply in order that these gentlemen can not without effrontery exceeding anything they have already shown say they do not understand this law and that they will construe it in opposition to its plain import and meaning. We want to make this so plain that the wayfaring man can not err therein. We intend that there shall be no further pretense that the law is not understood. Unelss I completely misunderstand the purpose of this Congress, it has determined positively that the short lines shall be taken over. To do otherwise would be a blunder so astounding that it is utterly incomprehensible how any man or set of men could make it. It is claimed that these lines are not profitable. The same claim could be made with reference to every short branch or feeder which the great systems own and which it is not proposed to discard. These lines of track by themselves may not be profitable, but as feeders to the great lines they are profitable. In the same way they are profitable to the country at large, which can not afford to dispense with them even if it was willing to commit the moral wrong of destroying the communities through which they run, communities which have been built up on the faith and assurance of the laws as they then stood, which permitted these short lines to exist.

Mr. Speaker, it would be nothing short of a crime to now compel these short lines to be torn up, their property to be junked, the communities through which they run to be left without transportation, and it would be an act of folly that surpasses anything ever done in the history of this country. To prevent such action this resolution should be adopted.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, when the Congress passed the act of March last, it was very manifestly the legislative intent clearly expressed, that the Railroad Administration should take over the short lines, coordinate them with the trunk lines, and operate the entire system of roads, great and small as a unified whole. It was an intolerable thought to this body that these short lines as a result of Government administration of the trunk lines should either in whole, or in part, languish and die. These roads are as essential to the smaller communities, as the trunk lines to the great centers of wealth and industrial activities. Yet this result of cessation, or bankruptcy, will be the lot of many short lines, unless action is taken to-day. It has been established by the statements made on this floor unchallenged, and uncontradicted, that unless the pending resolution is agreed to, reaffirming in unmistakable terms the legislative intent of the act of March, there are many short lines, in many communities that will be forced to discontinue their operations to the very great prejudice and loss of those communities.

The amendment to this resolution reaffirms the legislative intent, and makes certain that which we thought was already certain.

I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] with respect to the general principles relating to the preparation and construction of statutes, but confronted with the situation developed under the interpretation impressed upon the act of March last, this body should reaffirm and declare anew the intent of the original act in the most positive and emphatic fashion. The gentleman from Massachusetts suggests that the declaration of intent in the resolution is surplusage. Possibly, but by all means should it be retained in the resolution. With that language retained there is no possibility that the meaning and purpose of the original act can be misunderstood. It is a plain and emphatic declaration on our part that the Government shall take over the short lines and operate them so long as it operates the trunk lines with which they connect, or compete.

That is what we meant by the original act, and that is the meaning that we now reaffirm. If there is any form of words other than that in the resolution by which our intent can be more definitely and positively expressed, then I am in favor of using that language in this resolution. As I have stated, this resolution simply says to the Railroad Administration that so long as the trunk lines with which these short lines connect continue to be administered and operated by the Government, then in the public interests the Government operation of the short lines shall continue for the same period.

I have listened in vain during the progress of this debate for some one to point out why the policy proposed with reference to the short lines is not a just and proper policy. No suggestion to that effect has been made. No one has risen in this debate to intimate that we, having in mind the interests of the entire Nation, should establish a system of railroad administration under which the trunk lines alone are to be operated, and the vast aggregate of smaller lines, with a mileage of 30,000 miles, and an aggregate value of something like $2,000,000,000, with their vast potentialities of benefit to the communities which they serve, should be left to their own devices under the new conditions created by Government administration of the trunk lines. It is freely admitted that such a policy will mean ruin for many of the short lines, and destructive losses to the communities which they serve.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be most unfortunate to strike out a single line or word from this resolution of reaffirmation and redeclaration of a legislative intent that we thought had been heretofore expressed in terms of sufficient clarity.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. In the gentleman's judgment, will this take over those lines that may have been relinquished before this bill becomes a law and make it mandatory?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am not entirely clear upon that point.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Why would it not be advisable to add at the end of the resolution the following:

And regardless of and despite any order of relinquishment heretofore made or of any other act which may have heretofore been done by or for the United States as to such control.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am not in charge of this joint resolution, but so far as I am concerned, I frankly say that I see no reason why the amendment suggested should not be accepted.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself to the last clause of the joint resolution, the one which provides that the Railway Administration shall continue to hold and operate the short-line railroads as long as the railroads with which they are competing are held in Federal control. A question has been raised here as to whether the short-line railroads which have heretofore been relinquished will be recovered into the Federal control in case of the passage of this resolution. In my judgment there is very strong ground for saying they would be, and I base that upon this language—shall be held and considered as within Federal control as defined in said act.

That is, by the very language of this resolution, we define the intent of Congress to be that the railroads thus defined and described shall be held and considered to be within Federal control. So that I trust that that sets at rest that question. The short-line railroads are mainly railroads that have been constructed by local capital and are operated in response to local demands. If they are not taken over by the Federal Government, they have absolutely no opportunity to survive. That seems to be generally agreed. The routing of all the through traffic controlled by the Railroad Administration will pass over trunk lines, and even if the shipper should desire to favor the short-line railroads and to take the trouble to route his freight over the short-line railroads it might still be within the power of the Railroad Administration for public reasons to change that routing.

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SNOOK. They are now doing that very thing.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman says they are now doing that very thing. So the short-line railroad has no opportunity whatever to protect its through traffic or its share of its through traffic, and it has little opportunity to protect its local traffic. It has only one outlet, its connection with the trunk lines, and they are under the jurisdiction of the Federal control and the short-line railroad is embarrassed, of course, by such regulations as the Federal administration may make. Now, the clear intent of the Congress was that the taking over of the trunk-line railroads should not operate to destroy these local competing roads, and it would be the greatest violation of public policy if we allow that taking of the trunk-line railroads to operate to destroy just and legitimate competition which has been built up in response to a local demand. I am somewhat at a loss to know how under the present trend of railroad legislation in this country we are going to secure independent lines of railroads. How can independent lines be built? Here they have been built in many cases from local capital, and under that can not sustain themselves in opposition to the combined competition of the Railroad Administration, and they must go down. Now, suppose they perish. What opportunity is there in the future for the building of an independent line of road to compete with the present trunk line? It is a very serious question in our transportation system.

Another question is this, gentlemen: We have not an abundance of transportation facilities in this country. We are short of transportation facilities. It is perfectly possible for the Railroad Administration to make full use of these short lines by routing over them the surplus amount that they can carry, to the exclusion of the trunk lines.

VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 1206).

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this message involves a matter of considerable interest to the membership of the House, and I believe a quorum should be present here to receive this important message.

Mr. CANNON. Can not the message be withheld temporarily until we can dispose of this resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state this: He is in no rush about laying this message before the House, but the Post Office Committee wants to meet at half-past 3 and see what they are going to do about reporting another bill. The Chair did not understand what the gentleman said.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me possibly the committee ought not to take any action until the message is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Well, all the disposition that is necessary to make at this time is to have the message read, and then the gentleman from Tennessee or somebody else will make a motion to refer the message and the bill itself to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. STEENERSON. But the Constitution provides that the House shall proceed to vote on the question——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that. It may proceed to-day, next week, or next year. It has been ruled on over and over again. It does not mean you shall immediately take it up. The Chair has read that section of the Constitution until he knows it by heart, and has read all the decisions. It may lie on the Speaker's table if they want to or take it to the committee if they want to. It need not be reported back if the committee does not want to do so.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, the message will be read, and then we will take such steps as are desirable.

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Chair mean to state that while the vetoed message is pending upon a bill such as this that the House can proceed to consider and pass an identical bill with the exception of that part which is the subject of veto?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what the committee will report back except in the light of experience. The Chair does not understand the point the gentleman makes.

Mr. WALSH. The point I sought to make is this: Whether the House can proceed to consider a bill just identical in language and effect to that which has been vetoed while the veto is pending upon a particular part——

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; you have got to vote on the veto.

EXTENSION OF TIME OF FEDERAL CONTROL OF RAILROADS.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the time has expired of the hour which was controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee. I ask if we could not vote on this?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes more. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman wants to move the previous question on the resolution and amendments thereto the Chair will withhold the President's message for a few moments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I promised gentlemen a little more time, but in view of the situation I move the previous question on the resolution and amendments thereto to final passage. Before making that motion I want to ask unanimous consent to strike out all of the preamble except the last two words on page 2, "be it."

The SPEAKER. The preamble is the last thing that is voted on.

Mr. SIMS. I move the previous question on the passage of the resolution and amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask to strike the entire preamble from the resolution?

Mr. SIMS. Except the last two words, "be it."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to strike from the preamble everything except the last two words, "be it." Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SIMS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution, preamble, and amendments.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

Mr. SIMS. I am perfectly willing and anxious for the gentleman to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield as to the form of the amendment which he has suggested to be eliminated from the preamble? I do not recall in the passage of a resolution the words "be it" preceding the word "resolved."

Mr. SIMS. Well——

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not believe that is proper practice.

The SPEAKER. That is absolutely a matter of taste.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is more than a matter of taste because it is included in the amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma may have permission to speak for one minute.

The SPEAKER. You do not have to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. SIMS. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the control of time in his own hands. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, when legislation was enacted into a law authorizing the Director General to take over the railroads of the country I am sure it was not the intention of Congress to discriminate against short lines. Everyone knows the necessity of short-line railroads, as, to a large extent, they are pioneers when it comes to developing new territory. In every section of the country where you find this kind of railroads you will see splendid towns and the territory which they go through developed in a way that compares favorably with the territory adjacent to trunk lines. If the Government should discriminate so as to cause these roads to not receive the same consideration that will be given the trunk lines, then it is only a matter of time when they will slowly perish. I mean by this if they are not allowed to have the same advantages in the way of traffic arrangements, terminal facilities, and other benefits, it will be impossible for them to receive a sufficient amount of business so as to enable them to be self-sustaining.

The argument has been advanced that some of these short-line railroads are now being operated at a loss. Even if this were true, it can not be disputed that they are rendering to the citizens of the country depending upon same a service that can not be estimated in dollars and cents. If our Government would refuse to operate such enterprises or departments that are being maintained at a loss, it would be necessary that we suspend some branches of the Government in less than 30 days. When you measure the good that is given to a territory and the citizens living therein in comparison with the small loss that might be brought about in the operation of a short-line railroad, it is only a drop in the bucket compared to the loss that goes on from year to year in some of the other enterprises that are being maintained for the benefit of the people and the various communities at large.

In the district I have the honor to represent there is a short-line railroad called the Clinton & Oklahoma Western. Along this road are several splendid, new, hustling little cities. The people who have gone out there have pioneered, eager for the opportunity of developing that section in order that they may have a home which will enable them to live in peace and happiness. When it was reported that the Government would not extend its protecting arm over these short lines, then they began to be alarmed, and I have in my office more than 500 appeals asking that no action be taken that would destroy their rights and privileges. It so happens this little short-line railroad is making money. It has at its head an efficient set of officers, who are conducting their affairs along business lines. They have made pleasant, agreeable traffic arrangements, and now they say to me, "If we are to be deprived of our privileges, then it is only a matter of time until our road must be operated at a loss."

I am sure this is one of the most important resolutions that has ever been brought before this body for consideration. I know it is necessary that Congress show to this department of our Government its real intention when it comes to handling matters of this kind. Some time ago it was reported that this department of our Government would not allow a certain railroad over 700 miles long, which goes through the district I have the honor to represent, to receive the benefits that would be given to other railroads. Immediately appeals were made to me from practically every town along its right of way, and I secured such information as was available and filed the following statement with Mr. McAdoo, the Director General of Railroads, asking that no unjust discrimination be made against the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railroad:

STATEMENT BY MR. MCCLINTIC TO HON. WM. G. MCADOO, DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS.

KANSAS CITY, MEXICO & ORIENT RAILROAD.

Every new railroad, as a rule, has to go through certain periods which cause its promoters to suffer from a financial standpoint. These conditions are brought about in various ways, and the same thing holds true with the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railroad Co. According to the records, this railroad has gone through two periods of receivership, the first being caused by a financial depression, which resulted in its being placed in the hands of a receiver on March 7, 1912, and it remained in this condition until July 6, 1914. Later, and on April 16, 1917, it was again placed in the hands of a receiver; and this is the condition of the road at the present time.

FACTS CONNECTED WITH THE ROAD.

The Orient Railroad is at this time operating trains from Wichita, Kans., to Alpine, Tex., a distance of 737 miles. It has opened up a large territory that can not be served by any other transportation company, and many prominent towns, in addition to large sections of agricultural country, are dependent upon this road entirely for transportation facilities. The rolling stock consists of 61 locomotives, 22 passenger cars, and 1,726 freight cars. The road is fairly well graded, and 70-pound steel rails are used throughout. In addition to this equipment, adequate steam shovels, bridge-repairing equipment, and a splendid roundhouse and repair shop are available at Wichita.

BUSINESS OF THE ROAD.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Orient Railroad has been handicapped because it was not built into Kansas City and other terminal points, it has maintained through schedules and taken care of all the business intrusted to it in an efficient manner. In 1916 it carried 409,776 net tons originating on its own lines and 741,175 tons received from connecting lines, making a grand total of 1,150,952 tons, or 75,225 full carloads. In 1917 there was a reduction of tonnage originating on its own line, caused by the unprecedented droughts in practically all of the territory served by the road. The amount of tonnage originating for this year is 356,592 tons, and that received from connecting lines 831,128 tons, making a grand total of 1,187,721 tons, or 70,700 carloads. According to the information that has been given the authorities, this road has a sufficient amount of power and capacity to take care of more than double the business that it is at present handling; and with the present prospects for a good crop throughout the section of the country that it serves it can easily be seen that the road has passed through its most critical period and that in a very short time the added tonnage it will receive will be sufficient to enable it to pay more than the cost of operating expenses.

Judge Pollock, of Kansas, who is on the Federal bench, has had jurisdiction over the receivership of this road. He is probably as well posted as to the existing conditions as any other man in the country. Recently he granted permission to those in charge of this road to issue two and a half million of three-year receivership certificates, and from the information I have one and a half million of these have been subscribed for. The present financial conditions confronting the world have made it practically impossible to secure large amounts of money for construction purposes, and for this reason it has not been possible to complete this road to Kansas City, Mo., or to other places where connections are needed. The people of Texas are very much interested in seeing the Government retain supervision over this road, and resolutions have been passed by both branches of the Texas Legislature under date of March 16, 1918, asking that no discrimination be made against the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railroad Co.

NEW TERRITORY OPENED.

The Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railroad was graded through many sections of Oklahoma and Texas for a number of years prior to the time it was completed. This resulted in the people starting many new enterprises years before the road was completed, thereby opening up much new territory for settlement. The building of this road has resulted in the establishment of many large irrigation plants in Texas; in fact, it can be said that the largest irrigated areas in some counties in Texas are those which are supplied by this road. In other sections, which depend entirely upon this road for transportation facilities, the live-stock industry is such that if this road should be discontinued it would bring about irreparable injury to the country and a great financial loss to those who are interested in this business.

There are some important towns with a population of 1,000 or more that depend entirely upon this road for its supplies. As an illustration, I respectfully call attention to the town of Canton, Okla., which has a population of approximately 1,000. This railroad in 1916 furnished to this town 251 carloads of various kinds of supplies, and in 1917, 348 carloads. When it is taken into consideration that the Post Office Department, the express companies, and many other kinds of business have at this time a satisfactory system of taking care of every condition, it can easily be seen that any movement that would cause this road to be discontinued would disturb the harmonious condition that exists and bring about untold hardships on the people who depend upon this railroad for transportation facilities.

CONCLUSION.

Under Government control the Orient Railroad has already demonstrated its usefulness in many ways. It has been handling 60 cars per day from Sweetwater, Tex., to Wichita, Kans., and many tons of freight have been diverted at different points for the use of the Government. Recent rains have caused thousands of heads of cattle to be brought into certain sections of Texas, which are taken care of by this railroad, and with good crop prospects in practically all of the territory, it can easily be seen that if no discrimination is made that the added business it will receive in the very near future will cause it to be able to take care of its financial obligations in a most satisfactory way.

I feel that no more meritorious railroad is now being operated than the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient. The construction of the system has resulted in the opening of large sections of the country, and thousands of people to-day are dependent upon it for the necessities of life. It has been a pioneer in blazing the way for civilization, and now, inasmuch as it has apparently reached the place where it can soon be operated without financial loss, it is hoped that the Government will not feel justified in making an order that will cause the same to be discontinued.

If the information given in this connection does not cover every phase of the situation, I respectfully ask that no action be taken until a committee representing the Government can inspect this road, the section of the country it goes through, and the industries that are dependent upon it for a livelihood.

Respectfully submitted.

JIM MCCLINTIC.

I am sure it is the desire of those in charge of this branch of our Government to deal fairly with all questions coming under their jurisdiction, and when this resolution is enacted into law then there will be no doubt as to what is the intention of Congress when it comes to dealing with matters of this kind. Mr. Speaker, I am hoping this measure can be enacted into law at the earliest date possible, as the entire country, more or less, is interested in this subject, and when it is known that the Government does not intend to make any discrimination in favor or against any of our industries then the people will have no cause for complaint.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to strike out the entire preamble.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The Chair lays before the House the message from the President of the United States, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I am taking the liberty of returning H. R. 7237, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, without my signature, because the bill contains a provision which I venture to think it would be wisest to omit. I refer to the provision with regard to the rental of pneumatic tubes.

I am convinced that there is no moral or legal obligation resting on the Government to continue the use of these tubes by rental. At the time they were installed they may have had some value as a postal facility, but that was before the volume of mail had reached the enormous proportions which it has to-day and before the development of the use of motor vehicles. These developments have made the tubes practically obsolete, quite unnecessary, and in fact a hindrance to the efficient operation of the Postal Service. This is illustrated by the fact that in 1913 it was estimated that 5,373,147 letters were dispatched daily by the use of the tubes, while in 1917 only 2,837,638, or approximately one-half that number, were dispatched by that means. If this ratio of reduction continued, few, if any, letters would now be sent in that way. Less than 50 per cent of the letter mail, or 5 per cent of the entire volume of mail, handled at the stations using the pneumatic-tube service is transported by the tubes.

There seems to be an impression that if the tubes were abandoned these letters would be delayed. This is an unfounded impression, because practically all of this mail could be handled at less cost and more expeditiously by other means.

There are many reasons why the present pneumatic-tube systems are not efficient devices for the transmission of mail. Among these reasons is their limited capacity, which makes it impossible to use them to meet conditions of emergency. Furthermore, experience has demonstrated that the tubes are unreliable because of breakdowns and stoppages. During such breakdowns they cease operation for hours and even for days together, and it is often necessary to dig up the streets to obtain the mail clogged in the tubes. When these breakdowns occur it is necessary immediately to substitute vehicular service, which results in a confusion of schedules and disorganization of the transportation and delivery service and delay in the forwarding of large numbers of letters. Not only are letters delayed in this way, but because of defects in the tubes, carelessness on the part of operators, and accidents of various sorts the tubes soil or damage many thousand letters and in some instances destroy them.

The Post Office Department has found it necessary because of the unreliability and inefficiency of the tubes to divert a large quantity of mail formerly dispatched by their use to automobiles wherever close connections are required. It has been found that later closings of the mail can be arranged and closer connections assured by this means. I am informed that this is true even in the congested sections of New York City.

Some of the principal objections to the tubes, in addition to those I have already enumerated, are their unsuitability to carry many special-delivery parcels; the necessary relaying of containers at way stations involving a loss of time and requiring that all intermediate stations be kept open with attendants on duty; their inability to dispatch mail to intermediate stations during continuous transmission between any two points; their unsuitability to the dispatch of mail to the point where it is received by or taken from the railroad companies without additional handling; and the impossibility of preventing dampness and oil in the tubes at certain times, which results in damage to the mail.

It will be noted that the tubes when working at their best perform only one step in the transmission of the mail from the sender to the addressee, and the advantage of their use is largely theoretical. This conclusion was reached by Stone & Webster, among others, a firm of engineers employed by the congressional commission which recently investigated this matter. In speaking of the services performed by the tubes, they state—but being only one step in the movement of the mail and being preceded and succeeded by other steps in which, by the exigencies of economical mail handling, intermittent movement is necessary, the advantage of the tubes is often lost, and at times the tubes become entirely inadequate to handle a bulk of mail which has been accumulated in some preceding step.

I have been guided in my conclusions by those who have expert postal knowledge and who seem to me the safest judges as to whether these tubes constitute a desirable postal facility. In the act of April 21, 1902, the Congress, realizing that the Postmaster General could not be expected to be an expert on postal affairs, prohibited him by law from issuing an advertisement for pneumatic mail service until a commission of postal experts had given their approval. When the last rental contract expired, such a commission was appointed in accordance with this law. Its report as well as subsequent reports by experts on the value of this service is before me, and no one who reads these reports can escape the impression that the conclusions reached by these experts are sound and that the use of the tubes should be abandoned.

I am informed that during the past 10 years many efforts have been made to extend the present system of pneumatic tubes, but that these extensions have invariably been advised against by the departmental commissions of postal experts who investigated the matter, and that the reports of these experts invariably called attention to the development of the automobile as a factor which would have to be considered at the close of the present rental contracts. The postmasters of various cities where the tubes are in use have spoken against them and urged that they be abandoned.

These reasons seeming to me conclusive and compelling, I have not felt at liberty to acquiesce in this feature of the bill, which I herewith reluctantly return.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
29 June, 1918.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House on reconsideration do agree to pass the bill notwithstanding the objection of the President.

The SPEAKER. I wish the gentleman would send the motion to the desk.

Mr. STEENERSON. And on that motion I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

By Mr. STEENERSON: I move that the House on reconsideration do agree to pass the bill notwithstanding the objections of the President.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, on that motion I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota has already moved it. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] moves the previous question on this motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, does not that require the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. Of course. The Chair will order them just as quick as he can get to it. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] moves that the Post Office bill be reconsidered and passed, the President's objections to the contrary notwithstanding. On that the Constitution requires that the yeas and nays be called. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of passing this bill over the President's veto, which is the popular phrase, will, as their names are called, vote "yea," and those opposed will vote "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 114, nays 186, answered "present" 3, not voting 127, as follows:

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, in order to save time, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be taken up without the rule. It is absolutely necessary to pass it to-day, and I do not believe there will be any objection to taking it up by unanimous consent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, if the resolution is taken up for consideration, will time be given for making inquiries as to the reasons why the House committee has departed from the prior authorizations in phraseology, extending the authority, and did not agree to the joint resolution as it passed the Senate which carried that authority into effect, and changed the language from that which has heretofore been carried in the extension of these grants?

Mr. FLOOD. Certainly, Mr. Speaker. It is not my purpose to cut off any inquiries which might be made within the hour.

Mr. STAFFORD. And with the opportunity to offer amendments in case anybody wishes to do so?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] asks unanimous consent, notwithstanding the rule that has been reported, for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 158. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. FRENCH, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for the remainder of the afternoon to make addresses to soldiers at the dedication of the Young Men's Christian Association hut at Camp Humphreys.

DIVERSIONS OF WATER FROM NIAGARA RIVER.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the joint resolution with the committee amendment, which is as follows:

Senate joint resolution 158.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue permits revocable at will for the diversion of water in the United States from the Niagara River above the Falls for the creation of power to individuals, companies, or corporations which are now actually producing power from the waters of said river, in quantities which in no event shall exceed in the aggregate a daily diversion at the rate of 20,000 cubic feet per second: Provided, That this resolution shall remain in force until the 1st day of July, 1919, and no longer, at the expiration of which time all permits granted hereunder shall terminate unless sooner revoked. Any individuals, companies, or corporations violating any of the provisions of said permits or diverting water from said river above the Falls for the creation of power, except under a permit issued under the authority of this law, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year nor less than 30 days, or both, in the discretion of the court; and each and every day on which such violation occurs or is committed shall be deemed a separate offense: Provided, That where such violation is charged against the company or corporate body the offense shall be taken and deemed to be that of any director, officer, agent, or employee of such company or corporate body ordering, directing, or permitting the same."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, this resolution gives the Secretary of War authority for a year to grant revocable permits for the diversion of water from the Niagara Falls, above the Falls, to the extent that that diversion is authorized under the treaty with Great Britain, namely, 20,000 cubic feet per second. Under what was known as the Burton Act 15,600 cubic feet of water was authorized to be diverted. Congress passed a resolution in January, 1917, authorizing the Secretary of War to issue permits for the diversion of the remaining 4,400 feet. The Burton Act and the resolution that we passed later extending the Burton Act have expired by limitation. There is no authority of law now for the diversion of that 15,600 cubic feet. The joint resolution authorizing the diversion of the remaining 4,400 feet of the treaty water was extended by a resolution of June 3, 1917, to run to July 1, 1918, but with certain limitations. The limitations being that the companies using this water to develop power should not install more machinery than they then had for its use.

The authority of the Secretary of War to permit the diversion of this water under that resolution expires on the 1st day of July of this year, which is Monday. The resolution passed by the Senate authorized an extension of these permits for one year, but on the same terms as the resolution of January, 1917. The House committee reported this resolution as an amendment to the resolution, and the difference is that the power companies can install additional machinery if necessary to consume the water authorized to be diverted. This resolution also applies to the whole of the treaty water instead of only to the 4,400 cubic feet.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] indicated that he wanted to know our reasons for these changes. These are the changes the Foreign Affairs Committee made in the Senate resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it, if the gentleman will permit, the resolution that came over to the House from the Senate was in similar language to the resolution passed on January 19, 1917, which continued the prior authorization under the act of June 30, 1917, up to to-morrow.

Mr. FLOOD. The day after to-morrow—that is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. That Senate resolution was predicated upon the idea that these revocable permits issued by the Secretary of War should terminate when Congress should pass legislation regulating and controlling the diversion of the water. This whole question of the granting of the right to use this water, and particularly granting the right to use water in excess of that which the machinery then installed was capable of using, was always predicated upon the idea that Congress would pass some legislation which should supersede it. Now the amendment reported by the House committee does not make it contingent upon Congress passing any general legislation covering the use of water power, but grants a revocable permit that will expire a year hence, June 30, 1919. Therefore, if the water power bill that has recently been introduced should be enacted into law, these users of water power at Niagara Falls would be exempt from the provisions of that law until a year hence, whereas it has always been the policy of Congress merely to grant these temporary rights subject to the decision of Congress whenever it should pass some general law applying to water powers throughout the country.

Mr. FLOOD. No; the gentleman has not got that exactly right. This authorizes the Secretary of War to issue revocable permits for a year. He can revoke those permits any day he sees fit.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; but heretofore the right to continue under these permits was terminable as soon as Congress should pass a general law that would apply to water power, the Secretary of War to the contrary notwithstanding, as to whether he would exercise his discretion; but now you are surrendering that right and leaving it only to the discretion of the Secretary of War to determine whether within a year he will revoke the permit or not.

Mr. FLOOD. There was nothing in the original resolution that differed in the respect the gentleman is talking about from this resolution. The original resolution simply gave the Secretary of War the right to issue revocable permits from the date of the passage of the resolution in January to June 30, 1917, but it did not have anything in it about the permit expiring when legislation was enacted by Congress. There was nothing in the resolution about that. The policy of this resolution is exactly the same as the policy of the original resolution, with the two exceptions I have mentioned. The gentleman will remember we passed the resolution of January, 1917, with the exception that between that time and the 1st of the next July we would enact permanent legislation on this question. The House did pass a well-considered measure dealing with this question comprehensively and permanently, but that measure failed to go through the Senate, and as a result of that we passed another resolution extending the authority of the Secretary of War to issue permits for one year longer, until the 30th of June, 1918. But the policy was exactly the same as that of this resolution, with this exception: These resolutions did not permit the installation of more machinery. They authorized the use of the water, but the users could not use any more water than they then had machinery to consume. Now, it has developed that instead of using the 20,000 cubic feet of water that this country has the right to permit the use of, they are using only between 18,000 and 19,000 cubic feet per second, and there is something between 1,500 and 2,000 cubic feet per second of that water going to waste. These companies are willing to take their chances on installing more machinery and using this water and making 30,000 or 40,000 additional horsepower of electrical energy that is in great demand to make machinery and other articles that are necessary in the prosecution of the war, and so, in consideration of that fact, we eliminated from this resolution the limitation that they should not install any more machinery to use this water than they now have.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LONDON. Has the Secretary of War asked for the passage of this resolution in this form?

Mr. FLOOD. The Secretary of War desires it in the very form that the House committee reported it.

Mr. LONDON. In other words, it is desired to remove all limitations?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes. That is the only difference between this resolution and the resolution of 1917, except that this resolution applies to the whole 20,000 cubic feet of water per second, as it ought to, instead of the 4,400 cubic feet.

Mr. WALDOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I will.

Mr. WALDOW. Is it not true that the Secretary of War at the present time, under the authority vested in him, has the power to grant permission to companies to make improvements so that they can use the entire diversion of water?

Mr. FLOOD. I understand that a company is at work deepening and broadening its canal so that all the water can be used.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman acquaint the committee, because the report is a vacuum so far as giving reasons and arguments for the legislation——

Mr. FLOOD. We thought the committee knew so much about the matter that it was not necessary to put it all in the report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Like the reports generally from the Committee on Foreign Affairs which have been of a vacuistic character——

Mr. FLOOD. I do not think the gentleman ought to say that about the reports from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. They have generally been full and complete. I call the gentleman's attention to the report on the war resolutions, the last appropriation bill for the Consular and Diplomatic Service, and I could call his attention to many others where the reports have been very full. This resolution does not call for a lengthy report.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can cite instance after instance where the reports from the Committee on Foreign Affairs have contained no reasons or arguments. But we will lay that aside. I am going to inquire why the committee saw fit to leave out, in the amendment as reported by his committee, the restriction that was carried in the Senate resolution that permits would be only in force until Congress should enact legislation regulating and controlling the diversion of water generally.

Mr. FLOOD. Where does the gentleman find that?

Mr. STAFFARD. On page 2, lines 4 to 6, the Senate resolution says:

unless the Congress shall before that date enact legislation regulating and controlling the diversions of water from the Niagara River or from boundary streams generally, in which event this resolution shall cease to be of any further force or effect.

That contemplates the passing of some water-power legislation that unquestionably will cover the water power in Niagara River.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. No; it does not.

Mr. FLOOD. General water-power legislation does not embrace the boundary-line waters.

Mr. STAFFORD. As reported by the special committee, it may not.

Mr. FLOOD. They were not under the rule authorized to consider boundary waters.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This is a treaty question.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Wisconsin says this is a treaty question, but the resolutions from time to time have been introduced because they were all of an expedient character and granted the use of power until the Congress should fix some permanent policy which would apply to Niagara Falls.

Mr. FLOOD. That is the purpose of this very resolution, and I will say that the Committee on Foreign Affairs has taken evidence for weeks and have been considering a measure dealing with this question permanently and thoroughly, and we have not got through with it yet.

Mr. STAFFORD. When the gentleman's committee does get through with it and it is taken up for consideration, why should not this temporary legislation be superseded by it, as intended by the Senate amendment?

Mr. FLOOD. That would be unobjectionable. I thought the gentleman said it was in the original resolution passed by Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. To be frank with the gentleman, I did say that, but I was in error.

Mr. FLOOD. If the gentleman desires to offer an amendment of that kind, it will be perfectly satisfactory to all the members of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. One more question. The gentleman may have taken evidence on the subject, but the Canadian water-power companies are hard pressed at the present time to supply the necessary power that is demanded in Canada for manufacturing plants on the Canadian side.

Mr. FLOOD. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee whether these companies are utilizing any greater amount of water diversion than they were using prior to the outbreak of the war?

Mr. FLOOD. They are establishing new machinery for using more water but they have not completed the installation yet.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the treaty with Great Britain whereby the two countries are to limit the amount of water diversion, how much was Canada authorized to use? I know that our country was authorized to use 20,000 cubic feet a second.

Mr. FLOOD. Canada was authorized to divert 36,000 cubic feet a second and we were authorized to divert 20,000 cubic feet a second.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House how much of the 36,000 cubic feet per second is being used by the Canadian hydroelectric companies?

Mr. FLOOD. They are installing machinery to use it all, but at this time they are using a little less than 30,000 cubic feet a second.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand there are two companies utilizing 15,600 cubic feet per second, and they seek to have the privilege of taking the residuum of the 20,000 cubic feet.

Mr. FLOOD. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has heard of several companies that are considering this new general legislation. No other company has the machinery to generate power now. No other companies would be benefited by this resolution except the two companies because the other companies have no machinery and no plants.

Mr. STAFFORD. These two companies are engaged directly or indirectly in furnishing power in the making of supplies of a war character.

Mr. FLOOD. No; they make electric power out of this water.

Mr. STAFFORD. But this power is used by manufacturers, one of which is the Carborundum Co.

Mr. FLOOD. Yes; the War Department has ascertained how much power the companies can generate, and they have distributed that power among the industries that are making material necessary for the prosecution of the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. I presume the House would be interested in knowing just the scope of the regulations the Secretary of War has prescribed under the revocable permits that he was authorized to grant for the use of power. Can the gentleman inform the House as to those regulations, whether there are any regulations as to the price to be charged to the consumer by the generating power companies?

Mr. FLOOD. That question is under the public-service commission of the State of New York, and the Secretary of War did not undertake to deal with it.

Mr. STAFFORD. So the Secretary of War has not attempted to regulate the price of power that will be paid by the consuming public?

Mr. FLOOD. No; but I will say to the gentleman that this power is all consumed by corporations that need just as little protection as these two generating companies need. They can take care of themselves; and some of them have contracts with these companies running for a long period of years, such as the aluminum company to furnish them power at $8 per horsepower.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, as I understand the gentleman, all of the power that is generated by these two companies is sold to two large corporations.

Mr. FLOOD. No; not to two, but to quite a number.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the gentleman to say two large corporations were able to take care of themselves.

Mr. FLOOD. I said a number of corporations. I mentioned only one. I have a list of them here. There is the carbide company, the metallurgical company, the chemical company, the alkali company, and different carbon companies. There is quite a list of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman got the rate per kilowatt at which the hydropower is sold?

Mr. FLOOD. No. It varies because some of these companies get power from the generating companies under contracts that were entered into years ago when electric power was not in such demand. They made contracts for very low prices, and, as I stated, some of them get the power for $8 per horsepower and some of them have to pay as high as $40.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the gentleman has no objection to an amendment of similar import to that embodied in the Senate resolution?

Mr. FLOOD. None in the world.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman tell me whether any of this increase of power will go to the use of any of the Niagara brewing companies?

Mr. FLOOD. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are all being converted into near-beer companies, and I take it the gentleman from Washington would not object to its being used for that purpose.

Mr. SABATH. And for Coca-Cola.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I am very glad the gentleman from Milwaukee, the home of the amber fluid, can advise me on this.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman needs advice.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I am glad I have found the oracle to whom to appeal.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia says that Canada was using 36,000 cubic feet from Niagara River. Is any of the power produced by that water being transmitted into the United States?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes; some of it; but it is being cut off as fast as possible.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 16, on page 2, by inserting the phraseology which is found in lines 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, page 2, as follows:

unless the Congress shall before that date enact legislation regulating and controlling the diversions of water from the Niagara River or from boundary streams generally, in which event this resolution shall cease to be of any further force or effect.

I question, however, whether that is the best place to insert that amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think it ought to come in after the word "revoked," in line 20.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I modify the amendment by having the phraseology just read inserted after the word "revoked," in line 20, changing the period to a comma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WEBB). The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, after the word "revoked," strike out the period and insert a comma and the following language: "unless the Congress shall before that date enact legislation regulating and controlling the diversions of water from the Niagara River or from boundary streams generally, in which event this resolution shall cease to be of any further force or effect."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that the words "or from boundary streams generally" ought to be omitted. I do not think we want the waters of the cataract of Niagara in any way taken away from the jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, acting in pursuance of a treaty with a foreign country.

Mr. FLOOD. I will say to the gentleman that in the formation of the Water Power Committee and the rule that provided for it there was taken from its jurisdiction or there was never given to it the jurisdiction of the waters of Niagara River and other boundary streams, so that the Niagara River and other boundary streams are left to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw from the amendment the words "or from boundary streams generally" and modify it further by inserting the word "and" before the word "unless."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, after the word "revoked," strike out the period and insert a comma and the following language: "and unless the Congress shall before that time enact legislation regulating and controlling the diversions of water from the Niagara River, in which event this resolution shall cease to be of any further force or effect."

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] a question. Assuming that Congress has enacted legislation and that this resolution had ceased to be of any force, that would not in itself revoke a license issued for the period of one year?

Mr. STAFFORD. This resolution is predicated upon the idea that Congress has not passed any legislation, but the amendment that is now being considered is that this resolution be superseded upon Congress passing some general legislation regulating the water flow at Niagara.

Mr. LONDON. But I question——

Mr. FLOOD. The permits issued by the Secretary of War are revocable at will.

Mr. LONDON. Are these permits revocable at will?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes; this gives the Secretary of War authority to issue permits for 12 months, and they are revocable at his will.

Mr. LONDON. And they will be for one year, but they may be revoked at any time prior to the expiration of the year?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the gentleman's attention to this last amendment. In reference to this proviso, commencing line 16:

Provided, That this resolution shall remain in force until the 1st day of July, 1919, and no longer, at the expiration of which time all permits granted hereunder shall terminate unless sooner revoked.

Now, you put in this proviso——

Mr. STAFFORD. A further limitation.

Mr. RAKER. No; there is a question whether it is a further limitation.

And unless the Congress shall before that date enact legislation regulating and controlling the diversions of water from the Niagara Falls from the Niagara River, etc.

It is a question or not whether that will not extend these permits beyond that period. What you are trying to do is to put a limitation to the expiration, namely, July 1, 1919.

Mr. STAFFORD. If Congress passes legislation regulating the control of the Niagara River, that legislation will supersede these permits of a year notwithstanding the Secretary of War does not exercise his discretion to revoke the same within that year.

Mr. RAKER. That does not seem to be certain, because that proviso without the amendment being in there is sufficient that the permit would end and cease.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, to make it clear I wish to modify my amendment from the conjunctive to the disjunctive and ask that the word "or" instead of the word "and" be placed at the beginning of the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the modified amendment will be reported.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for just a suggestion? The purpose of the removal of this restriction is to induce power companies to install additional machinery with which to develop this additional power for war purposes. Suppose the legislation should be such—and it is conceivable—that other power companies than the two power companies who are to take water under this resolution should obtain this water, and the companies look at it that way and say: "It is a question whether we are justified in going to the expense of installing this additional machinery to develop this power when it may be taken away from us within a year." The Government might lose much of the advantage this resolution seeks to obtain for it.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman presupposes that the Congress——

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is very easily possible. You have not any conception of the situation. I simply say it is a practical matter, and it is not only possible but it is very likely. These companies have already expended $500,000 without any guaranty that they have this extension. Whether they are going to continue to expend money when legislation may be enacted which may take the power away from them is a very questionable thing, and there is need for this power.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman believe these companies have expended a half a million dollars without some understanding? They have not expended $500,000 unless they felt perfectly sure it would not be thrown away.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman conceive of a situation where Congress would pass legislation which would prevent this necessary power when it is to be used for war purposes in order to prevent its being used for the benefit of the country——

Mr. DEMPSEY. I can see no other purpose of the amendment suggested by the gentleman except it is limited in this way I have suggested.

Mr. STAFFORD. Except Congress ought to have the regulatory power in case it wished to exercise it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. As I understood the gentleman from Virginia, these permits are always granted by the department, revocable absolutely at will. It is going to be absolutely within the control of the Secretary of War, in any event, and it does not seem to me that it ought to be done by this legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. We have had this question up, and this is a most reasonable amendment in order to safeguard the interests of the Government.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman does not suppose that there is any danger on the part of the Congress refusing to pass an amendatory resolution?

Mr. FLOOD. I yield one minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. In this last amendment, suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], if this proviso is carried that it is revocable, and if not revoked ends on the 1st of July, 1919, the Government is clearly safe. There is not any doubt if within a month or within two months Congress enacts legislation controlling the waters of the river of Niagara, fixing the rules and regulations and the length of the term of the lease and the privileges to be granted, the Secretary of War has the power to immediately terminate that lease, and they would then come under the law. So there would be no question of complication.

Mr. FLOOD. May I make a suggestion to the gentleman from California?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD. Congress will likely pass that general legislation in six or eight months.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield to me one minute?

Mr. FLOOD. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LONDON. I do not like this legislation. Somehow they bring in all this water-power legislation at the end of a session, at the very last moment, and you do not get a chance to discuss it at all. You do not know what it is all about. I sent for a copy of the hearings and there have been no hearings, although it is a water-company matter, and some water-power legislation has had the effect of smearing over the men who have been battling with it. I do not think it is a fair thing to bring in this legislation at the last moment. That is the only thing I have to say about it.

Mr. FLOOD. Well, Mr. Speaker, if you want to break up an aggregation of industries that are supplying the necessities for this war, I would say you would want to oppose this legislation. Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] is entirely wrong about no hearings. We have had hearings for weeks.

Mr. LONDON. I asked for a copy and they told me there were no hearings on this resolution.

Mr. FLOOD. There were not on this resolution, but on the permanent measure before the committee; and this resolution is merely an extension of the law, and that we have passed twice before for the purpose of allowing those people to go on and utilize this water that would otherwise go to waste in order to make electric energy and carry on the war activities.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WEBB). The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin where he wishes the disjunctive "or" instead of the conjunctive "and"?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is the first word in the amendment, so that it shall read "or unless the Congress shall before that date," and so forth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on adopting the House committee amendment to the Senate joint resolution.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FLOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS (H. REPT. NO. 725).

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads I introduce a bill making appropriations for the services of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes. And in this connection I want to ask the permission of the House——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12599) making appropriations for the services of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House I desire to make a brief statement, and then make a motion in reference to this bill.

The House, of course, is aware that the President vetoed the Post Office and Post Roads bill on account of the pneumatic-tube provision of the bill, and the House, I am glad to say, sustained the veto. It is also aware that the House and the Senate reached, in a conference on the bill H. R. 7237, an agreement on all of the other amendments and incorporating the legislation that is provided for in the Senate and agreed to in the House, as shown in the conference report. In other words, the bill was agreed upon by both bodies. Now, the bill which I have introduced by the direction of the committee—and I want to say it was by a unanimous vote of the committee, a quorum being present—is identical with the original bill, H. R. 7237, as agreed on, except, of course, the pneumatic-tube provisions are left out. It is very important that we pass this legislation. It is very fully considered, and is agreed to by both Houses in the conference report in the bill mentioned.

There are provisions of that bill that are new law, providing for increases in the salary of rural carriers and for railway mail clerks and post-office clerks, and the classification of clerks and fourth-class postmasters, and a number of other provisions which you gentlemen are familiar with, and which I need not repeat.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the measure should pass before the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, by direction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, unanimously given, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up this bill now, with an agreement that all of its provisions shall be in order, that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that there shall be no debate upon the bill, and that the previous question shall be considered as ordered after the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take this bill up immediately in the House as in Committee of the Whole, dispense with the first reading of the bill, have no debate, make in order everything that is in it, and have the previous question ordered on it, and pass it. Is there objection?

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. WALSH rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—and I do not intend to object—I think the gentleman inadvertently said that the President had vetoed the tube provision of the bill. He vetoed the entire bill, and based his veto on the tube provision.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman is entirely correct about that. That is what I meant, of course.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? It is a very large order, to be sure. [Laughter.]

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12599) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that the bill ought to be read. We have dispensed with the first reading.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so, too. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12599) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated for the service of the Post Office Department, in conformity with the act of July 2, 1836, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL.

For gas, electric power and light, and the repair of machinery, United States Post Office Department equipment shops building, $4,500.

For salaries of post-office inspectors: For salaries of 15 inspectors in charge of divisions, at $3,000 each; 30 inspectors, at $2,400 each; 20 inspectors, at $2,250 each; 32 inspectors, at $2,100 each; 20 inspectors, at $2,000 each; 30 inspectors, at $1,900 each; 90 inspectors, at $1,800 each; 60 inspectors, at $1,700 each; 60 inspectors, at $1,600 each; and 65 inspectors, at $1,500 each; in all, including increases hereinafter provided, $968,100.

So much as may be necessary for the increases provided for in this act is hereby appropriated.

SEC. 3. That hereafter watchmen, messengers, and laborers in first and second class post offices, and railway postal clerks assigned to terminal railway post offices and transfer offices, shall be required to work not more than 8 hours a day, and that the 8 hours of service shall not extend over a longer period than 10 consecutive hours, and that in cases of emergency or if the needs of the service require they may be required to work in excess of 8 hours a day, and for such additional services they shall be paid in proportion to their salaries as fixed by law: Provided, That hereafter when the needs of the Postal Service require the employment on Sundays and holidays of railway postal clerks assigned to terminal railway post offices and transfer offices, they shall be granted compensatory time in the same manner as provided by law for clerks and carriers in first and second class offices.

SEC. 4. That the Postmaster General is authorized to investigate conditions arising from contracts in the star route, screen wagon, and other vehicle service entered into prior to June 30, 1917, and from contracts for furnishing envelopes, blanks and blank books, and the Official Postal Guide, for contracts entered into prior to June 30, 1917, with a view to determining whether any adjustment should be made in the compensation and to adjust the same for materials or services hereafter to be furnished or rendered in cases where the facts disclose the necessity for such adjustment, or, in his discretion, with the consent of the contractor and his bondsmen, the Postmaster General may cancel such contracts.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MOON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. FRANCIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the war legislation of this session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

UNIFORMS OF FRIENDLY NATIONS.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, which I ask the Clerk to report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11247) providing for the protection of the uniform of friendly nations, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any persons within the United States or Territories, possessions, waters, or places subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to wear any naval, military, police, or other official uniform, decoration, or regalia of any State, nation, or Government with which the United States is at peace, or any uniform, decoration, or regalia so nearly resembling the same as to be calculated to deceive, unless such wearing thereof be authorized by such State, nation, or Government.

Any person who violates the provisions of this act shall upon conviction be punished by a fine not exceeding $300 or imprisonment for not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice some phraseology there which I regard as rather awkward. In line 4 of page 1 I find this language, "within the United States or Territories." That is a phrase that I am not acquainted with.

Mr. WEBB. "United States or Territories, possessions, waters, or places subject to the jurisdiction of the United States." I think that is the way the phrase goes.

Mr. STAFFORD. There should be at least a comma after the word "States."

Mr. WEBB. I think that would be better punctuation.

Mr. STAFFORD. And "territories" with a small "t." The way it reads now, "United States or Territories" might refer——

Mr. WEBB. That is the Printing Office style. A comma may correct that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I want to inquire, in case this bill is adopted, whether on the stage in theatrical performances, where the scene is laid perhaps in a foreign country, a person taking some rôle where he has occasion to use the uniform would be barred?

Mr. WEBB. I think not. We put in the words "with intent to deceive or mislead" for the purpose of protecting that character of people. It is a unanimous report, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment, with committee amendments as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "persons," insert the words "with intent to deceive or mislead."

Page 1, line 7, after the word "any," insert the word "foreign."

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. There is a Senate bill designed to accomplish the same result, is there not?

Mr. WEBB. I do not know that it is pending before our committee.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; there is.

Mr. ROGERS. I think a bill has passed the Senate, and I wondered if this bill was practically identical with the Senate bill it would not expedite the final conclusion if by unanimous consent the Senate bill was substituted for this.

Mr. WEBB. I do not know that the Senate bill is identical with this, because the committee has made some amendments.

Mr. ROGERS. I think it is identical, barring the two committee amendments.

Mr. WEBB. That may be correct.

Mr. ROGERS. Under those circumstances, could it not be arranged that we should pass the Senate bill?

Mr. WEBB. As far as I am concerned, I thought that the House bill might be passed and go to the Senate, and they could pass it as quickly as they could to agree to the amendments we might put on the Senate bill.

Mr. ROGERS. But the problem of getting the bill up in the Senate would be easier if we amended the Senate bill.

Mr. WEBB. I have no objection if the Senate bill has these amendments put upon it.

Mr. CALDWELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Is this the bill that was rereferred from the Military Committee to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. WEBB. No.

Mr. CALDWELL. I think there was a bill rereferred from the Military Committee to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. There is no Senate bill like this over here.

Mr. WALSH. If the Chair will permit, I have a distinct recollection of a bill of this nature, practically identical in language, coming over from the Senate and being referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and, upon my request, was rereferred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WEBB. The Senate bill was not before our committee when we considered this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WEBB, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CHEMICAL SECTION, BUREAU OF MINES.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from President Wilson to Dr. Manning, Director of the Bureau of Mines, and one from Secretary Baker to the President.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the documents referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 25, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In connection with the proposed transfer of the chemical section at American University from the Bureau of Mines to the newly constituted and consolidated gas service of the War Department, which you are considering, I am specially concerned to have you know how much the War Department appreciates the splendid services which have been rendered to the country and to the Army by the Department of the Interior, and especially by the Bureau of Mines, under the direction of Dr. Manning. In the early days of preparation and organization, Dr. Manning's contact with scientific men throughout the country was indispensably valuable. He was able to summon from the universities and the technical laboratories of the country men of the highest quality, and to inspire them with enthusiastic zeal in attacking new and difficult problems which had to be solved with the utmost speed. I do not see how the work could have been better done than he did it, and the present suggestion that the section now pass under the direction and control of the War Department grows out of the fact that the whole subject of gas warfare has assumed a fresh pressure and intensity, and the director of it must have the widest control so as to be able to use the resources at his command in the most effective way possible. The proposal does not involve the disruption of the fine group of scientific men Dr. Manning has brought together, but merely their transfer to Gen. Sibert's direction.

Respectfully, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER.

THE PRESIDENT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, 26 June, 1918.

MY DEAR DR. MANNING: I have had before me for some days the question presented by the Secretary of War involving the transfer of the chemical section established by you at the American University from the Bureau of Mines to the newly organized Division of Gas Warfare, in which the War Department is now concentrating all the various facilities for offensive and defensive gas operations. I am satisfied that a more efficient organization can be effected by having these various activities under one direction and control, and my hesitation about acting in the matter has grown only out of a reluctance to take away from the Bureau of Mines a piece of work which thus far it has so effectively performed. The Secretary of War has assured me of his own recognition of the splendid work you have been able to do, and I am taking the liberty of inclosing a letter which I have received from him in order that you may see how fully the War Department recognizes the value of the services.

I am to-day signing the order directing the transfer. I want, however, to express to you my own appreciation of the fine and helpful piece of work which you have done, and to say that this sort of teamwork by the bureaus outside of the direct war-making agency is one of the cheering and gratifying evidences of the way our official forces are inspired by the presence of a great national task.

Cordially, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

Dr. VAN H. MANNING,
Chief Bureau of Mines, Department of the Interior.

EXECUTIVE ORDER.

It is hereby ordered that the experiment station at American University, Washington, D. C., which station has been established under the supervision of the Bureau of Mines, Interior Department, for the purpose of making gas investigations for the Army, under authority of appropriations made for the Ordnance and Medical Departments of the Army, together with the personnel thereof, be, and the same is hereby, placed under the control of the War Department for operation under the Director of Gas Service of the Army.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
25 June, 1918.

FOURTEENTH DECENNIAL CENSUS.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11984, providing for the Fourteenth decennial census.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question? I think the House would be interested to know what the program is for this evening, whether there are other matters that require our staying here late, and if so, how late, because I suppose the gentleman would not wish to continue this bill if there was some such purpose.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I can state that information has come to some of us that the Senate will be ready to send the military bill here by 7 o'clock. There are something like 300 amendments, and they have to be engrossed; but I understand they will be here by 7 o'clock. It is thought wise to at least remain in session until that time.

Mr. GILLETT. It might be wise to take a recess and come back and have an evening session. We do not want to stay until midnight without a recess.

Mr. HELM. Those gentlemen not interested in the census bill have my consent to go and stay as long as they please.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman will not get consent to have less than a quorum to consider the census bill.

Mr. GILLETT. If we are going to have an evening session, it would be wise to take a recess for two hours, so that some of us who want to be here can come back.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11984, to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were 32 ayes and 27 noes.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That the Director of the Census may authorize and direct supervisors of census to employ interpreters to assist the enumerators of their respective districts in the enumeration of persons not speaking the English language, but no authorization shall be given for such employment in any district until due and proper effort has been made to employ an enumerator who can speak the language or languages for which the services of an interpreter would otherwise be required. It shall be the duty of such interpreters to accompany the enumerators and faithfully translate the latter's inquiries and the replies thereto, but in no case shall any such interpreter perform the duties of enumerator unless commissioned as such by the Director of the Census. The compensation of such interpreters shall be fixed by the Director of the Census in advance and shall not exceed $5 per day for each day actually and necessarily employed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I believe there has been some change in the phraseology of this section from that carried in prior laws. I wish to inquire as to the special need for this mandatory direction that is now carried for the first time, requiring the interpreters to accompany the enumerators. Have there been any abuses heretofore, whereby the translators did not correctly enumerate the statistics that were to be submitted for tabulation?

Mr. HELM. The purpose is to correct anything of that kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. Merely to improve the record of the statistics.

Mr. HELM. Yes; to avoid inaccuracies and abuses.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee whether there are many instances where translators are obliged to accompany the enumerators?

Mr. HELM. Not very many, so I am advised.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Here is the statement in the hearing as to the abuse that this is intended to correct:

In its original form this section authorized the employment of interpreters to assist the enumerators, but did not define the assistance they were to render, although Congress undoubtedly intended that they should assist by interpreting only, and that they should not do any actual enumerating. In the enumeration of the population of a western city during the taking of the Thirteenth decennial census, however, certain interpreters were employed who "assisted" the enumerators by making the actual enumeration of the Chinese and Japanese population. Although extensive frauds were discovered in their schedules, they could not be prosecuted because of the failure of the law to define their duties. This defect in the law will, it is believed, be remedied by the above-proposed amendment, which not only prescribes the duties of interpreters, but also specifically prohibits their acting as enumerators unless commissioned as such by the director.

In other words, it is intended that they shall act solely as interpreters.

Mr. STAFFORD. And their acts must be part of the acts of the enumerator, by accompanying him, so as to make any irregularity a misdemeanor or a misfeasance of their official duties?

Mr. HELM. Yes; so I understand it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, and had come to no resolution thereon.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report and statement on the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 10854).

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman any request to make?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of it. It is a complete report. The Senate receded on all of the remaining amendments, and that completes the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Did the Senate recede on amendments 37, 47, 52, and 170?

Mr. PADGETT. It did.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the report and statement be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; they will be printed. The Senate receded on all the disputed matters that we had up yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this conference report, notwithstanding the rule about first printing it in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report ought to be read.

Mr. PADGETT. The Senate receded on all of the amendments.

Mr. GILLETT. Either the report or the statement ought to be read.

Mr. PADGETT. The report is very short.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement of the House conferees are as follows:

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a brief survey of the work of the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of the waf measures of this Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISPOSITION OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS IN POSSESSION OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10851) to provide a method for disposing of intoxicating liquors now or hereafter in the possession of United States court officials, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 10851, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, let us have the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all intoxicating liquors now in the possession of the officials of any United States court which have been seized and held as evidence in any prosecution in such court, which prosecution is no longer pending, shall be destroyed by the official having the custody of the same unless claimed by the owner within 60 days from the passage of this act, and all such liquors held for use as evidence in cases now or hereafter pending which shall be disposed of without conviction shall likewise be destroyed if not claimed by the owner within 30 days after the case shall be disposed of.

SEC. 2. That hereafter when any person shall be convicted upon a charge of violating the laws of the United States against causing intoxicating liquors to be transported into States or Territories the laws of which prohibit the manufacture or sale of such liquors, the judgment of the court shall include an order directing the marshal to destroy all such liquors as may have been used or held for use as evidence on the trial: Provided, That in cases now pending the order to destroy shall be conditioned upon the failure of the owner to claim said liquors within 30 days after conviction.

SEC. 3. That hereafter all intoxicating liquors seized under the provisions of section 240 of the Penal Code in any State, Territory, or District the laws of which forbid the sale of such liquors for beverage purposes shall be destroyed instead of sold.

SEC. 4. That in all cases in which intoxicating liquors may be subject to be destroyed under the provisions of this act the court shall have jurisdiction upon the application of the United States attorney to order them delivered to any department or agency of the United States Government for medicinal, mechanical, or scientific uses.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 7, after the word "liquors," insert the words "said liquors shall be forfeited to the United States, and"

Page 2, line 9, strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether or not this bill contains a provision whereby the Government can utilize that liquor for its own purpose in the manufacture of munitions or for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Yes. The last section of the bill provides that all liquors which are subject to be destroyed under the provisions of the act may by the court be ordered turned over to any department or agency of the Government for medicinal, mechanical, and scientific purposes.

Mr. GARNER. That does not exactly turn it over to the Government. It leaves the matter in the discretion of the court as to whether it shall be turned over to the Government or poured out on the street. Why does not the gentleman lodge with the executive branch of the Government the right to utilize this property for its own use, scientific or otherwise?

Mr. WALSH. There is a good deal of fiction about there being a wide range for the use of intoxicating liquors besides drinking it. A great deal of that which is seized is of very poor quality and it would be more expensive to try to utilize it for any scientific purpose than it would be to use pure alcohol. With other grades of the product it can be used and the Attorney General or his representatives can make application to the court and of course the court can order that turned over to any department of the Government.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that, but if a clause were inserted in the bill absolutely providing that this liquor or alcohol might be used by the Government for scientific purposes it would automatically go to some branch of the Government which had the duty to use alcohol in the manufacture of ammunition or other products where alcohol is used.

Mr. WALSH. If that were done, it would simply mean the storage of vast quantities of liquors that are now cluttering up various buildings and warehouses throughout the country. It would have to be stored until it could be used. There are such great quantities of this that some place would have to be provided to take care of it until it is redistilled, or whatever the process is that it is put through.

Mr. GARNER. I understand from the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB], the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, that this bill was drawn in pursuance of a request from the Attorney General?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. I so stated at the beginning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WALSH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FOURTEENTH AND OTHER DECENNIAL CENSUSES.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the census bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARKLEY. Pending that, I want to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to have printed a couple of short resolutions—one passed by the Southern Methodist conference and another by the executive committee of the Anti-Saloon League on the subject of war prohibition.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object to extending remarks by printing resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11984.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11984), the census bill, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11984, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses.

SEC. 16. That the compensation of enumerators shall be determined by the Director of the Census as follows: In subdivisions where he shall deem such remuneration sufficient, an allowance of not less than 2 nor more than 4 cents for each inhabitant; not less than 20 nor more than 30 cents for each establishment of productive industry reported; not less than 20 nor more than 30 cents for each farm reported; not less than 20 nor more than 50 cents for each irrigation or drainage enterprise reported; and 10 cents for each barn and inclosure containing live stock not on farms. In other subdivisions the Director of the Census may fix a mixed rate of not less than $1 nor more than $2 per day and, in addition, an allowance of not less than 1 nor more than 3 cents for each inhabitant enumerated, and not less than 15 nor more than 20 cents for each farm and each establishment of productive industry reported. In other subdivisions per diem rates shall be fixed by the director according to the difficulty of enumeration, having special reference to the regions to be canvassed and the sparsity of settlement or other considerations pertinent thereto. The compensation allowed to an enumerator in any such district shall not be less than $3 nor more than $6 per day of eight hours' actual field work, and no payment shall be made for time in excess of eight hours for any one day. The subdivisions or enumeration districts to which the several rates of compensation shall apply shall be designated by the Director of the Census at least two weeks in advance of the enumeration. No claim for mileage or traveling expenses shall be allowed any enumerator in either class of subdivisions, except in extreme cases, and then only when authority has been previously granted by the Director of the Census; and the decision of the director as to the amount due any enumerator shall be final.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee. Is there anything in this bill that requires supervisors or enumerators to be actual residents of the districts or localities in which their work is to be done?

Mr. HELM. No, sir; there never has been so far as I know.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Does not the chairman think there ought to be such a provision?

Mr. HELM. I can not see anything to be accomplished by it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I am not sure that the chairman is right in saying there has been no law, but the practice has been uniform of requiring that a supervisor shall be a resident of his district and that the enumerator shall be an actual resident of the territory in which he does the work. As that has been the practice and custom and accepted as that which is right and should be followed, should not a provision be inserted requiring it?

Mr. HELM. Well, there is no particular objection to it. I think the Director would unquestionably follow the uniform practice, but if the gentleman wants to offer an amendment that they shall be residents he can do so; but the gentleman must bear in mind that at this particular time there might be some difficulty in some particular locality in getting the right type of men for enumerators. Certainly you want a person who understands or who has had some experience in doing this kind of work. There are probably several sections of the country where it is difficult to get the best type, and you are looking for efficiency and the getting of the best results, so I believe it would be wise to leave it as it is.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think the chairman is entirely right. There is some important work to be done, but I am not willing to believe in each district of the United States there is not some one abundantly able to do it.

Mr. HELM. I am convinced that in the gentleman's district, that in my district, that there will be no difficulty whatever, but I can imagine out in the far West, in Alaska, Hawaii, or some sections of the island of Porto Rico, there would. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan there has been no instance brought to the attention of the committee by any official from the bureau where the necessity as indicated by the gentleman from Michigan has arisen.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. of Michigan. I have no intention of reflecting on the Director of the Census or anyone else in authority. I trust those gentlemen, of course, but there are a thousand and one ways in which this House ought to express itself and not leave so much to the discretion of officials.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman is aware of the fact that we are to take the census of the islands of Guam and Samoa?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. HELM. And it might be possible in some of the districts in those remote islands it would be impossible to find a suitable person in that particular district to do the work. I believe it is the safe side of the proposition to leave it as it is.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That may be true as to those outlying possessions. I am not familiar enough with them to express an opinion, but in continental United States I think Congress ought not to hesitate to put in such a provision as I suggest.

Mr. HELM. If I did not entertain a doubt as to the ability to comply with the section in Alaska, Guam, Samoa, Porto Rico, and some of the outlying possessions I would agree with the proposition of the gentleman at once. I am not especially opposed to it as it is, but I believe we get the best results by leaving it as it is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of making a brief statement. I presume that the Members have noticed during the consideration of this bill, H. R. 11984, the efforts made by our colleague, the lady from Montana [Miss RANKIN], to perfect the measure. I note that she added an important amendment with reference to the employment of women enumerators and clerks, and I presume the membership here generally will hope that that amendment will stay in the bill. In connection with the work of the lady from Montana I should like to make a further brief statement, to the effect that it has come to my knowledge that some persons in the western part of the country are actually charging that our colleague is a member of the I. W. W., basing their charges on an inquiry that I made of the lady during the progress of one of her speeches on this floor.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In a minute I shall be pleased to yield. Of course, all who know the Representative from Montana [Miss RANKIN] would know that any such charge or even suspicion of it would be preposterous, and I would be glad of an opportunity, if any remarks of mine have led to such suspicion, to make a statement to the contrary on the floor. It is not even fair to intimate that Miss RANKIN is sympathetic with the organization.

Now, if I have a little time remaining, I would like to say to the Members that this matter of the development of the I. W. W. has been a serious one indeed in the far West. It has led to many misunderstandings, of course. But in all communities where it has asserted itself the people who employ labor have had to come to a determination as to whether they would deal with organized labor, which makes contracts and keeps contracts, or deal with this mob, which makes contracts only to break them, which goes into mills only to watch the chance to burn and destroy them, and into the mines for the same purpose.

Mr. Chairman, I have been watching with much interest the progress of the bill S. 4471, "to declare unlawful associations purposing by physical force, violence, or injury to bring about any governmental, social, industrial, or economic change in the United States and prescribing punishment for persons engaged in the activities of such associations, and for other purposes." That bill is necessary, and I am sorry that this session seems to be about approaching a recess period without this bill having reached the calendar of the House. I sincerely hope that when we will have returned to resume the work of this Congress this bill will find its place on the calendar with a unanimous report from the Committee on the Judiciary, and that it will receive prompt consideration on the floor and be passed.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I am not very familiar with the bill, but it strikes me that if an amendment is to be adopted along the line I suggested it should be in connection with this section 16. It is a very proper place, at least, and I wish to offer an amendment, but I have not one prepared. Therefore I ask unanimous consent for leave to return to this section later for that purpose.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Make the request later. When you get the amendment ready let us know.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I make the request now. I do not think it is unreasonable.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] asks unanimous consent for leave to return to this section later for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BORLAND having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 158) futher extending the time within which the joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue temporary permits for additional diversions of water from the Niagara River shall remain in effect.

FOURTEENTH AND SUBSEQUENT DECENNIAL CENSUSES.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. That in the event of the death of any supervisor or enumerator after his appointment and entrance on his duties, the Director of the Census is authorized to pay to the widow or legal representative of such supervisor or enumerator such sum as he may deem just and fair for the services rendered by such supervisor or enumerator.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think this is very curious language. I do not know whether it has been in the law before or not. Take, for example, the employment of enumerators, and they are employed for the purpose of getting the names within a few blocks and might not be employed for more than two or three days, or a week at the outside, and there ought not to be any provision in this bill to authorize anybody to pay to their widows or families, in case of their decease during that three or four days of employment or a week's employment, any compensation.

Mr. ASWELL. That means for the work already done.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not understand it that way. I thought it was compensation, provided that they should die in the service.

Mr. ASWELL. It is for the work done.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I will withdraw everything that I have said.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. That special agents may be appointed by the Director of the Census to carry out the provisions of this act and of the act to provide for a permanent Census Office, approved March 6, 1902, and acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto; and such special agents shall perform such duties in connection with the enforcement of said acts as may be required of them by the Director of the Census. The special agents thus appointed shall receive compensation at rates to be fixed by the Director of the Census, such compensation, however, not to exceed $6 per diem except as hereinafter provided: Provided, That during the decennial census period the Director of the Census may fix the compensation of not to exceed 25 special agents, who shall be persons of known and tried experience in statistical work, at an amount not to exceed $10 per diem: Provided further, That the Director of the Census may, in his discretion, fix the compensation of special agents on a piece-price basis without limitation as to the amount earned per diem: And provided further, That the special agents appointed under this section shall be entitled to necessary traveling expenses and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not to exceed $4 per diem during necessary absence from their usual places of residence; but no pay or allowance in lieu of subsistence shall be allowed special agents when employed in the Census Office on other than the special work committed to them, and no appointments of special agents shall be made for clerical work: And provided further, That the Director of the Census shall have power, and is hereby authorized, to appoint special agents to assist the supervisors whenever he may deem it proper, in connection with the work of preparation for, or during the progress of, the enumeration or in connection with the reenumeration of any district or a part thereof; or he may, in his discretion, employ for this purpose any of the permanent or temporary employees of the Census Office; and the special agents and employees of the Census Office so appointed or employed shall perform such duties in connection with the enforcement of this act as may be required of them by the Director of the Census or by the supervisors of the districts to which they are assigned, and when engaged in the work of enumeration or reenumeration shall have like authority with and perform the same duties as the enumerators in respect to the subjects committed to them under this act.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Comparing section 18 of this bill with the old law, it seems to be a very radical and marked departure from the provisions of section 18 of the old law. It provides among other things that the compensation shall be increased from $6 in the old bill to $10 in this bill, and that is quite a radical departure. I would like to have the chairman explain the cause of this difference between the existing law and this proposed act.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman, I suppose, has reference to the language in lines 20 to 24?

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes. That is entirely new, as I gather by comparison with existing law.

Mr. HELM. Of course those special agents are limited to a compensation of $6 a day. Now, the 25 special agents whose compensation is not to exceed $10 a day are types of men who are professors of colleges, experts in compiling and publishing the data in readable form. The special agent who goes out to take the data of manufactures receives $6 a day. The special agents who are experienced in statistical work are the men who write the reports.

Mr. ROBBINS. Well, I see here in lines 8, 9, and 10 there is a provision for special agents appointed under this section also. What is the difference between the 25 agents and those other classes of special agents who are to be given $4 a day for subsistence? The gentleman has been speaking of the 25 special agents, who are to be college men and who are allowed $10 a day. When you come to the proviso in lines 8, 9, and 10, there is a line of special agents to be appointed under this act who are to be entitled to traveling expenses and allowance for subsistence not exceeding $4 a day. You say one class is to be college professors. What are the others to be?

Mr. HELM. All classes of special agents are to receive necessary traveling expenses and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not to exceed $4 a day. All grades of special agents are to receive traveling expenses and subsistence.

Mr. ROBBINS. What is the difference between the 25 special agents and those others in line 8?

Mr. HELM. I have just explained the difference between the two. The $6 special agent is the agent who visits a factory and ascertains the volume of work done, the number of men employed, and the capital invested, and makes an invoice of the manufacturing establishment. The $10 a day special agent is the man who writes the bound volumes of reports that you see in the director's office. They are college men; men who have had special training and experience in writing and compiling all the work that is done in the office of publication.

Mr. ROBBINS. Well, if you look in line 24 you will see that there are special agents who are connected with the Census Office, presumably the permanent employees, who are not to be paid anything, so that you have three lines of special agents covered in this paragraph.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It says "special agents of the Census Office so appointed and employed."

Mr. ROBBINS. So you have three lines of special agents in this paragraph.

Mr. HELM. All of them are under the direction of the director.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would like to have just a minute more to clear that up.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASWELL. I would like to make a statement as to that.

Mr. ROBBINS. Certainly.

Mr. ASWELL. The Census Bureau is always referred to as the "Census Office." That is the cause of the confusion. The official title is the "Census Office."

Mr. ROBBINS. Well, the employees in the Census Office are another set of employees who are permanently there, making in all three classes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the purpose of the committee in increasing the allowance for these 25 special agents beyond that authorized in the last census act. My attention was diverted——

Mr. HELM. I think it is an entirely new provision. I do not think this type of special agent has heretofore been employed.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have just sent to the Committee on Appropriations for a copy of the legislative appropriation act, to see the number of special agents and the per diem allowed.

Mr. HELM. There is a limited number. They are employed principally in gathering tobacco and cotton statistics and data of that kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. My attention was diverted by a gentleman drafting an amendment and I was not able to follow the debate or to note the gentleman's answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS]. Will the gentleman advise the committee as to the reason for increasing the per diem amount to $10?

Mr. HELM. I do not think that is an increase. As I said a moment ago, this is a new type of special agent that is provided for in this bill. They differ from the ordinary or usual special agents that have heretofore been employed. I think probably $5 and expenses and subsistence at $3 a day.

Mr. STAFFORD. What reason prompted the committee in making the rate as high as $10 a day? My reason for asking that question is that in the Internal-Revenue Office we have deputy collectors whose per diem is $8, $7, $6, $5, and very few, perhaps, at a higher rate. Now, you are placing these 25 at $10 a day, or, rather, not to exceed $10 a day, but in the administration of the office we know, of course, that they will undoubtedly receive the maximum compensation of $10. What was the reason that prompted the committee in fixing that high per diem allowance, which would be at the rate of $3,600 a year?

Mr. HELM. I think there was a gentleman by the name of Prof. Wilcox, who was connected with Cornell University, who assisted the director and the chiefs of divisions in writing and publishing the bound volumes of the census reports. It is a work that requires the services of men who are of the type of Prof. Wilcox and of the president of a college in West Virginia who also assisted in this work. It is to induce men of this kind to assist in preparing these volumes in the manner in which they should be prepared. Of course, you have to offer them some reasonable compensation. It does not mean that they get $10 per day for a year, or anything of that kind. They are employed for quite a limited period and necessarily have to leave their homes and come to Washington and work in the office.

Mr. ASWELL. I should like to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that after these statistics have been gathered they are not of very great value unless they are interpreted—that is, so to speak, made to talk—and this particular class of experts are the men who take the statistics that have been gathered and make them mean something. It requires a very high class of intelligence and training to do that, and you can not get those men for less than that amount now.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I have just had handed to me a volume that I have been trying to get for the last 15 minutes giving the rates of pay of the present special agents.

Mr. ASWELL. They are men of a different type.

Mr. STAFFORD. This gives the estimates of the department for the coming fiscal year. I think we should ponder a moment on this subject as to whether we should increase this to $10.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Has the gentleman there the estimate for the per diem for these special agents?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not these particular special agents, but the men now employed in the bureau.

Mr. ASWELL. Oh, well, they are employed continuously, while these men work only a few weeks.

Mr. STAFFORD. In response to the gentleman from Louisiana, we utilize the services of educators in other work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. These men are paid by the educational institutions that employ them, and their salaries continue.

Mr. FLOOD. Not always.

Mr. ASWELL. Not always at all. They do not continue during vacation at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Most of these educators are on an annual salary; perhaps not those in the South——

Mr. ASWELL. Many of them are not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Every professor or instructor in any leading institution is on an annual salary.

Mr. FLOOD. They are on an annual salary; but when they get leave of absence to do work for other people, or for the Government, the salary is discontinued.

Mr. ASWELL. Of course.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me say to the gentleman from Virginia that there are many educational institutions that grant what is known as a sabbatical year to their professors or instructors—that is, leave of absence for a year every seventh year—for which they are paid their full salaries. This per diem allowance is a perquisite in addition to their regular salaries.

Now, I wish to go back to the matter I was speaking about, that in the estimates for the next fiscal year for the Bureau of the Census we find no higher estimate for these special agents than $8 a day. Five are estimated for, and five were employed in 1917. There are four estimated for at $7 per day, of whom none were employed in 1917.

There are 18 men estimated for at $6 per day, of which 6 were in the employment of the Government in 1917. There are 2 estimated for at $5.50 a day, and 2 employed in 1917. There are 4 estimated for at $5 a day, and 3 employed in 1917. And so on down to $4. Thirty-one estimated for this year, being the lowest grade of these special agents. I am considering it in connection with the permanent force in the legislative bill as to whether it is advisable to provide a higher salary for the per diem employees than those on the statutory roll.

Mr. HELM. In all these increases in both classes of special agents, from 5 to 6 in one class and 8 to 10 in the other, with traveling expenses, subsistence, all are increased on the idea of the increased cost of living.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may say that the legislative, executive, and judicial subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations did not provide any increase in the higher-paid officials. That is the reason why I am making inquiry so as to have a consonance of legislation in both bills.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The first appropriation bill that will carry an appropriation to cover the special agents will be the one for the fiscal year beginning in 1919. The report says:

The maximum salary for special agents is, in general, the same as it was before, namely, $6 per diem. The insertion of the proviso that a limited number of special agents, who shall be persons of known and tried experience in statistical work, may be appointed at higher salaries simply incorporates in the main census act a provision which at the last census was covered by an amendatory clause introduced in the urgent deficiency act of 1909. It is not, therefore, a new feature. The maximum number of such expert special agents has, however, been increased from 20 to 25, and their maximum compensation from $8 to $10 per diem, this increase in number and compensation being deemed necessary in order to make it possible to secure under existing conditions the amount and grade of assistance required for the class of expert work on which these agents are to be employed.

In view of the increased cost of living, the allowance in lieu of subsistence for special agents has been increased from $3 to $4 a day.

That is the suggestion made by the special committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the committee has followed the recommendations of the special committee. That is a question which I sought to propound to the gentleman yesterday when he did not have time to yield—as to whether these gentlemen that constituted the special committee are any or all Government employees. I notice the name of Mr. Steuart, who, I believe, has been in the employ of the Bureau of Census.

Mr. HELM. I think he is on the Tariff Board now.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think all of these are in the employ of the Bureau of Census, unless one of them has become secretary of the Tariff Commission; and I am not sure of that.

Mr. HELM. That is Mr. Steuart, a former chief statistician of the bureau, and he is now with the Tariff Board.

Mr. STAFFORD. I question the advisability of increasing the per diem to $10, in view of the fact that the bureau did not ask more than $8 for the permanent force.

Mr. ASWELL. The work is entirely different.

Mr. STAFFORD. No.

Mr. ALEXANDER. These men have been carried heretofore; these are not new experts, and the number is increased from 20 to 25. The chairman is in error as to this being a new service.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recognize that it may be supported in the policy to have a higher rate because of the increased cost of living; but when we pay a man $8 a day, that would seem to be ample, because we have commissioners of the Government who negotiate treaties that do not receive $10 a day. It is allowing professors on the pay rolls of colleges an honorarium of $10 in addition.

Mr. ALEXANDER. They are high-class men. They prepare special articles that appear in volumes on manufactures, mines, and mining. They are college men and do the work aside from their regular work in the institutions of learning. They may be engaged a few days or a few weeks.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know the Government in many activities utilizes the educators in special work.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. That the enumeration of the population required by section 1 of this act shall be taken as of the 1st day of January, and it shall be the duty of each enumerator to commence the enumeration of his district on the day following, unless the Director of the Census in his discretion shall defer the enumeration in said district by reason of climatic or other conditions which would materially interfere with the proper conduct of the work; but in any event it shall be the duty of each enumerator to prepare the returns hereinbefore required to be made and to forward the same to the supervisor of his district within 30 days from the commencement of the enumeration of his district: Provided, That in any city having 2,500 inhabitants or more under the preceding census the enumeration of the population shall be completed within two weeks from the commencement thereof.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. How do they ascertain the number of inhabitants in a city so that it can be stated that the enumeration must be completed within two weeks. They say 2,500 or more. There are very few cities in the sense in which the term is used that have only 2,500 inhabitants. What I am trying to ascertain is how they have fixed this as to population so that they can require the enumeration within two weeks.

Mr. HELM. The object of the director is to lay off a certain portion of the cities, so that the enumerator can complete the work within the prescribed time. I suppose in a city the size of New York the entire population, according to the last census, would be divided in such a way that enough enumerators would be appointed to canvass a given district within a given period.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but here, we will say, is a town of some 2,000 inhabitants. They can take more than two weeks to make the enumeration of that town. It provides in the bill here that, having 2,500 or more inhabitants, the enumeration shall be completed within two weeks, so that if they have less the implication is that they may have a longer time in which to complete the enumeration.

Mr. HELM. The population is necessarily more congested in the cities than in the country.

Mr. WALSH. That all depends upon what you call a city. Take a city of 2,500——

Mr. ASWELL. That is not a city.

Mr. WALSH. Which is not a city according to the usual acceptation of the word "city" and according to the laws of some States, as in some States communities can not be made cities until they have 10,000 or 12,000 or possibly 6,000 or 8,000 inhabitants. The point I make is this: Here is a community with 2,400 or 2,300 people. You permit by implication a longer period than two weeks in which to complete the enumeration of that particular community, whereas, if it should have 2,600 people they have to complete it within two weeks.

Mr. HELM. In the city of Washington, in the heart of the city, a person can within a much shorter time take the enumeration of any block, which would have perhaps 3,000 or 4,000 people in it, if it is the congested part of the city, whereas an enumerator out in the rural districts has to travel about over the country and it consumes more time. A man can go in an office building, like the Woolworth Building in New York City, and possibly he would find more people in that building in the city of New York than are in my home town.

Mr. WALSH. Do they enumerate people in office buildings?

Mr. HELM. I suspect that some of them live in the office buildings.

Mr. WALSH. I expect they do not except possibly the janitor or watchman.

Mr. HELM. They have, of course, to go to the homes of the heads of the families.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Will not this permit the districting of a city into areas of in the vicinity of 2,500 people or even more and the employment of a great many more enumerators for that community than if the same length of time was permitted for completing the census that would be permitted for a smaller settlement?

Mr. HELM. There is no difference in the compensation.

Mr. WALSH. I know that, but you permit more people to be compensated.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will give the gentleman the reason assigned for this by the committee. I read to you a provision of the existing law:

That in any city having 5,000 inhabitants or more under the preceding census the enumeration of the population shall be commenced on the 15th day of April aforesaid and shall be completed within two weeks thereafter.

The only amendment to that is this: That "5,000" be stricken out and "2,500" inserted, and the time is changed from the 15th of April to the 1st of January, and here is what the committee says:

The minimum population limit for cities in which the enumeration is to be completed within two weeks has been lowered from 5,000 to 2,500. The enumeration of all areas of fairly compact population should be completed in the shortest possible time, and it seems entirely feasible to have the stipulation as to two weeks apply in 1920 to all places of 2,500 inhabitants or more as shown by the census of 1910.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, that will be just what I stated. By lowering the minimum limit of population it would permit a city or large community to be carved up into districts and therefore would require more enumerators.

Mr. ALEXANDER. In these small cities or towns of less than 2,500 inhabitants there is no reason why the enumeration should extend during 30 days.

Mr. WALSH. There is no reason why it should extend over two weeks, but you seemingly permit it to extend over two weeks under the provisions of this bill. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "2,500" and inserting "5,000," in order to conform with existing law.

Mr. HELM. I accept the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. The chairman of the committee accepts my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lines 4 and 5, page 20, strike out "2,500" and insert "5,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question about a provision omitted from existing law. The old law of July 2, 1909, has a provision providing for the enumeration of those unfortunates designated as paupers, prisoners, juvenile delinquents, insane, feeble-minded, blind, deaf and dumb, and inmates of benevolent institutions. Now, those are entirely omitted from section 20. What provision is made in this bill for these persons so designated?

Mr. HELM. That work is done by special agents sent to the institutions where these people are confined, either by correspondence or by special agent.

Mr. ROBBINS. Well, ought not there be some provision of this kind with relation to that which was carried in the old law, which seemed to have worked satisfactorily?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The people who administered the old law think not, and hence suggested the change.

Mr. ROBBINS. What provision is to be made in lieu of the provision now in existing law?

Mr. ALEXANDER. They get it from the institutions through special agents provided for in the law. There is not any trouble about that. This is a better way to do it.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the returns be made by special agents of these institutions?

Mr. ALEXANDER. By special agents provided for in this bill.

Mr. ROBBINS. Special agents in the last paragraph are to visit these institutions and get the lists?

Mr. HELM. The superintendents of asylums would write to the Director of the Census and tell how many inmates there were in those institutions.

Mr. ROBBINS. Enumerators who do the work of special agents?

Mr. HELM. Certainly, outside the correspondence.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, under the unanimous-consent agreement I ask to return to section 16 to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the former permission the gentleman asks to return to section 16 to offer an amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Page 17, line 6, at the end of line 6 add the following: "Provided, That within the limits of continental United States each supervisor to be appointed or selected under this act shall be an actual resident of the district, and each enumerator to be appointed or selected under this act shall be an actual resident of the subdivision within which his duties are to be performed, but an enumerator may be appointed if he be an actual resident of the city of which the subdivision in which his duties are to be performed is a part.

Mr. HELM. We agree to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. That it shall be the duty of all persons over 21 years of age when requested by the Director of the Census, or by any supervisor, enumerator, or special agent, or other employee of the Census Office, acting under the instructions of the said director, to answer correctly, to the best of their knowledge, all questions on the census schedules applying to themselves and to the families to which they belong or are related, and to the farm or farms of which they or their families are the occupants; and any person over 21 years of age who, under the conditions hereinbefore stated, shall refuse or willfully neglect to answer any of these questions, or shall willfully give answers that are false, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not exceeding $100.

And it is hereby made unlawful for any individual, committee, or other organization of any kind whatsoever, to offer or render to any supervisor, supervisor's clerk, enumerator, interpreter, special agent, or other officer or employee of the Census Office engaged in making an enumeration of population, either directly or indirectly, any suggestion, advice, or assistance of any kind, with the intent or purpose of causing an inaccurate enumeration of population to be made, either as to the number of persons resident in any district or community, or in any other respect; and any individual, or any officer or member of any committee or other organization of any kind whatsoever, who directly or indirectly offers or renders any such suggestion, advice, information, or assistance, with such unlawful intent or purpose, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not exceeding $5,000.

And it shall be the duty of every owner, proprietor, manager, superintendent, or agent of a hotel, apartment house, boarding or lodging house, tenement, or other building, when requested by the Director of the Census, or by any supervisor, enumerator, special agent, or other employee of the Census Office, acting under the instructions of the said director, to furnish the names of the occupants of said hotel, apartment house, boarding or lodging house, tenement, or other building, and to give thereto free ingress and egress to any duly accredited representative of the Census Office, so as to permit of the collection of statistics for census purposes, including the proper and correct enumeration of all persons having their usual place of abode in said hotel, apartment house, boarding or lodging house, tenement, or other building; and any owner, proprietor, manager, superintendent, or agent of a hotel, apartment house, boarding or lodging house, tenement, or other building who shall refuse or willfully neglect to give such information or assistance under the conditions hereinbefore stated shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not exceeding $500.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "twenty-one," in line 4, page 22, and insert in place thereof the word "eighteen."

Mr. HELM. I will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 4, strike out "twenty-one" and insert in lieu thereof "eighteen."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words in section 23, and I do this for the purpose of eliciting some information from those in charge of the bill. In lines 8, 9, and 10 it provides for certain questions to be answered by people who have farms.

Now, the existing law provides for the collection of statistics in a much broader sense, which would include factories, stores, or any other buildings, or any place where statistics and information must be obtained. Where is that in this bill? Why is section 23 limited to farms? Why do not you say stores, mills, forests, cattle, and other things?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is the language of the existing law.

Mr. ROBBINS. The existing law has this statement:

Shall have free ingress and egress so as to permit the collection of statistics for census purposes, including the proper and correct enumeration of all persons.

Mr. ALEXANDER. You are reading section 23, are you not?

Mr. ROBBINS. I am reading section 23 of the act of 1909, and when applying it to section 23 of the act now under consideration it does not give anything about these statistics. It goes on to say that certain information is to be divulged by people who own farms, and there it stops.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Oh, no.

Mr. ROBBINS. I am reading section 23 of the old law and comparing it with the proposed law, which I say is much more limited. Now, then, where do you get this information? Of course, you retreat behind the special agents you create in this bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I may not get the gentleman's point inasmuch as there has been so much confusion here.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is true; and I will state briefly this: I am reading from section 23, lines 8, 9, and 10, on page 22, that we are now considering. These lines provide here for instructions being given said director, that all persons shall answer correctly to the best of their knowledge all questions on the census schedules applying to themselves or to the families to which they belong or are related, and to the farm or farms of which they or their families are the occupants. Now, if you turn to the same provision in the old law it goes on and specifies in the same section, on page 9, that free ingress and egress shall be given to any duly accredited representative of the Census Office, so as to permit of the collection of statistics for census purposes, including the proper and correct enumerations of all persons having their usual place of abode——

Mr. HELM. That is on page 23, line 8.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is it covered in lines 18 and 19? Is that your idea of it—by the special agents visiting the premises for that purpose?

Mr. HELM. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. All right, then, that covers it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that the same amendment which I offered to line 4, page 22, should be inserted in line 12.

Mr. HELM. I accept it.

Mr. WALSH. I offer the amendment to strike out, on page 22, line 12, the words "twenty-one" and insert in place thereof the word "eighteen." The chairman, I understand, accepts the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia). The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WALSH: Page 22, line 12, strike out "twenty-one" and insert "eighteen."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 24. That it shall be the duty of every owner, official, agent, person in charge, or assistant to the person in charge, of any company, business, institution, establishment, religious body, or organization of any nature whatsoever, to answer completely and correctly to the best of his knowledge all questions relating to his respective company, business, institution, establishment, religious body, or other organization, or to records or statistics in his official custody, contained on any census schedule prepared by the Director of the Census under the authority of this act, or of the act to provide for a permanent Census Office, approved March 6, 1902, or of acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto; and any person violating the provisions of this section by refusing or willfully neglecting to answer any of said questions, or by willfully giving answers that are false, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not exceeding $10,000, or imprisoned for a period not exceeding one year, or both so fined and imprisoned, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. WALSH. I move to strike out the last six words in the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last six words in the section. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. These words, "at the discretion of the court," are mere surplusage and seldom found in any statute imposing a penalty. Why, of course, it is at the discretion of the court; but I wanted to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to the wide variance in the fine which may be imposed and the imprisonment. Usually, when a person commits an offense for which he may be liable to a fine of $10,000 the alternative punishment of imprisonment is much longer than one year. And as this is a maximum I submit that either the fine ought to be reduced or the imprisonment ought to be increased.

Mr. HELM. This is the language of the existing law. I appreciate the criticism made by the gentleman, but it is out of the ordinary and I do not think it is worth while.

Mr. WALSH. You prefer not to change the existing law in that respect?

Mr. HELM. No court, I suppose, would ever impose a fine of $10,000.

Mr. WALSH. Then if they are not going to do that we ought to make the punishment in some degree in cases of conviction fit the crime.

Mr. MEEKER. In view of the fact of the high cost of living, is not that reasonable now?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think just because we have increased the compensation we ought to increase the amount which persons may be fined, but I do submit to the gentleman that the words "at the discretion of the court" are mere surplusage and ought to be eliminated.

Mr. HELM. It is wholly immaterial, and I will accept it if the gentleman insists on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 27. That the Director of the Census may authorize the expenditure of necessary sums for the actual and necessary traveling expenses of the officers and employees of the Census Office, including an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $5 per day during their necessary absence from the Census Office; and he may authorize the incidental, miscellaneous, and contingent expenses necessary for the carrying out of this act, as herein provided, and not otherwise, including advertising in newspapers, the purchase of manuscripts, books, of reference, and periodicals, the rental of sufficient quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and the furnishing thereof, and expenditures necessary for compiling, printing, publishing, and distributing the results of the census, the purchase of necessary paper and other supplies, the purchase, rental, exchange, construction, and repair of mechanical appliances, the compensation of such permanent and temporary clerks as may be employed under the provisions of this act and the act establishing the permanent Census Office and acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, and all other expenses incurred under authority conveyed in this act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the section in line 14, page 25, by striking out "$5" and inserting "$4."

Mr. HELM. I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 25, line 14, strike out "$5" and insert in lieu thereof "$4."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire if it would not be advisable to insert the language of the existing law, which limits the amount of the allowance to $5 a day for their actual subsistence? You will notice in the draft of the existing law the words stricken out, "or, instead of such an allowance, their actual subsistence expenses, not exceeding $5 a day."

Mr. HELM. I thought we had agreed upon $4 instead of $5.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is an allowance that is the alternative supplementary to the $4 allowance, and is the language of the existing law. The existing law provides "That the Director of the Census may authorize the expenditure of the necessary sums for the actual and necessary expenses of the officers and employees of the Census Office, including an allowance in lieu of subsistence, not exceeding $4 a day during their necessary absence from the Census Office, or, instead of such allowance, their actual subsistence expenses, not exceeding $5 a day." The point I am making to the chairman is this: The first allowance is a flat allowance of a per diem, regardless of the amount they expend. The other authorization was to permit the Director of the Census to authorize their actual expenses, which in no event should exceed $5 a day. For instance, here is an agent or employee of the Census Bureau who is sent out and, at the discretion of the Director of the Census, is allowed a flat per diem of $4 a day, whether he spends that much or not.

Mr. HELM. Does the gentleman doubt that it is the universal practice?

Mr. STAFFORD. In this instance the Director of the Census has the option of either granting the flat allowance of $4 a day or else sending them out and stating that he would allow actual expenses as shown in the voucher returns, but not to exceed in any one instance $5 a day.

Mr. HELM. I agree to it right now.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is the general practice to allow a flat sum of $4. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, my attention was diverted for a moment, but I wish to strike out, in section 29, the language "or weight."

Mr. HELM. That section has been passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am well aware that it is passed, but it is new language.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is very important that it should be in, the committee thought.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit—not with the intention of taking up unnecessary time—the Post Office Department has for years been trying to warn against matter which is purely merchandise being sent in the mails.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman well knows that this section has been passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was through an inadvertence on my part. I had the matter marked. Of course, I thought the gentleman would permit at least the consideration of this bona fide suggestion on my part as to weight. I am presenting the view of the Post Office Department as to whether it is advisable.

We do not grant it to other departments.

Mr. HELM. It is just as broad as it is long. If these things were sent back by express it would cost just as much as by mail.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are not to be sent by express. They are to be sent by freight. Now, you authorize the Director of the Census to send it by registered mail. The Post Office Department has protested against that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Section 29, which refers to census mail matter, has been amended in one important particular, as follows:

That all mail matter of whatever class or weight, relating to the census and addressed to the Census Office, or to any official thereof, and indorsed "Official business, Census Office," shall be transmitted free of postage, and by registered mail if necessary, and so marked: Provided, That if any person shall make use of such indorsement to avoid the payment of postage or registry fee on his or her private letter, package, or other matter in the mail, the person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of $300, to be prosecuted in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Referring to the insertion of the words "or weight" in the first line of the above section, it must be explained that heretofore the schedules and other supplies used in the work of enumeration have been packed in large boxes, regardless of weight or bulk, and sent to the supervisors by mail, and, similarly, the mails have been used by the supervisors in forwarding to the enumerators the portfolios containing the schedules and supplies required in their work. The completed schedules, time reports, vouchers, etc., of the enumerators have likewise been returned by mail to the supervisors and then forwarded by them to Washington packed in the large boxes in which they were originally received. This method of transmitting the census schedules and supplies has worked well in practice, and should be made again possible with respect to the Fourteenth Census; but while the present limits of the postal laws and regulations as to size and weight of packages do not apply apparently to outgoing official mail from Washington, they do apply to the return of completed work by field employees or agents. The conduct of the census enumeration will be greatly hampered, in fact rendered almost impossible, unless this restriction is removed. It is believed that the insertion of the words "or weight" in the first line of the above section will accomplish this purpose.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the words be permitted to remain in the bill as printed.

The CHAIRMAN. That request is not necessary. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We object at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 31. That there shall in the year 1925, and once every 10 years thereafter, a census of agriculture and live stock, which shall show the acreage of farm land, the acreage of the principal crops, and the number and value of domestic animals on the farms and ranges of the country. The schedule employed in this census shall be prepared by the Director of the Census. Such census shall be taken as of January 1, and shall relate to the preceding calendar year. The Director of the Census may appoint enumerators or special agents for the purpose of this census, in accordance with the provisions of the permanent census act.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 31.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Page 27, strike out all of section 31.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the adoption of my amendment would have the effect to eliminate section 31 of the bill, which provides that a live-stock and agricultural census shall be taken in 1925 and for each 10 years thereafter. The main body of the bill is to authorize the taking of the next decennial census in 1920. Section 31 has no relation to the taking of the 1920 census, and I do not think it has any proper place in this bill. What we should do now is to provide fully and adequately for the taking of the Fourteenth decennial census and then we ought to stop at that point.

When the census act of 1909 was passed it contained a section identical with this section 31 and was numbered section 31 in the census act of 1909, same as in this act.

At the second regular session of the Sixty-third Congress the Director of the Census, who was then Mr. William J. Harris, appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and submitted estimates for the taking of this proposed live-stock and agricultural census in 1915, and the estimates submitted amounted to $2,286,100. When the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill came before the House in 1914, a point of order was made against the particular section which carried the appropriation on the ground that it contained some new legislation relating to enumerators and other similar legislation. The point of order was sustained and the paragraph was stricken from the bill, whereupon the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] offered a new paragraph providing that the census authorized by said section 31 should be taken, and containing the same amount of appropriation, to wit, $2,286,100. Thereupon the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] proposed an amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee to repeal section 31 of the census act of 1909, and when the substitute came to a vote it was adopted by the House by a vote of 179 to 137, and section 31 of the census act of 1909 was thereby repealed.

The question arises, suppose that substitute amendment had not been adopted, and the $2,286,100 had been spent for the taking of a live-stock and agricultural census in 1915, does any man in this House think that the country would have been in any better shape? What good would it have done?

Existing law already makes ample provision for ascertaining each year the amount of cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, potatoes, and so forth, raised in the United States each year, and the figures are accurate and reliable. Also careful estimates are made each year by the Department of Agriculture as to the number of live stock in the United States, such as horses, mules, swine, milch cows, and other cattle.

What in the world do we want to spend several millions of dollars for duplicating work which is already being done by existing agencies? I am positively and emphatically against it, and am going to do what I can to prevent it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that if this provision is left in the bill, instead of taking a census of agriculture and live stock every 10 years, there will be one taken every 5 years?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I was coming to that. The gentleman has stated the case correctly.

Now, I submit that a census of this kind in 1925 and each 10 years thereafter is wholly unnecessary, because the Department of Agriculture now has facilities and agencies for furnishing the country with accurate estimates upon these lines each year between the taking of the regular decennial censuses. It must be remembered that the census of 1920, for which the main body of this bill provides, will take a careful and accurate enumeration of all live stock in the United States and all agricultural products, farms, farm houses, and matters of that kind. I think that is a wise thing to do, and ought to be done while we are taking the census of population; but I see no reason in the world for repeating it in 1925.

Between the years of taking the Fourteenth Census in 1920 and the taking of the Fifteenth Census in 1930, the Department of Agriculture, through its very efficient agencies, can furnish us all the information we need as to agriculture and live stock. I have here a letter that I received from the Bureau of Crop Estimates in the Department of Agriculture on January 1 of this year. The letter contained some interesting and valuable data and information, and so when I received it I put it away in my files for future reference. I will not take the time to read it, but suffice it to say that it gives the number of horses, mules, cattle, swine, sheep, milch cows, and also the average price of this live stock for the years 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, and 1918, and shows the increase or decrease, as the case may be, of the different kinds of live stock for the respective years.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. HELM. Does the gentleman consider the cotton reports worth anything?

Mr. BLACK. I have not mentioned the cotton reports, but certainly they are valuable; they are very accurate.

Mr. BLANTON. Will this census benefit a single cowman or farmer in this country?

Mr. BLACK. I do not think so, because it will be unnecessary except at each decennial census when we are taking the census of population.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Does the gentleman consider these cotton censuses every year a benefit to the cotton farmers?

Mr. BLACK. I will say to the gentleman that I am not assailing the value of statistics now assembled by either the Department of Agriculture or the Census Department under existing law. What I am trying to prevent is an unnecessary duplication of work and a consequent waste of public money.

Mr. ASWELL. The department does not take the census; it bases its reports on the estimates.

Mr. BLACK. I have already said that some of the work of the Department of Agriculture is based on estimates, but it has the benefit of the more or less accurate enumerations that are made every 10 years, and taking that as a basis, with the work of its numerous agents in the field and facilities at its command, it furnishes the country annually with estimates upon these subjects which are remarkably accurate and trustworthy. I submit that they are entirely sufficient for all practical purposes.

Now, what will this proposed live-stock and agricultural census to be taken in 1925 cost? In his testimony before the committee Director Samuel L. Rogers says it will cost $3,500,000.

Now, gentlemen, if you think it is a necessary expenditure, if you think it is one which will justify its cost and the labor of numerous agents which will be used in taking it, then you should vote against my amendment and retain section 31. But if you think as I do, that it will be an unnecessary and unprofitable and well-nigh usless expenditure, then I appeal to you to support my amendment and strike out the section from the bill and save the money to the Public Treasury.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I want to consume only three or four minutes in the discussion of this amendment. I am from an agricultural district. I am from a tobacco-growing district. Before we had these reports from the census, which are quarterly, the tobacco farmers were selling tobacco at 3 or 4 and 5 cents a pound. Since we had the report from the Census Bureau every three months tobacco has gone up before the war to 12 and 20 cents a pound. The farmers who fatten cattle in my district tell me, and I hear it generally talked, that when they take the fat cattle and ship them to market the packers say the country is flooded with cattle, and that they can buy the finest export New York cattle, that ought to be bringing around 7 or 8 cents, for 5 or 6 cents. Now, if you have a live-stock report which is accurate every five years, stating how many cattle, how many hogs there are in the country, these packers can not swindle the farmers out of the value of their stock.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Do not the hearings show that the Director of the Census states that it will be years from the time the census is taken before it is available for the people?

Mr. HELM. Oh, that is the same old talk. When these reports come in from the enumerators to the Census Bureau they get out something like these Farmers' Bulletins that you send to your farmers. This information is issued in pamphlet form and published and sent out. What the gentleman is referring to is the bound volumes of the reports that are finally compiled with the concentrated statistics, and that does take considerable time. But the country early gets the information and the benefit of the knowledge of these statistics, which are of great consequence to the farmers, because they want to know the number of hogs, the number of cattle, the number of sheep, the number of mules, the number of horses in the country—more especially that class of stock that enters into food. It is important that this census should be taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLACK) there were 26 ayes and 33 noes.

Mr. BLACK. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 39 ayes and 39 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10854) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 12599) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 12541. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 159. Joint resolution to extend the time within which the President may relinquish control of any railroad or system of transportation, as provided in section 14 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, to January 1, 1919.

FOURTEENTH AND SUBSEQUENT DECENNIAL CENSUSES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BLACK. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACK. Did the Chair announce the vote on my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair announced the vote—39 in the affirmative and 39 in the negative—and the amendment was lost.

Mr. BLACK. I understood that there was another one who wanted to vote in the affirmative.

The CHAIRMAN. No one can vote after the tellers have announced the result.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MEEKER (interrupting the count). Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11984 and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF TIME OF FEDERAL CONTROL OF RAILROADS.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 159 with reference to short-line railroads and pass the same. It is exactly what the House has already passed, with a little addition at the end with reference to interurban railroads, to which there is no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 159 and concur in a Senate amendment.

Mr. SIMS. It is not a Senate amendment. This is a Senate resolution, which they passed before our resolution got over there or after it got there. I want to take the Senate resolution from the Speaker's table and pass the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 159. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some statement as to what the additions are.

Mr. SIMS. There is no difference in the resolution from the House resolution except in the last proviso, with reference to interurban railroads, which I will ask the Clerk to report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That nothing in this resolution or in the said act of March 21, 1918, shall be construed as requiring the President either to take or retain the possession, use, and control of any street railway, whether the same be owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company or not, nor to require the President to take or retain the possession, use, and control of any interurban or other similar railroad which does not receive at least 25 per cent of its operating revenue from the transportation of freight, and which prior to December 29, 1917, did not have through routes or joint routes with one or more steam road carriers.

Mr. SIMS. That is all there is to it, and everyone is in favor of it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is to be noted that in this addition which the Senate has put in there is no provision stating what the intent of Congress is in tacking it on.

Mr. SIMS. The resolution is exactly as it passed the House, with this addition that has just been read.

Mr. WALSH. I know this addition has been put on there; but nothing has been put into the resolution declaring what our intent is in passing it, and some one will construe it so as to vitiate the other provisions of the resolution.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman knows that if this resolution does not pass to-night there is no use in passing it.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, I do not agree with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the time within which the President may relinquish control of all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation, further Federal control of which the President shall deem not needful or desirable, as provided in section 14 of said act, be, and it is hereby, extended to and including January 1, 1919: Provided, however, That the right conferred upon the President to relinquish prior to July 1, 1918, control of all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation without consent of the carrier as provided in section 14 of an act approved March 21, 1918, entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," which right is herein extended to and inclusive of January 1, 1919, shall not be construed to include any railroad engaged as a common carrier in general transportation such as mentioned in section 1 of said act not owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company and which has heretofore competed for traffic with any railroad or railroads of which the President has taken and retained the possession, use, and control; it being the intent of Congress that every railroad not owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company and which has heretofore competed for traffic with a railroad or railroads which the President has taken and retains the possession, use, or control or which connects with such railroad and is engaged as a common carrier in general transportation shall be held and considered as within Federal control as defined in said act and to be entitled to the benefits of all the provisions of said act so long as the railroad or railroads with which it has heretofore competed for traffic or with which it connects shall be retained under Federal control: Provided further, That nothing in this resolution or in the said act of March 21, 1918, shall be construed as requiring the President either to take or retain the possession, use, and control of any street railway, whether the same be owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company or not, nor to require the President to take or retain the possession, use, and control of any interurban or other similar railroad which does not receive at least 25 per cent of its operating revenue from the transportation of freight, and which prior to December 29, 1917, did not have through routes or joint rates with one or more steam-road carriers.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SIMS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

DEPARTMENTAL EMPLOYEES SUBJECT TO MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House resolution 392, a privileged resolution, providing for an inquiry as to the number of men within the draft age in the Food and Fuel Administrations and other bureaus created by the Government. The resolution was sent to the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, and that committee has unanimously reported it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

House resolution 392.

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to report to the House of Representatives the number of men in the service of the Food Administrator, Fuel Administrator, and all boards and commissions appointed by Executive order since April 6, 1917, who were on June 5, 1917, between the ages of 21 and 31 years, for whom requests for exemption from military duty or deferred classification have been asked by such administrators, boards, or commissions and allowed; the name and home address of each such person; the character of work he is performing in the service of such administrators, boards, or commissions, and the length of time he has been in such service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12441. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 158. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue permits for the diversion of water from the Niagara River.

MOVING PICTURES, ETC., AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask to call up House resolution 402, making inquiry as to the method of taking moving pictures of our expeditionary forces in France and of our troops in this country.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, is that necessary to be considered to-night? Many of us have not had our dinners yet. Monday is unanimous-consent day.

Mr. DENT. I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on Public Information is perfectly willing to furnish the information, and I think this is the quickest way to dispose of it. The Committee on Public Information wishes to furnish all the information for which the resolution calls.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution 402.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to report to the House of Representatives the following information:

How many persons in the Signal Corps have been ordered to take still or moving pictures of the American Expeditionary Forces?

What disposition is made of such negatives and films when returned to this country?

In what manner, under what terms, and under what regulations are the pictures distributed for public exhibition?

With whom and by whom are contracts made for such exhibition purposes, and what are the conditions of the same?

What persons other than members of the Signal Corps have been authorized to take still or moving pictures of the American Expeditionary Forces, and in what manner is control exercised over exhibition of the pictures so taken?

Are members of the Signal Corps ordered to take still or moving pictures of military preparations in this country, including activities in the cantonments, ordnance, and airplane production and the production of articles used in the war, and what disposition is made of same?

Are pictures so taken exhibited in public places? If so, by whose authority and under what terms?

Have civilian photographers been authorized to take still or moving pictures of the American Expeditionary Forces or of war preparations in this country, including activities in the cantonments, ordnance, and airplane production and the production of articles used in the war? If so, what disposition is made of such negatives and films; in what manner, upon what terms, and under what regulations are such pictures distributed for public exhibition; with whom and by whom are contracts made for such exhibition purposes, and what are the conditions of the same?

What revenue is derived from such contracts, and what disposition is made of the same?

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

FORTIFICATIONS BILL.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12541) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 12541. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill just reported, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will announce the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Messrs. BORLAND, BYRNS of Tennessee, and GOOD.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a petition to the House of the National Liberty Congress, Colored Americans, that has been sitting here this week. It is not long.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing a petition from the National Liberty Congress, Colored Americans, which has been sitting here this week. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RECESS UNTIL MONDAY AT 11 A. M.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 11 a. m. Monday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In order to reserve the right to object, after the Chair states the request of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to have the House stand in recess until 11 o'clock a. m. Monday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether taking a recess—that is, standing in recess instead of adjourning—will affect the legal situation that exists?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. One of the reasons for it is that the Senate stands in recess until Monday, and, of course, their legislative day will be one ahead of us, and although we may actually pass a bill or a conference report on Monday, it would appear in the RECORD that they were a day or two days before us. It is just a matter of keeping the RECORD straight. The gentleman will recall we had some difficulty with one of the revenue bills in regard to this matter two or three years ago.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object for a moment, it seems to me that we are confronted with a very embarrassing situation, and with a situation that is likely to prove very serious, indeed. I see no remedy for it by objecting to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KITCHIN. There is no remedy.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The legislative day, of course, in the House is one thing, but these appropriation bills that we passed for the present fiscal year all end on the 30th day of June; that is, to-morrow night at midnight.

Now, a very serious question presents itself to my mind. So far as I recall in my experience here, and so far as I know historically, we have never closed a fiscal year without having either passed the appropriation bills or passed joint resolutions to continue the appropriations, for a number of years.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman is mistaken in fact in that regard. I desire to state to the House that in the event it becomes apparent upon Monday that the annual supply bills will not become a law, if necessary I shall offer such joint resolution as will not only take care of the situation but will cure any expenditure that may be necessary to be made by providing that such expenditure, if within the authorized purposes of supply bills, shall be ratified by the passage of such bills and be considered as having been so authorized.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Very well, Mr. Speaker. I may say that I had understood that that was the thought of the gentleman, but it seemed to me that it was not improper to have some discussion or statement with respect to that here this evening. The gentleman says I am mistaken in my recollection. I may be mistaken in my historical recollection, but in my personal experience during the time I have served in the House we have never adjourned without either passing the appropriation bills or a joint resolution. Now, there may be some cases, but, if so, I do not recall. But I think it important for something to be said about that before we take this course. Of course, we are about to take it. The Senate has recessed. But I think it right that something be said about it, and that it be said at this time, because if I were in a place of executive responsibility in one of the departments I should say very frankly that I would be at sea on Monday morning as to what to pay or authorize to be paid.

Mr. STAFFORD. Take, for instance, the Agricultural Department, and the Agricultural appropriation bill for the next fiscal year is held up. There is no authorization whatsoever on the part of any administrative officials connected with the Agricultural Department to authorize them to pay salaries that are based upon authorizations carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will yield, I desire to say it is my understanding that the Senate will have a vote on the Agricultural bill, on that phase of it which is dividing the Houses, on Monday. It is my belief it is possible to put through all the supply bills that are fiscal bills in the true sense of the term Monday.

Personally, I would have been glad if the Senate and the House had seen fit to sit to-morrow. While the memory of the gentleman from Tennessee as to his own experience may be entirely accurate, I am reliably informed there have been instances in the past in which the Government has run for several days, instead of simply for part of a day, without any such resolution as the gentleman refers to. And I repeat that if on Monday it becomes apparent that any of the supply bills will not be agreed to on that day I shall offer to the House, and I have no doubt it will be passed by it and the Senate, such joint resolution as necessary to absolutely safeguard the situation.

Mr. STAFFORD. A case was called to my attention last night by an employee of this Government of many years standing, that on one occasion, years back, when the sundry civil appropriation bill had not passed before the end of the fiscal year the Government Printer refused to go ahead with the operation of the Government Printing Plant because there was no authorization for him to do so. And that same condition confronts the Secretary of Agriculture at the present time.

Mr. SHERLEY. The answer to that is simply this, that if we had blocked all the activities of this Government since the war broke until there was legal authorization for the doing of a lot of things, half the activities would have been stopped. I have a proper appreciation, I believe, of what is necessary in this situation. I have labored day and night, and I am glad to say that, so far as the work of the Committee on Appropriations of the House is concerned, there is nothing that it has done or failed to do that is responsible for any supply bill that it has charge of not becoming a law before the end of the fiscal year. And I repeat that there is nothing that anyone needs to be alarmed about, but that the situation can be and, if necessary, will be taken care of on Monday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky as to the activities of the Committee on Appropriations, and its zeal, is correct, and it is true as to all committees, and it is true as to the House. The fault does not rest with the House, if fault there be; but it did seem to me—and, of course, I am not going to object, as there is nothing to do but what the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] proposes—that there ought to be some statement made here.

Gentlemen who are in executive positions, who are going to be charged with responsibility in connection with expenditures on Monday next or Tuesday next, ought to have some sort of assurance. For that reason I gave the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] the opportunity to make the statement that he has made.

Mr. SHERLEY. I assure the House that before Monday shall have passed the situation will be taken care of by the passage of these bills, and if not, it will be taken care of by resolution, offered and passed.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not think anything has been developed here that makes it necessary for us to discuss this matter further. If there are any departments that are in trouble on Monday morning, that trouble will not last long. We will cure it by appropriate resolution. The situation has been brought before us, and now I ask for the regular order.

Mr. GILLETT. Just a word, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. There is no necessity for discussing this any further.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not want to talk any longer than the gentleman from Virginia did.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I serve notice on the House that after the gentleman from Massachusetts gets through I will call for the regular order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I hope the gentleman will permit me to remind him that the Senate has recessed until Monday.

Mr. GILLETT. If we were not at war and if this side of the House had not really adjourned politics, I should enjoy very much making some comments on the present awkward situation of the appropriation bills; but inasmuch as we on this side have adjourned politics I shall restrain myself and will, without criticism, assist in every way I can to extricate ourselves from our embarrassing situation, and as the Senate has recessed until Monday I do not see how we can do anything here until then.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to bear witness to this fact, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands the regular order.

Mr. SHERLEY. After all, the world was not made in a day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands the regular order. The regular order is, Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve that for a moment, to give the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] an opportunity to say a word.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the situation is this about the railroad bill: If it is not signed by yourself or by the Vice President, the law that amends it or extends it expires by to-morrow. Now, by waiting for a reasonable time the enrolled bill can be gotten back here. But if the House recesses until Monday, all that I want to know is whether the bill can be signed then in time to become a law before it is too late.

Mr. GILLETT. How can the Vice President sign it before Monday when the Senate is not in session?

Mr. KITCHIN. They have adjourned over there until Monday.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina to the fact that the Senate recessed over to Monday, and it will not be in the same legislative situation as the House.

RECESS UNTIL MONDAY AT 11 A. M.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House recess until 11 o'clock a. m. next Monday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Thereupon (at 7 o'clock and 22 minutes) the House stood in recess until Monday, July 1, 1918, at 11 o'clock a. m.

THE GARABED INVENTION (S. DOC. NO. 251).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, which will be read and referred to the Committee on Patents.

The communication is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 1, 1918.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I am to-day in receipt of report of the committee of scientists appointed by Mr. Garabed T. K. Giragossian, and approved by Secretary Lane, in accordance with the provisions of Public resolution No. 21, dated February 8, 1918, a copy of which report I am sending to you herewith.

Cordially, yours,

ALEXANDER T. VOGELSANG,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
The Vice President.

We, the undersigned, who are members of the commission duly appointed in accordance with the provisions of Public resolution No. 21, Sixty-fifth Congress, hereby certify that Mr. Garabed T. K. Giragossian showed us on Saturday, June 29, 1918, a model embodying the principles of his invention known as the Garabed. We found that the model was not in shape to run or to develop power. The inventor admitted that he had no working machine and that he was merely explaining principles. We do not believe that his principles are sound, that his device is operative, or that it can result in the practical development of free energy.

Witness our signatures at Boston, Mass., this 29th day of June, 1918.

JAMES A. MOYER.
EDWARD F. MILLER.
M. DE KAY THOMPSON.
EDWIN B. WILSON.
CHARLES L. NORTON.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 159) to extend the time within which the President may relinquish control of any railroad or system of transportation, as provided in section 14 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, to January 1, 1919.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12541) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BORLAND, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, and Mr. GOOD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 10851. An act to provide a method for disposing of intoxicating liquors now or hereafter in the possession of United States court officials; and

H. R. 11247. An act providing for the protection of the uniform of friendly nations, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 10854. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12599. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Yearly Meetings of Friends of New England, at its annual meeting held at Vassalboro, Me., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HALE presented resolutions adopted at the Fifty-first Encampment of the Maine Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Augusta, Me., pledging support to the President in the prosecution of the war and indorsing the work now being done toward the successful termination of the conflict, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Equal Suffrage League of Holyoke, Mass., praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FERNALD presented resolutions adopted by the Maine Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic at its fifty-first encampment at the State House, Augusta, Me., pledging support to the President in the carrying on of the war, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I present a joint memorial adopted by the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHAPTER 2.

House joint memorial No. 2.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the Third Legislature of the State of Arizona, in special session convened, respectfully represents:

That a full comprehension of the fundamental ideals and meaning of American life, citizenship, and political institutions, and a genuine allegiance to the principles upon which the Government of the United States is founded are both essential to promote the national unity of the people of the United States, especially among those people of foreign birth resident within the widespreading domain of the American Nation.

That the triumph of language over ideals and customs pertaining to birth has been beyond question established as complete and must be our answer to those apologists, the advocates of despotism, who plead for the wisdom of their despotic institutions and endeavor, with sacrilegious hands, to foist upon our people the dreaded influence of political governments whose fate is already written in the history of the times.

That to insure the success of our great experiment in free government it is peculiarly important that this great mass of people under the protection of the Government must be fitted to play well their part as citizens of the Republic.

That only by education can a full realization of the benefits of Americanism be brought home to those who have sought refuge and freedom from injustice and violence in a strange land whose laws they do not understand and whose language to them is a foreign tongue, where they are shut out from the family of man.

That it is the duty of the Government to offer these people of foreign birth more than sympathy and consolation by endeavoring to promote their rapid Americanization.

Wherefore your memorialist urgently urges the passage of bills now pending which provide, in the interest of national unity, for the promotion of the education of resident persons unable to speak the English language, and to that end enable the State and Federal Governments to cooperate in the promotion of the education of such persons in the English language and the fundamental principles of the Government and citizenship of the United States.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Senators and Representative of Arizona in the United States Congress.

Passed the senate June 17, 1918.

Passed the house June 14, 1918.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I present a joint memorial adopted by the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHAPTER 1.

House joint memorial No. 1.

To the House of Representatives, the Senate, and the President of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Third State Legislature, in special war session, of Arizona, respectfully set forth:

It is now known that this world can no longer remain half autocratic and half democratic. Every child of freedom the world around is conscious of that fact, most certainly are they within the folds of the Stars and Stripes. Yet, knowing it, we have not fully met the issue involved.

Autocracy sneeringly holds itself to have the advantage because it is able by the single word of the autocrat to wield the body, mind, and soul of its subjects into one great, irresistible force, while democracy, endeavoring to crystallize itself through a President and Congress, subservient to the will of a nation of independent minds, will fail utterly in the final test. If this be so, then the struggle of humanity through the ages is lost. If autocracy wins on the fields of France, there will be no human conscience left to dispute its kultur.

Can this be averted? Arizona believes it can if the United States will, through efforts that move with order, determination, and precision, organize all its resources—material, spiritual, and psychological—and throw them all quickly into the conflict.

In your deliberations of a new revenue bill it will be well to remember that the Government has conscripted all its fighting forces but it has not yet taken full measure of its supporting forces. The only way to accomplish the latter is for everyone—men and women—for the duration of the war, to give to their country their entire time, efforts, and earnings consistent with a healthy existence.

Therefore the Legislature of Arizona suggests that you call for all citizens to volunteer in the service of their country in the positions they now occupy, or in others, as the country might wish, and after a certain period to draft all the slackers and misfits; that coincident with this call for a whole-hearted response by the people you give that response expression, assurance, and confidence in a tax that will take all the net earnings of the people over and above what is needed to support the industries and a normal and healthy existence.

It is true that such a thing was never done before, but democracy was never challenged as it is at this hour. We believe the lives of our young men, on the threshold of responsibility, are as valuable to the Nation as a few short years of consecrated effort on the part of the rest of us, who will soon pass out. Certainly a few years given to our country in the security maintained by our magnificent youth can not be compared with the sacrifices, heroism, and patriotism they offer their country.

This is a country not of blood nor of an idea but it is an ideal, and as such it must live on ideals. The nobler the ideal that supports it the more potent it becomes, both within and without its confines. Complete service to our country is indeed 100 per cent Americanism, and nothing short of it is. Such a service would burn all the sordid in our make-up as a people to a white ash. It would dissolve all the problems of class. It would exalt us to an efficiency not yet recorded in history. It would reveal to us the true meaning of democracy, not because we thought it but because we lived it. It would clarify our vision so that we could point the way to a lasting peace.

Such a service would inspire our armies as no armies were ever inspired before. It would make each soldier conscious that his country had not forgotten him, but was behind him in all its intensity, and that if he died his countrymen would live for the same thing for which he died. It would make him feel that a nation that could show such spiritual heroism must indeed be the revelation of the divine plan of the ages, and that to give his all for it would be a privilege sweeter than ever tasted by mortal.

Such a service would convince autocracy that democracy was more potent than any other earthly force. It would convince all mankind that democracy was a living, vital thing that could be comprehended, practiced, and sustained. It would teach mankind that we strove for the race and not for ourselves alone. Its psychological effect would be more powerful than all the armies autocracy could muster.

The blood of our soldier boys calls for nothing short of this; our conscious mission before God and man demands nothing less. We know what justice is. In this supreme test if we do not do our utmost we shall prove unworthy of justice, and the debasement and butchery of the Hun may be our just reward.

It is ordered that a copy of this memorial be transmitted to the governor of Arizona, to the President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the President of the Senate, and Arizona's delegation in Congress, the Hon. M. A. SMITH, Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST, and Hon. CARL HAYDEN.

Passed the house June 13, 1918.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented a petition of the congregation of the Tug River Church of Christ, of War, W. Va., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 12099. An act to confer on the President power to prescribe charter rates and freight rates and to requisition vessels, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 535); and

H. R. 12100. An act to amend the act approved September 7, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a United States Shipping Board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States; and for other purposes" (Rept. No. 536).

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4724) to incorporate the Mothers of Democracy of the United States of America, reported it with amendments (Rept. No. 537).

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. THOMPSON, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution No. 270, submitted by Mr. KENYON on the 28th ultimo, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. OVERMAN:
A bill (S. 4785) to incorporate the American Committee for Relief in the Near East; to the Committee in the Judiciary.
By Mr. SHEPPARD:
A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 163) to insure the continuous operation of electrical communicating systems, to guard the secrecy of war dispatches, and prevent communications between public enemies; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. POMERENE submitted an amendment relative to contracts entered into prior to June 30, 1917, for the erection of public buildings under the supervision of the Treasury Department, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.
Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $263.37 to pay Amherst W. Barber, United States deputy surveyor, for the resurvey of 23 miles in the State of Colorado, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 29th ultimo, approved and signed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 158) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue permits for the diversion of water from the Niagara River.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12541) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.
The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, and Mr. JONES of Washington conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 10851. An act to provide a method for disposing of intoxicating liquors now or hereafter in the possession of United States court official was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.
H. R. 11247. An act providing for the protection of the uniform of friendly nations, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MEDICAL SOCIETY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I see by the RECORD that on Saturday last Senate bill 2653 was passed on the request of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], a bill to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia. I desire to give notice that I shall move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed, and I move that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate.
Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word. Will the Senator from Utah kindly state, as I may be absent from the city for some time, the grounds upon which he desires a reconsideration?
Mr. KING. This question has received some little attention at the hands of the Judiciary Committee, and speaking for myself I am opposed to the granting of any charter by the Federal Government to any corporation except that which is absolutely necessary for the Government and becomes a governmental corporation.
Mr. GALLINGER. Manifestly the Senator has not read the bill or the report. This is simply amending the charter so as to permit them to purchase a house for their home; that is all. This society has been in existence, I think, for 50 years; possibly more.
Mr. KING. All I know is what I saw in the paper that this grants a charter to some physicians.
Mr. GALLINGER. No; it amends the charter; that is all.
Mr. KING. If it is a general charter which is already granted by Congress perhaps we can amend it, but it seems to me very unwise if it is granting a charter for a new company, and I shall oppose it.
Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that on my motion the charter has been amended twice already in former years, and I am sure the Senator will not find any objection to it, inasmuch as it is an existing organization.
Mr. KING. I shall make further examination, Mr. President.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. HARDWICK and others addressed the Chair.
Mr. MARTIN. The unanimous consent of the Senate has been given to proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 268, referring to the price of wheat, at 12 o'clock to-day.
Mr. GALLINGER. Would the Senator from Virginia kindly permit me, by unanimous consent, to introduce two or three petitions, as I may not be here to present them later?
Mr. MARTIN. They can be handed to the Secretary.
Mr. GALLINGER. No; I simply want to make a short statement.
Mr. MARTIN. It will lead to at least a dozen other requests. I hope the Senator realizes that it is important to get the Agricultural appropriation bill through.
Mr. GALLINGER. I realize that; but I shall take only a minute.
Mr. MARTIN. Then I will have to yield to everyone who comes along, and there are at least three at my elbow just at this minute.
Mr. GALLINGER. Very well; I shall not ask any courtesy, any favor.
Mr. MARTIN. About the matter of courtesy, the Senator knows the importance of this appropriation bill and he knows there is no courtesy I would not extend to him, but if I extend it to him I shall have to extend it to everybody.
Mr. GALLINGER. I used the word "favor." I do not ask any favor of the Senator.
Mr. MARTIN. It can not be done unless the unanimous-consent agreement is violated.
Mr. NORRIS. The resolution of the Senator from Virginia is now before the Senate?
Mr. MARTIN. The resolution instructing the conferees on the wheat matter is before the Senate by unanimous consent.
The Senate proceeded to consider Senate resolution 268, submitted by Mr. MARTIN June 24, 1918, as follows:

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the Senate at the conference on the bill H. R. 9054, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," be, and they are hereby, instructed to recede from the amendment of the Senate numbered 44.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this Agricultural appropriation bill went to conference on the 5th day of April last. It had in it a great many items in dispute between the House and the Senate. The conferees met and within a reasonable time, after several meetings, agreed to all the disputed items except the one that is now the subject of the resolution. The conferees agreed to all the contested items except amendment numbered 44, which, as the Senate knows, is the item in reference to the price of wheat for the 1918 crop. Immediately after the partial conference report had been agreed to by the House and the Senate the conferees again met, and they have been in conference quite a number of times since that date.
There are 10 conferees—5 from the Senate and 5 from the House. The Senate conferees were confronted with the fact, that became more apparent from one meeting to the other, until it was finally announced as an ultimatum by the House conferees, that there would be no compromise on the part of the House conferees. There were two members of the conference, one from Iowa and one from Michigan, on the part of the House who were in favor of making a compromise. There were three, which constituted a majority of the House conferees, who refused to consider any compromise of any kind. One of these conferees was from South Carolina, one was from Georgia, and one was from Mississippi. Inasmuch as the conferees of the House were thus controlled by that majority we were unable during all those conferences to make any headway.
Thus we found that of 10 conferees 3 conferees held up all proceedings of every kind in the way of a compromise. Seven out of ten were willing to take up propositions pro and con and try to reach an agreement between the two Houses, but because each set of conferees acted separately, representing their respective Houses, it can be seen that 3 conferees of one House were able absolutely to control the action of the 10 conferees.
Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——
Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Does the Senator from Nebraska understand that the conferees refused to even sign a report of disagreement?

Mr. NORRIS. No; they refused to consider any proposition in the way of a compromise.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I understood that they also refused to sign a report of disagreement.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not understand that to be the case.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me, that proposition was made and it was refused.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It was by the Senate conferees.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I have not said that the House conferees refused to sign a report of a disagreement. The Senate conferees had come from the Senate first on a roll-call vote of more than two-thirds in favor of this amendment, and then when the partial report was made with a unanimous vote of the Senate to insist on the Senate amendment we did not dare to come back to the Senate unless we could come with some kind of a compromise or agreement.

Mr. President, I believe it is the duty of the conferees, where the two Houses disagree, to try to get together, to try to compromise the differences. I take it that that is the object of a conference committee. That is what this conference committee did with every other item that was in dispute in the bill, but when we reached this item we were against a stone wall of the majority of the conferees on the part of the House, who said there was but one thing to do, and that was that the Senate conferees must recede entirely. The other two conferees of the House wanted to make some kind of a compromise, and they said often that they believed the House itself would be glad to agree on some kind of a compromise between the two Houses.

The Senate had fixed the minimum price for wheat for the 1918 crop at $2.50 per bushel at the local elevators for No. 2 instead of No. 1. The proposition was once submitted to the House conferees to modify it so that No. 2 should be the grade instead of No. 1, but they refused even that concession. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senate ought to consider that condition, whether, when the two Houses disagree on some item that is as vital as this, the Senate ought to be compelled to recede entirely, when, on any idea of compromise, the House itself has had no opportunity even to vote. It seems to me that we ought for a moment to consider whether the great West, the great Middle West, and the great Northwest, producing the wheat of the country, and to a great extent the wheat of the world, should be absolutely controlled by three men coming from sections of the country that produce no wheat.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But which produce cotton.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; they produce cotton. It seems to me it is an injustice to millions of our people, to the producers who are producing the most staple crop of any which is necessary for our sustenance and the sustenance of our allies and our armies, that they should be arbitrarily compelled to submit to a price for wheat which is conceded to be unfair by all those who have studied the question, and be compelled to submit to the dictation of three men coming from a section of the country that has nothing to do with the production of this cereal.

Mr. President, I concede every man's right to have any idea he may see fit on this question; but my own judgment is that if $2.50 a bushel were fixed as the price for wheat it would still bring a return to the producer of wheat that would not be so remunerative as would be the production of other crops that can be raised from the identical land. I realize that other men have their ideas and reach their conclusions; that we must give and take; but your conferees have been in a position where they were required to do all the giving and nobody else was willing to budge an inch.

I do not care at this time, Mr. President, to enter into any detailed or extensive discussion as to the justice of the price of wheat fixed by the Senate and the injustice of the price which has been fixed and enforced by the President. There was only one argument which was produced by the conferees on the part of the other House against making any change, and that was that our Government had agreed with foreign Governments on the price of wheat, and that in order to carry out that agreement no change whatever could be made, not even in the grade. That argument has within the last few days been completely upset, because the President himself has changed the price of wheat as agreed upon to correspond with the increase of freight rates. So whatever weight that argument might have had—and it was said that was the prevailing argument in the other House, that the officials of our Government had agreed with foreign Governments that they would pay no higher price for wheat—the action of the President within the last few days is going to make it necessary for them to pay a higher price for wheat to make up the advances which will be made necessary by the increase in freight rates.

In the first place, Mr. President, it does not seem to me that that argument ought to prevail, even though it were absolutely well founded, because we fixed the minimum price of wheat for the 1917 crop without any idea of its being a maximum price. Then we gave to the Food Administrator and to other officials of the Government the power to license mills, elevators, and all other kinds of business, and they had the power to buy up the wheat which was necessary for our Government, for our soldiers, for our allies, and even for neutrals. By the use of the power to license and the power to buy immense quantities the price of the 1917 crop was cut down to the producer to less than $2 a bushel at a time when wheat was selling in the open market for $3 a bushel and more. So every man who sold a bushel of wheat contributed to the welfare of his country $1 for every bushel that he sold. It is conceded now that if the law of supply and demand could have its sway the price of wheat would be above $2.50 a bushel.

The same land that produces wheat, no matter whether it be spring wheat or fall wheat, can produce other cereal crops. The man, for instance, in Montana, on 50 acres of land that will produce wheat, can also produce rye or oats or barley on the same ground and with but the same expense, with the same effort in the way of labor, and he will make more money by raising any of those other crops than by raising wheat. Because, however, of the patriotism of the producers of wheat, they will produce all the wheat that they possibly can. It seems to me we ought not to ask them to produce that wheat at a loss as compared with the cost of the production of other crops.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. It seems to me that it can not be successfully disputed that, if we want an enormous amount of wheat produced, we ought to make it at least as profitable to produce that wheat as to produce any other crop which the same land will produce. That is true for two reasons: First, it is fair to the man who produces it; and, second, it will bring the result of a larger production, which is what we desire.

Now I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall ask the Senator a question for information, because his superior knowledge will enable him to give me that information. On yesterday I was talking with a farmer who has 1,000 acres of land under cultivation. He stated to me that with wheat at from $1.80 to $2 per bushel it enabled him, notwithstanding the increased cost of labor and the enhanced prices for machinery, to make more out of his land in raising wheat than he made during the prewar period. He did state, however, that with wheat at from $1.80 to $2 per bushel he could make more money raising corn upon the same ground; but he stated at the same time that the price of corn was too high. I will ask, for my own information, whether or not at $2 per bushel the farmers could not make out of raising wheat more than they made in prewar times?

Mr. NORRIS. That may be, but a sufficient answer to that is that in prewar periods they did not make anything in the production of wheat; that the great bulk of it was produced at a loss during that time. From what part of the country was the farmer to whom the Senator from Utah refers?

Mr. KING. From Idaho.

Mr. NORRIS. Taking that farmer's own statement, it seems to me it affords a complete answer to the injustice of fixing the price of wheat below what the farmer could get if he produced other crops. Do you expect men to increase their acreage of wheat if they can make more money by raising corn or barley or oats or rye? Is the way to increase production to make it unprofitable? Is it not true that every country which is engaged in this war, except our own, has proceeded upon the theory that the producer ought to be given every inducement by way of a profit to produce increased acreage of crops that are vitally necessary in this war?

Nobody thought when we passed the Food Administration bill that we were going to repeal the law of supply and demand in its application to wheat. The only idea of establishing a minimum price was in order to guarantee, in case the war should end before the year was up, to the producers of wheat that they should not produce at a loss. Mr. President, since then the articles which the producer of wheat has had to buy in order to enable him to produce wheat have gone up from 25 to 200 per cent.

Now, there is another thing. The Senate adopted the proposition at a time before the spring wheat was put in, and at that time there were a large number of acres of fall wheat, in Oklahoma particularly, and some in Kansas and in other States, which were poor, and there was danger that it was going to be plowed up, because at the fixed price then existing for wheat it would pay the owner of the land to plow it up and put in some other crop. So one of the objects in adopting the provision in the Senate was to prevent that—to save, as much as possible, fall wheat from being plowed up, and to induce the farmers to put in some spring wheat in the spring-wheat belt. It seems to me—I have no doubt of it, in fact—that many an acre of wheat was held on the implied promise of the action of the Senate, and many an acre of spring wheat was put in on that same implied promise, and it is not fair now that we should wipe it off the statute books and have nothing on the subject.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks wheat would have been any higher to-day if Congress had not fixed the minimum price which it did fix a year ago?

Mr. NORRIS. If Congress had not fixed the minimum price?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, I do not know that the fixing of a minimum price would have changed the price of wheat at all, unless there had been, for instance, a cessation of hostilities and a less demand for wheat, in which event it might have gone below the price fixed.

Mr. LENROOT. It might have gone below that point?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. But the fixing of the price of wheat was not due to the minimum price fixed by Congress, but was due to the executive department of the Government under other powers granted to them.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. And the fixing of the minimum price had nothing to do with the maximum price which the farmer received.

Mr. NORRIS. I tried to say, Mr. President, that when we passed the law no man had any idea that it was anything but a minimum price; but, because of the large purchasing power and the large licensing power granted, the President was able to fix a maximum price, and it is because of that power that the maximum price for the 1918 crop has been fixed. Men running elevators and mills are compelled to refuse to pay more than the price fixed in the order of the President because of the danger of losing their licenses and being entirely put out of business.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he is quite sure that, under the purchasing power given the President by the law, he is authorized to fix a maximum price for wheat?

Mr. NORRIS. Not directly; no. Neither is he directly so authorized under the licensing power. No one thought of that kind of a thing being done.

But, Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of going into the details or the merits of the proposition, because that was all gone over in detail not only by myself but by many others at the time we passed the Agricultural appropriation bill. I wanted the Senate to know the condition in the conference and who it is that is to blame, and to ask the question whether we are going to submit to have this matter absolutely controlled by three men who come from sections of the country that have nothing to do with the production of wheat. Believing, as I do, that where we can not get what we think is fair because somebody else has an opinion that a different price should be fixed that he thinks is fair, we ought to be willing to meet the House in a fair compromise. I have prepared, Mr. President, and I offer as a substitute for the pending resolution the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. As a substitute for the resolution of Mr. MARTIN, Mr. NORRIS offers the following:

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the Senate at the conference on the bill H. R. 9054, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," be, and they hereby are, instructed to agree to a modification of Senate amendment numbered 44, which will fix the price of wheat at $2.35 per bushel at the principal primary interior markets.

Resolved further, That the House be notified of the action of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, Mr. President, just one word.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator mean to have that read "which will fix the price of wheat at $2.35 per bushel," or "not less than $2.35 per bushel"?

Mr. NORRIS. It should be "not less than." I wish the Secretary would put those words in. I do not intend to have anything, of course, but a minimum price.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment.

Mr. THOMPSON. I simply wish to suggest to the Senator——

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator. I wish to add after the word "markets" the words "for grade No. 2," and after the word "at," and before "$2.35," to insert the words "not less than."

Mr. President, just one word and I am through. The Senate amendment fixed the minimum price of wheat at $2.50 at the local elevators. I believe the Senate amendment provides that No. 2 shall be the standard grade, and it may be unnecessary to add those words in the amendment I have suggested, because No. 2 is already in the Senate amendment. That amendment, as I have stated, fixed the price at $2.50 at the local elevators. The substitute for the resolution fixes the price at the interior primary markets, as it is fixed now by the proclamation of the President.

I now yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. THOMPSON. I merely wish to say that, if statements in the press are correct, a higher price than $2.35 has already been fixed by the administration.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. THOMPSON. As I understand, a price as high as $2.38 at some points has been fixed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am well aware that the Senate is more interested in getting a vote upon this proposition than in any argument made upon it, and undoubtedly it is more interested in other subjects than in this, as I judge from the personal conversations on the floor that have been occurring for the last half hour; but I do not think we should yield our judgment upon this most important matter without at least making an effort to see that justice shall prevail.

About a year ago we enacted a food-administration law. It did not cover foods only. It was broad enough to cover all of the principal products that enter into our national life, and especially those which are necessary for the conduct of the war. In that law we gave the authority to license certain businesses in manufacture and in trade. Now, the power to license has never been construed in any court upon the face of the earth as a power to fix the price of the thing which is to be produced or to be sold; and the Senate neither intended, nor did any Member expect, in my candid judgment, that the mere power to control and license carried with it the power to fix definitely the price at which a thing should sell, irrespective of the cost either of production or the raw material to the middleman. So when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] suggests that we gave the power to fix prices, I wish to differ from him.

But, Mr. President, let us see what was intended. We declared, in order to secure the greatest possible quantity of production, that we would guarantee to the farmers who should comply with certain rules that if the market fell below $2 per bushel we would see that at least that amount should accrue to them. We not only were determined that that should be the minimum price but, for fear that the market might not hold up to that minimum price, we then provided for increasing tariff rates against the importations, so that we might carry out our intent; and that intent was to fix a minimum price.

Mr. President, under that licensing law, as construed by the department—and I say it is a construction which I do not deem legally correct—the price of wheat has been fixed not only what the farmer shall receive for his wheat but what the millers shall pay for their flour, and the retailers for their distribution of that flour, and the bakers for their bread; all these prices have been fixed by this board. The power to license has been construed by the board to include the power to refuse to license if the miller pays more than a certain price for his wheat, or the packer more than a certain price for his beef; and through that system the board fixes the price of beef and the price of wheat for the farmer. Under that construction, however, special care has been taken to see that neither the miller nor the packer nor the retailer has been injured, as his selling price is based on the purchase price of the thing sold, which is always definite and certain, which relieves him from the expense of going out and attempting to purchase at a price which may yield him a fair remuneration.

Mr. President, the labor price is not fixed for the farmer. The producer has had no consideration. The price of the things which enter into production remain unfixed. The chances of the elements being against the farmer are in no way provided against, and, to make matters worse, the Government is pleading with the farm labor to leave the farms and repair to the cities, where the hours of labor are shorter, where the work is less strenuous, and the pay is very much higher.

It is well, perhaps, to consider the comparative treatment that has been accorded the farmer of the Northwest in the production of wheat by this food-control commission, the same commission that also controls coal and steel, because the control power is all in the same bill. Let us start with steel.

Mr. President, we have a report from the Federal Trade Commission regarding profiteering. Notwithstanding the fact that all of these great manufacturing companies are just as much under the control of this commission, and notwithstanding the fact that they are allowed to earn from two to five hundred per cent more than they did under prewar conditions, we are objecting to the farmer earning any more than he did before. We propose that he shall not have a greater per cent upon the money invested in his business.

Let us take the profits of the steel companies for the years 1912 to 1917, inclusive, as they are reported by this Trade Commission.

In 1912 the principal steel companies in the United States made an average of 4.7 per cent upon their capital invested. In 1913 they made 5.7 per cent, a little more. In 1914 they made only 2.8 per cent. That is just about as much as the farmers in my State made in 1914. In 1915 they got back to 5.2 per cent, almost as much as in 1913; then in 1916 their return went up to 15.6 per cent; and in 1917, up to November last, under the control of this price-fixing commission, they made 24.9 per cent, or nearly 25 per cent. In other words, comparing 1917 with 1913, the steel companies increased their earnings 600 per cent. Comparing 1917 with 1914, they increased their earnings about 1,200 per cent.

Mr. President, when the grain raiser has to hire all of his help, hire it in competition with the Government, hire it in competition with the posters that are sent out over his country telling the farm boy to leave the farm—that if he will come to the city they will give him, for the lowest class of labor, not less than $4.40 per day—pleading with him to leave the farm home, does anyone believe that the farmer can then go out into the labor market and get some one to take the place of that boy, who is experienced in farming, and, where he must hire that help, make 7 per cent upon his investment, as against these steel companies making 25 per cent? I know enough about farming to know that it is impossible to do so.

Now, Mr. President, let us take the net incomes of these steel companies.

It is shown by this same report that in 1913 certain of these steel companies put in class 1 earned $77,000,000. In 1914, which was a depressing year, they dropped down to $46,500,000. In 1915, in round numbers, they earned about $98,000,000. In 1916—that was the time when they were selling so extensively to the warring armies in Europe—their income was $294,000,000. In 1917, under this commission that fixes the price of products, that seeks to drive down the price of the farmer's wheat from $3 per bushel to $2.20 per bushel, these steel companies earned $478,000,000—10 times as much as they made in 1914, 1,000 per cent increase over 1914, and nearly 500 per cent increase over 1913.

Is the Food Commission attempting to drive down their prices? On the contrary, we make allowance for what they must pay for their labor, for what they must pay for their raw material, and then give them an earning capacity that is 500 per cent higher than it was the previous year.

Mr. President, nearly every business must pay a very heavy income tax; every business must pay it except this steel business and a few other favorites of fortune. Let us see whether these steel companies are paying anything whatever to support the Government as compared with their conditions prior to the war.

Much was said in the press about the wonderful tax that was paid by these companies upon their 1917 business. What did they pay? They paid $233,465,435 of tax to the Government. Now, what did they make over and above what they made under normal conditions? Let us subtract this tax from the net earnings of 1917 of $478,000,000 and we will find that they still have left, after paying all of this enormous tax, $244,738,908 of net earnings, while they only earned $105,000,000 the year before the war and only $46,500,000 the first year of the war, 1914. That balance is 400 per cent more than all of these companies made in 1912 and over 500 per cent more than they made in 1914.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to inquire of the Senator whether the figures he has just announced are confined to the income of the United States Steel Corporation or whether they comprise all the companies?

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that they comprise all of a certain class. This is equivalent to saying to these companies, "Through the licensing system and fixing of prices the Government allows you to hold up the Nation to such an extent that you are practically freed from taxation and allowed to make 300 per cent more than you made in the prewar period." That is what it amounts to.

I have been speaking so far of the mills in class 1. The Senator from Colorado asks me if these figures refer to all of them. They are divided into four classes. These are the principal classes that make the very heavy steel plates, and so forth, for the Government.

Mills in class 3—and those are the mills that start with steel furnaces—made upon their investment in 1917, the lowest 40.3 per cent and the highest 319.67 per cent; and these, again, were under the protection of this price-fixing commission.

Let us take copper. Twenty-one copper companies, including the larger portion of the high-cost companies, made profits in 1917 averaging 24.4 per cent, the highest being 107 per cent. More than 70 per cent of the production is marketed at over 20 per cent on the investment, as against an average profit of 11.7 per cent in 1913, which is a normal year. Thus, we allow the copper company to double the profits of a common, ordinary year; and this copper company, again, is under the control of this price-fixing board.

Let us take zinc. Basing the percentages on the capital stock issue of $35,000,000, the following net earnings and dividends are shown for the New Jersey Zinc Co. There are not many zinc companies; I think only two important ones. The 1916 profits were 72.5 per cent and the 1917 profits were 56 per cent.

The Federal Trade Commission figures, as to these same net earnings and dividends, a profit of 95.9 per cent.

NICKEL.

The profits of the International Nickel Co. in 1916 were $13,557,000, or 40 per cent on its investment—another one of the companies that is taken under the control of this price-fixing commission.

SULPHUR.

It is stated that two companies produce all the sulphur in this country. The Freeport Co. balance sheets show operating profits for the 11 months ending October 31, 1917, of 236 per cent on the investment.

Rather a good interest investment, is it not? And this again comes under the price-fixing commission.

LUMBER.

The report on lumber shows excessive profits on the part of southern pine producers. Forty-eight southern pine companies produced 2,215,000,000 feet of lumber in 1917, and made an average profit of 17 per cent, as against 5.2 per cent in 1916. The highest profit was 121 per cent.

Thus, as soon as these companies came under the control of this commission they increased their net earnings about 300 per cent, or three times.

THE MEAT PACKERS.

Now, this is of special interest, Mr. President, to the farmer and of special application to this resolution, because, again, no matter what feed may cost, no matter what the labor may cost to take care of stock, the packer is forbidden to pay more than a certain price for cattle.

The report deals with four companies, the Armour, Swift, Morris, and Cudahy companies. The average profit of these four companies in 1912, 1913, and 1914 was $19,000,000.

I want Senators to bear in mind that was their average, $19,000,000 for the prewar period.

In 1915 their earnings were $36,000,000, an excess profit of $17,000,000 over the prewar period. In 1916 the profits were $55,000,000, an increase of $36,000,000, or almost 100 per cent over the prewar period. In 1917 their profits were $87,000,000, or $68,000,000 more than the prewar period, an increase of about 350 per cent. It is further stated that in the three war years from 1915 their total profits reached the astounding figures of $140,000,000. The report calls attention to the fact that this is not due to any great increase in volume of business, but rather to higher prices, that the profits increased two and a half times as much as the sales increased.

Again, the report calls attention to the fact that the profits taken by Morris & Co. for the fiscal year ended November, 1917, is equal to 186 per cent on the net worth of the company, capital and surplus, and 263 per cent on the $3,000,000 capital stock outstanding; that in the case of the other companies the earned rate on common capital stock ranges from 27 to 47 per cent. But this is due to the fact that these other stock companies have declared stock dividends and in other ways capitalized their growing surplus. Thus the Armour Co., in 1916 raised its capital stock from $20,000,000 to $100,000,000 without receiving a dollar more of cash. It is stated also that the independent packers in 1914, 1915, and 1916 earned a rate even higher than these companies.

Now, Mr. President, a word upon leather. Leather is an ingredient that goes into all the harnesses that are used most extensively on the farms.

The report shows the increase in the profits of a single company. In 1914 its profits were $640,051; in 1916, $3,576,544. In other words, that one company increased its profits in two years 500 per cent. Farmers must pay very much of this increased profit.

And now we come to flour, the thing that is made out of wheat. You took the farmer's wheat in 1917 at a time he was receiving in the principal markets as high as $3.07 a bushel; we will say an average of $3 a bushel. You took that, and under your authority to license the miller you compelled that miller, under penalty, never to pay more than $2.20 for wheat, or a loss of 80 cents a bushel to the farmer. When you compelled the farmer to take 80 cents a bushel less for his wheat, what did you do with the miller? I will tell you what you did with him.

For the four years ending June 30, 1916, there was a profit of 13½ cents on each barrel of flour milled and 12 per cent on the capital invested. "The years covered," so reads the report, "1913, 1914, 1915, and 1916, should probably be accepted as fairly representative in spite of the fact that the war demand in 1915 and 1916 would lead one to expect them to show an abnormally high profit."

That ran up as far as 1916, when the millers were not under the control of Mr. Hoover, and when they charged for their product just what the competition in business would allow them to charge, and they made, on an average, 13½ cents on a barrel.

In the year ended June 30, 1917, the same mills made an average of 52 cents on each barrel of flour sold. In other words, you cut the farmer's price down 80 cents a bushel, then you increased the profits to the miller from 13½ cents to 52 cents, or 400 per cent advance, and now you are opposed to allowing the farmer to receive a minimum price of $2.50 a bushel.

It is stated that the profits of one mill for six months show as high as $2 per barrel. I want Senators to think about it. Here is one mill which, prior to the control by this board, probably made its average of 13½ cents a barrel and in 1917 made a profit of $2 per barrel.

Now, I quote from this report the exact words of the Trade Commission on another feature:

> The commission has tabulated returns covering the sale of something over 4,000,000 barrels of flour made and sold under the Food Administration's regulations from September, 1917, to March, 1918, inclusive. In face of the regulation of 25 cents per barrel maximum, the average profit per barrel on this flour was about 45 cents, or over three times the normal profit per barrel referred to above. * * * The average net profit of jobbers reporting to the commission was about 15 cents per barrel for 1913 and 1914, but increased to nearly 50 cents in the first half of 1917.

Thus you are playing not both ends against the middle, but playing the middle against both ends. You cut down the farmer's price 80 cents a bushel. You then go to the baker and say that he can not sell his bread above a given sum. You fix his price. Then you allow the miller and the middleman to increase their profits from 300 to 500 per cent.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The statement the Senator read from the report of the Federal Trade Commission said in the face of the regulations of the Food Administration the profit would be 25 cents per barrel, and that they had nevertheless realized some 45 cents?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. The commission does not explain how that happened?

Mr. McCUMBER. Ask Mr. Hoover; I do not know how it happened. The Trade Commission does not say why. They simply give the facts.

Mr. President, the first thing that will surprise us is that while the millers were all making money, and making good money at a net profit of 13½ cents a barrel, why was it that the Food Commission immediately allowed them to make 25 cents per barrel? That is somewhat surprising to me. I think the average man ought to be pretty well satisfied if his book balances at the end of a year show him a profit during this war as great as it was before the war, but your Food Commission, controlling it absolutely, says you may charge nearly double, and then after allowing you to charge by their edict nearly double, they then allow you to double that double without any complaint, increasing profits from 13½ cents up to about 52 cents.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. FRANCE. I am sure that the Senator from North Dakota realizes that there is a certain by-product of wheat which many farmers must buy. I refer to bran. While the price of wheat to the producer is fixed the millers or middlemen must be making large profits on bran, as bran now is priced to the farmers, in my immediate neighborhood at least, at $60 per ton. I desire to ask the Senator if he intends to discuss this subject and the price which the farmer receives for the real food value in his ton of wheat, when he must buy back a ton of bran at $60 per ton when he sells a ton of wheat?

Mr. McCUMBER. I did intend to comment on it, but I thank the Senator from Maryland for putting it in the RECORD at this time. I intended to comment on it in connection with this matter of substitutes. I do not know whether Mr. Hoover has fixed the price of substitutes or not. I can not find that he has. But I do know this, that you can not buy a single substitute as cheaply as you can buy the wheat flour. I know that there is allowed to be made an enormous profit in these substitutes. I know that corn is not worth as much as wheat bushel for bushel for bread, and I know that when you convert corn into meal and sell that meal, even at the present high prices of corn, for very much more than you are selling your wheat flour you are defrauding every consumer. I know that barley, as a rule, is not worth more than about a third or a quater of what wheat is worth. I know that to-day, while it is worth more to the farmer to raise it, nevertheless the price per bushel is much less than wheat. Yet if I buy barley flour, as I am compelled to buy it, when barley may be worth $1.50 per bushel, I must pay more for that barley flour than I will pay for wheat flour, when wheat is worth $2.20 a bushel, and as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] has stated, the farmer can not use the middlings, the bran of his wheat. He has got to take his wheat to the mill, and when he gets it to the mill, although he has to sell the wheat for $2 a bushel upon an average through the country, because it does not measure up to the grade at which we fixed the $2.20, when he sells his wheat for $2 a bushel, and when you have taken nine-tenths of the value out of that wheat, and he is compelled to buy back the bran, he has got to pay as much as for the wheat itself, and all of this, Mr. President, under the control of this commission.

Mr. President, I plead with those Senators who have a keen sense of justice, any sense of right in their make-up. They know as well as I do that it is worse than a crime, in the face of these conditions and the prices that we are paying for everything else, to seize upon the wheat producer and say you shall not be entitled for your product to that which you would receive under the law of supply and demand, but we will hold you down in order that these people who can afford to pay $10 a day for their help can make such profits as those which have been indicated in this report.

I want to speak of one thing more in this report. I do not think you will find many of the farmers attempting to pad their salaries. When you get your tax returns I will guarantee that you will not find out of the tax returns of any farmer in the whole United States a return by the father of the family, "I am putting my wages in at $75 a month and my wife's at $40 per month." I will guarantee that you will not find an instance in which he will say, "I am allowing my son $75 a month." Yet what does the Government do? I will not say that the Government does it, but I am afraid that in many instances the Government may overlook it and allow people who are making these enormous profits to pad their pay rolls in such a way that it will defraud the Government of millions and hundreds of millions of dollars.

Let me call attention to one matter that is reported of a single company, and this is the American Metal Co. (Ltd.). You all know what it is. Here are six officials of that company. Mr. Hochschild, chairman of the board of directors, was paid a salary of $179,663. C. M. Loeb, president of the company, was paid a salary of $364,000. I am giving it in round numbers. Otto Sussman, the vice president, was paid a salary of $221,500. J. Loeb, vice president, was paid a salary of $147,900. Sol Roos, manager, St. Louis, was paid $148,530, and Mr. Schott, manager of the Denver office, a salary of $136,553. Those six gentlemen were paid salaries amounting to $1,198,600, and yet were able probably to make the profits that have been indicated by many of these steel companies.

Mr. President, the man who is building a cantonment says to the farmer boy, "Can you drive a 10-penny nail through a 1-inch rough board?" The boy says, "I can." He says, "All right; you are a carpenter. I will pay you $10 a day for 10 hours of work during the weekdays and I will pay you $20 a day if you will work on Sunday, and in order to make your job last a little longer I will allow you to lay off on Monday, and I will not hurry you, because the more the job costs the greater my profits." That is what is being done. What will the boy say? Why, he will say, "Father, with wheat at $2.50 or $3 a bushel, I can make ten times as much, and I shall not have to work 16 hours a day, either."

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. It may interest the Senator from North Dakota to know that in the Government shipbuilding plant they fixed the scale of wages. The result was that that scale of wages had to be met by other factories engaged in producing war supplies. As a consequence, and as illustrative of the truth of the Senator's statement, the committee, in looking into the aircraft production, found in several factories that girls were making as much as $4.50 a day working in the factories. I do not say that to complain about the wages these girls are receiving, but it illustrates how high wages are going when girls can receive $4.50 a day for working with tools with which but a few weeks ago they were utterly unacquainted.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, because of the demoralization of the entire labor market and the conditions in the spring-wheat States, the condition in that section of the country which is remote from the large cities, with their laborers, is most serious. We do not know where we are going to get the labor with which to take care of our crops. Our wives and our daughters will do the best they can in the field. You talk about sending us men from the cities. Why, they are not going to leave the cities for such wages as we can afford to pay them; and the kind that will come to us, if any at all come, will be of a class who will be so independent that we can not get any real work out of them.

Mr. GRONNA rose.

Mr. McCUMBER. In just a moment I will yield to my colleague. Inasmuch as you have taken away from us our labor; inasmuch as you have not fixed the price of anything that we must buy; inasmuch as we must contend against higher priced labor and everything it produces, we ask you to at least give us this limited justice of allowing us to receive at least $2.50 per bushel for wheat at our primary markets.

Now I yield to my colleague.

Mr. GRONNA. I know that the figures given by my colleague [Mr. McCUMBER] as to labor may seem high, but I desire to assure the Members of this body that only last week we had before our Committee on Agriculture men who had to do with the building of ships, and it was stated by men who are in the service that they are paid wages from $60 to $75 per week for an eight-hour day. So my colleague has not overstated the enormous prices that are being paid to laborers in shipyards and in other places where they are employed by the Government.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words relative to a couple of sections of the food-control law and to suggest that I believe that under a reasonable interpretation of the provisions of that law there is no power on the part of the Executive or on the part of the Food Administration to fix a price for wheat other than the price that is guaranteed in section 14 of the food-administration act. There seems to have been some question as to whether or not that was a guaranteed minimum price or an absolute price fixed by law, with some authority on the part of the President to thereafter at any time fix any price he might choose above the minimum.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I am exceedingly interested in the argument the Senator from South Dakota is making, and, in order that I may not misunderstand him, I desire to ask if it is the Senator's contention that neither the President nor the Food Administrator has the authority under the food-control act to fix the minimum price for wheat?

Mr. STERLING. It is my understanding that there is no such authority.

Now, I want to read and with a little care to analyze the provisions of section 14 of the food-control act. First, what is the purpose of the act, and particularly of section 14 of the act? It is to stimulate the production of wheat, that most important product. That section provides:

SEC. 14. That whenever the President shall find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat and that it is essential that the producers of wheat produced within the United States shall have the benefits of the guaranty provided for in this section, he is authorized, from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, to determine and fix and to give public notice of what, under specified conditions, is a reasonable guaranteed price for wheat, in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit.

This law was enacted in view of the possibility that wheat might be at such a price in the market as not to stimulate its production, and hence the President was authorized, in order that there might be a reasonable profit to the farmer, to fix a minimum price of wheat. The word "guaranty" in this connection implies a minimum price. No reference is made in the whole act to the mere fixing of a price, but the reference is always to a "guaranteed price." The section further provides:

The President shall thereupon fix such guaranteed price for each of the official grain standards for wheat as established under the United States grain standards act, approved August 11, 1916.

* * * * * * *

Thereupon the Government of the United States hereby guarantees every producer of wheat produced within the United States that, upon compliance by him with the regulations prescribed, he shall receive for any wheat produced in reliance upon this guaranty within the period, not exceeding 18 months, prescribed in the notice, a price not less than the guaranteed price therefor as fixed pursuant to this section.

Then the act further provides the legislative guaranty of not less than $2 per bushel for the 1917 crop; and that guaranty, under the very terms of the act, is to prevail until May 1, 1919, and that will be until such period as the entire crop of 1918 is disposed of.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. As I understand the Senator, then, he agrees that the President or the Food Administrator has the authority under the law to fix a minimum price, but he has no authority to say that no higher price shall be paid on a competitive basis?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. That the food-control act gives neither the President nor the Food Administrator the right to say that on a competitive basis no higher price shall be paid by anyone else?

Mr. STERLING. No; I agree with the Senator in that regard. I am coming to that.

What is the effect of the guaranty of not less than $2 per bushel as fixed by section 14 of the food-control act? Mr. President, it is my contention that it is also an implied guaranty that the farmer shall have the market price, whatever it may be, over and above $2 a bushel.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment, I do not want to interrupt his line of thought but I wish to state of my own knowledge, I will say to the Senator, that under the licensing section not only have dealers in wheat been threatened with having their licenses revoked but their licenses in some instances have actually been revoked.

Mr. STERLING. Under what authority or power has the license been revoked under this section, will the Senator say?

Mr. GRONNA. Well, I do not think there is any such power given; and I will say further that I believe it an impeachable offense to exercise it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word or two further on this proposition. I contend that at the time a minimum price of $2 per bushel was guaranteed there also went with that guaranty this, namely, a guaranty that the farmer should receive whatever above $2 per bushel was the market price, let it be $2.50, $2.75, or $3 per bushel, and that is the fair implication of the statute itself.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will excuse me for a moment, I wish to say that for the Government to come in and attempt to fix a price below the market price is, in effect, although not intentional of course, a breach of faith upon the part of the Government, because when we passed the food-control act in 1917 the contention was that the farmer must be guaranteed at least $2 per bushel for his wheat, or else wheat in quantities, such as we need for ourselves and the allies, would not be produced in the United States. Hence there was, as I say, the implied guaranty that went with the minimum guaranty of $2 per bushel that the farmer should receive whatever the market would pay over and above the $2 per bushel.

I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator's interpretation of the law; I did not think there was any idea that the law could be interpreted in any other way; but are we not in the position of the man in jail? The maximum price has been fixed, and is fixed, the proclamation of the President has been issued fixing the maximum price, and that proclamation has been put in operation, and has been in operation for pretty nearly a year now.

Mr. STERLING. That is true, Mr. President, but I am urging this proposition in view of what is before the Senate at the present time, with the hope that the reason of it may be seen by Senators who are holding out against the Senate amendment or who are holding out against the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. President, it may be said that the President would have the authority under another section of the food-control act——

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. When the food-control bill was before the Senate—the Senator probably does not remember it, as he may not have been present to have heard it—in a few remarks I made on the floor I pointed out the same identical thing, and said that I feared that the indirect power granted beside the ability to control by way of purchase so large a part of the bulk of the crop would mean that the President might, by using this power, in effect make a maximum price as well as a minimum price.

Mr. STERLING. I do not recall distinctly what the Senator said, but the Senator's fears as expressed at that time are apparently realized. But I am speaking of the question of authority to now fix an absolute price and of what was understood by the advocates of this minimum price of $2 at the time the bill was passed and of what the farmers throughout the United States—the wheat producers—understood at the time of the enactment of this law.

Why, Mr. President, it was contemplated at that time—and I think reference was made to that fact in the discussion—that the market price of wheat might be less than $2; it might be $1.75 or $1.50, and yet the farmer was guaranteed the price of at least $2 per bushel. That would mean, as we understood, a loss to the Government itself in making good to the sellers of wheat the minimum price.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator will agree that at that time the idea prevailed that we wanted to produce, for we knew that it was going to be necessary to produce, a very large quantity of wheat if the war continued.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. And if the war ended within a few months, or before the crop could be harvested, the market that the war made would be dispelled; the price, of course, would go down; and the provision was adopted with the idea of inducing men to increase the acreage of wheat and let the Government take the risk instead of the individual.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. It was feared that the individual would be apprehensive that if the war ended between the time he planted his wheat and the time it matured, he would lose by the operation.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And the theory of putting a minimum price on that crop was to induce the farmer to go on and increase his acreage and produce a big crop.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly; the Senator from Nebraska has stated the reason very clearly for the fixing of the minimum price, and, as I have said, the understanding on all sides was that the farmer was to have any benefits of the market above that minimum price.

In this same connection I want to call attention to section 11 of this act. If not from section 14, I think some Senators have deduced the idea that in section 11 the President has the right to fix the price of wheat. I want to call attention now to the particular language in section 11 of the food-control bill:

> That the President is authorized from time to time to purchase, to store, to provide storage facilities for, and to sell for cash, at reasonable prices, wheat, flour, meal, beans, and potatoes.

That does not change the law. That does not give the President the power to fix a minimum price or to fix any price, minimum or maximum; but I think it plainly contemplates that the President shall go into the market and buy, according to the market price, the wheat as it may be there for sale, and then he is to sell at reasonable prices; and the word "reasonable" qualifies not the buying or the price he shall pay, but qualifies the price at which he shall sell under the exact language of the bill. He shall sell for cash at "reasonable prices," whether it be for home consumption or to the allies.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I think one of the objects, perhaps the principal object, of the particular section which the Senator has read was to permit the Government to save itself in case the war did end and the price did go down, so that it could go in and buy the wheat and store it for sale at another time. In other words, if the war ended and there was a large production of wheat, an overproduction, on account of this inducement and this desire of the Government to get a large crop, and the price went down, that provision was for the Government to save itself partially from some loss that everybody conceded it would have to stand under those circumstances.

Mr. STERLING. I think that was involved in the section, and that was the fair meaning and interpretation to be given to the section and to the exercise of the power on the part of the President in buying these various commodities—wheat, flour, beans, potatoes, and so forth. I think another consideration might have been the necessity for purchase on the part of this Government for the allies of great stores or quantities of wheat, and the President was given the power for that purpose.

Mr. President, that is an altogether different proposition from giving the President the power to fix the price at which he shall buy. There is no question—and I thought of it at the time the section was under consideration—that purchases by the Government on a large scale will tend in a way, without Executive order, to fix the price, to stabilize or standardize the price, as it were; but beyond that there is no power in this law on the part of the Government to fix a price beyond a minimum and less than the market price.

Mr. President, I have followed with a good deal of interest, first, the discussion of the amendment to the Senate bill providing for $2.50 wheat at the local elevators, and then the discussion here on the floor in opposition to the resolution of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]; and I have noted the great profits that are being made by the other great industries of the country, and how they receive compensation in those profits for the extraordinary prices they pay for labor and for material used in the business. But, Mr. President, in $2.50 wheat there is no such compensation allowed to the farmer or the producer of wheat. With the machinery he buys increased in price to him from 25 to 200 per cent, with labor—and much of it inefficient labor, too, under present conditions—doubled within the last year or two, $2.50 wheat is not an adequate return to him for the expenses to which he is subjected in the production of wheat.

It seems to me that the Senate, after it has adopted by such an overwhelming majority this Senate amendment providing for $2.50 wheat, ought not now to recede from its position in adopting that amendment, and yet I suppose there will be opposition here to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], that compromise provision, providing that for No. 2 wheat there shall be paid the sum of $2.35 per bushel at the great interior markets.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will excuse me for just a moment, I will yield. The Senator from Nebraska spoke of the source of the opposition on the conference committee to $2.50 wheat. I recall, in the discussion of the food-control bill, that whenever cotton was mentioned, and the fact that it was probably desirable to fix the price of cotton or give the President authority to fix the price of cotton, southern Senators held up their hands in holy horror at the idea of fixing the price of that commodity.

I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that the course of the Government—and by that I mean the legislative branch as well as the officials of the Government in the executive department—and the course of business generally and the country generally is going to result in the imposition of burdens upon the Government and upon the country for the future so great that the Government can scarcely stagger under the load? Does not the Senator think that we are proceeding, by legislation and otherwise, in a vicious circle?

We raise the price of the products which we purchase upon the theory of the advance in labor. Then we justify the advance in labor—that is, a higher price for labor and an increase in the compensation which governmental employees are paid—upon the theory that there is an advance in the necessities of life which they are compelled to purchase, so that the laboring man, the man working in the shipyards or working for the Government, appeals to Congress for an increase in wage because of the high price of the commodities of life which he is compelled to buy. Then the producers of those commodities apply to Congress for an increase in price because of the high price of labor; and so you are balancing one against the other, and the result will be the pyramiding not only of labor but of the prices of all commodities until the cost of the war and the cost of everything which the Government buys will impose in the end a staggering burden that we can not meet and that perhaps will break posterity.

Does not the Senator think that there ought to be a halt called at some time, some place, and somewhere? If Congress legalizes the price of wheat at $2.50, increasing it more than 200 per cent—because it sold for about 80 cents in prewar times——

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Utah will remember that when it sold for 80 cents a bushel in prewar times it was being raised in many sections of the country at a loss to the farmer who raised it. He made nothing whatever out of wheat at 80 cents a bushel.

Mr. KING. I do not agree with the Senator there.

Mr. STERLING. I mean by that in the few years preceding the war. There was a time, further back, when labor was very cheap, and when materials and farm implements were not nearly so high, when he might have made a small profit out of wheat at 80 cents a bushel; but that time has long since passed, and not for many years prior to the war could he have made anything out of wheat at 80 cents a bushel.

Mr. KING. I do not quite agree with the Senator. I think that there may have been some instances in some sections of the country where 80-cent wheat could not be raised at a profit; but, generally speaking, throughout the United States, I believe that the farmer in prewar times, with wheat at 80 cents, made a fair profit upon his investment. At any rate, he was satisfied, and the farmers generally were as prosperous as any class of people in the United States, except those engaged in some of the industrial pursuits. But I am not expressing any opinion in what I have said——

Mr. STERLING. Let me say——

Mr. KING. Let me complete the sentence, although I am indebted to the Senator for his courtesy. The point I am trying to make is, without expressing any opinion in regard to the rightfulness of this demand for an increase in the price of wheat, does not the Senator think that if we do fix the price at $2.50 that is a declaration to the country that everything else may rise at least to that limit; that if an article was produced before the war for 80 cents, we will now legalize its sale at $2.50; that if wages before the war were on the basis of 80 cents, we will now legalize the demand that they shall be $2.50? In other words, if we signify our approval of $2.50 wheat, do we not automatically approve an increase of everything measured by the distance between 80 cents and $2.50?

Mr. STERLING. I shall not agree with the Senator from Utah in that regard, Mr. President. Instead of its being a declaration to the country from which improper conclusions may be drawn, I say that under the circumstances and under the facts as they have been shown to exist in regard to the profits made by other institutions and other industries it will be a declaration to the country that there is some intention of giving the farmer a part of what is his just due and nothing else.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I trust that my friend, the Senator from Utah, will not be understood as saying that the farmers have come to Congress asking for legislation with regard to the price of wheat, because, if he does so, he misunderstands the facts.

Mr. KING. I do not understand that the farmers have asked for legislation, although, if the Senator will pardon me, and the Senator from South Dakota will yield——

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I did understand last year that the Senator who has now propounded the question to me and other Senators from agricultural States were insisting upon a food-control bill, and were insisting upon some regulation of the price of wheat. I may be in error with respect to that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will pardon me, the contrary is absolutely true. Instead of the Senator from North Dakota asking for food legislation and for fixing the price of wheat, the Senator from North Dakota said at all times that he was opposed to any price fixing, but that if prices were to be fixed, of course, he, with other Senators, was anxious to see that the farmers should be paid a price which would pay them at least to raise a crop. But at no time have the farmers come before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, nor, I believe, will any Member of this body say they have come to him and asked that prices be fixed; and let me remind the Senator that Mr. Hoover's statement will be found in the hearings last year when he said he was opposed to the fixing of a maximum price, when he said that he simply wanted to stabilize prices; that he wanted to fix a minimum price in order to increase production.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that many of the farmers—in fact, all of them, for that matter—opposed any price fixing, and did not want any price fixing, because they believed that without any fixing of prices they might get, because of the demand for wheat, four or five or six dollars a bushel for wheat—a price that would be extortionate?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Utah that not only did they believe it, but they knew it, because the day we passed the bill wheat was worth $3.06 a bushel.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe, then, that if the farmers to-day could get four or five or ten dollars a bushel for wheat, in the face of the crisis which is existing in the world to-day, we ought to grant their demands?

Mr. GRONNA. I trust the Senator will not put me in that attitude. I would no more say that the farmers should have an exorbitant price than I would say that the Steel Trust, and the Metal Trust, and the Lumber Trust, and the meat packers of the country should have the enormous prices which we know they are receiving to-day.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I am moved to make this observation by what the Senator from Utah said. I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, and for weeks I listened to the hearings, not only from experts and Mr. Hoover—who said he did not want to fix the price of wheat; he only wanted to guarantee the farmer against loss, as the Senator from North Dakota has said—but representative farmers from all over the country, and I do not recall and I do not believe that there was a single farmer or any man who represented any farmers' organization—and there were dozens of them there—but that said, "We object to the fixing of the price at which the farmer has to sell his wheat unless you also fix the price of what he has to buy and pay to produce that wheat. We want the law of supply and demand to apply to us if it applies to everybody else; but if it is necessary to fix everything for everybody, then we will not object to fixing the price of our output."

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I have almost concluded, but I want to add just one observation.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FALL. Before the Senator passes from the suggestion made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] as to the same profits being allowed in all businesses as the difference between 80 cents and $2.50 for the farmer's wheat, it seems to me that an absolute answer to the proposition is that the farmer has but one turnover in a year. The farmer with $100,000 invested in his farm sells his wheat once a year. The meat packer or other man engaged in factory work with $100,000 invested may sell six times his capital, or $600,000, and make a profit upon each dollar; and since the war began, due to the increased demand and the rapidity of the demand, he may turn over his $100,000 a dozen times or twenty times in the year. Therefore, it would not be fair to allow him to make even the same difference, the same comparative profit, which is suggested, where the farmer, with a fixed business, has one sale a year.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I might add to the suggestion of the Senator from New Mexico that if the farmer had been compelled to go on raising wheat, and nothing but wheat, at 80 cents a bushel he would have been out of business, or even later on, at $1 a bushel, he would have been out of business. But the farmer has not depended alone on wheat. He has raised corn, rye, barley, oats, and stock, and from these he, perhaps, has made a profit that compensated him for his work and outlay, even though there was no profit, or a very small profit, on his 80 cent or $1 a bushel wheat.

That must be taken into consideration, for a farmer will scarcely be found in the great Northwest, the great spring-wheat region, who does not raise and depend upon something else than wheat. He would have been impoverished years ago had he not come to rely on these other resources in the way of crops and stock.

Mr. President, I rose particularly to give some interpretation to sections 14 and 11 of the food-control act. In brief it is that in those two sections is to be found the only power conferred upon the administration to fix the price of wheat. Now, that is a minimum price fixed by the law of 1917 at $2 per bushel for the 1918 crop, and until May 1, 1919, and my insistence is that the plain implied guaranty is that the farmer should have over and above $2 per bushel what he could get in the market, let it be $2.50, $2.75, or $3 per bushel; that any price to be fixed by the President for any other than the 1918 crop must under the law be a guaranteed minimum price, and that when under section 11 the President is authorized to purchase and store wheat, he purchases it at a price which the wheat will command in the market and at the time of the purchase, not forgetting of course that the purchase of great quantities of wheat by the Government will have its effect upon the price and tend to stabilize or standardize the price of wheat.

I was not in sympathy with the price-fixing proposition to begin with, but since it was determined upon I voted for and insisted upon the minimum price of at least $2 per bushel; but I believed that having provided as we did in that act against hoarding, against speculation in all its forms—in fact, against every evil practice in the buying and the selling of grain—we had done well enough without the doubtful experiment of fixing the price of wheat. Since, however, that has been entered upon and we have determined to fix the price of wheat let that price be what all the circumstances and conditions show to be a most reasonable price.

Mr. President, as I have said, I have listened to the discussion in regard to the profits of different institutions and different industries. We have heard them discussed here again and again, and I submit now that no fairer proposition has been before the Senate of the United States than that contained in the Gore amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill fixing the price of wheat at $2.50, No. 2 spring, at the local elevator. It seems inconceivable to me now that the Senate should recede from that position, and I am sure we shall do right in insisting on that amendment or, at the very least, in not reducing the price below that contemplated in the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not going to indulge in any extended debate upon this proposition, in view of the very full discussion which the subject has already received, but I call attention, briefly, to one or two features of the question which seem to me to be possibly worthy of further consideration.

Mr. President, the farmers of the country, in my opinion, will be perfectly satisfied to take their position alongside the other industries of the country. They would be perfectly satisfied to have this law repealed entirely and to take their chances under the law of demand and supply with reference to the products which they produce and which they desire to sell. They have never to my knowledge asked for any price fixing; but if it is thought wise to fix prices, then they would be perfectly satisfied to have their prices fixed in harmony with the prices fixed for other articles. They would be perfectly satisfied to enjoy the profits, and no more than the profits, which those enjoy whose prices are fixed. In other words, they are not asking for any exception to the rule which the Government thinks wise to invoke or to apply.

If the price-fixing proposition is thought to be a wise one, very well, then fix the price of the articles which enter into the supply of the farmer, which enter into the production of wheat and those things, and fix it upon the same proportionate basis as that of the products of the farm, and I venture to say that there would be no delay in this body by anyone asking for any different treatment upon the part of the producers of the country.

The Senator from Utah has suggested that there ought to be a halt called upon this proposition with reference to raising prices and raising wages and pyramiding. In this respect I agree with him entirely. I think he is eminently correct in that proposition. The only thing I would suggest in connection with his statement is that the halt be called as a general halt; that there be no exception to the rule; that the farmers be not singled out and have their prices fixed and permit the implement dealer who sells to the farmer to reap what he can under the law of supply and demand. If the halt is to be called all along the line and the law of supply and demand should be permitted to work, in my opinion the American producer will not object at all.

The objection raised here is not that we do not desire to call a halt, but that apparently there is a desire to treat the wheat raiser upon a different basis than that which other producers or the other manufacturers or the people industrially interested are treated.

I call attention to a statement——

Mr. WATSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. Does the Senator know of any law passed by Congress which authorizes any commission or any agency of Government to fix the price on wool?

Mr. BORAH. The authority is being exercised under what is called the license clause by the Food Administration.

Mr. WATSON. Precisely. In other words, by means of a license law they are fixing the price on wool. Does the Senator know of any agency of Government that is at this time fixing the price on cotton?

Mr. BORAH. No; I think they are not operating yet on that subject.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows of a single other thing that is being produced where the price has been lowered below what it was during the time of competition?

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not. I know of no such instance. The situation of the farmer with reference to this price fixing and dealing with this subject generally has been recognized throughout the country as being exceptional, as one standing separate and apart from the general program. The President said in his address on the 4th of December, 1917:

> Recent experience has convinced me that the Congress must go further in authorizing the Government to set limits to prices. The law of supply and demand, I am sorry to say, has been replaced by the law of unrestrained selfishness. While we have eliminated profiteering in several branches of industry, it still runs impudently rampant in others. The farmers, for example, complain with a great deal of justice that, while the regulation of food prices restricts their incomes, no restraints are placed upon the prices of most of the things they must themselves purchase; and similar inequities obtain on all sides.

There is no one here representing an agricultural region or speaking for those who are primarily interested in this proposition who invokes any other rule than the rule suggested by the President in his address to Congress. If the price-fixing system is to obtain it must obtain to the extent certainly of fixing the price of those things which enter into the production of things the price of which you do fix. Otherwise you must not only have injustice but you will have chaos, just such as you are now coming to realize in this country. The rule which we invoke is the rule which has been recognized by the President and throughout the country as a fair and just one.

Now, I think $2.20 wheat is quite high enough provided you will deal with the other subject matters which enter into the production of wheat upon the same basis. I do not think that we are justified for a moment if you are dealing with other subjects upon the same basis in asking for anything in addition to what we already have. It is not by reason of the fact that we are dissatisfied with $2.20 wheat; it is by reason of the fact that under conditions which are permitted to prevail with reference to other commodities it is impossible to produce wheat at $2.20. The price of farm implements has gone up from 100 to 200 per cent and labor has gone up in some instances 150 and 200 per cent, and even more than that.

So, Mr. President, we are here seeking for no favoritism whatever, but for the application of the principle that all shall be dealt with upon an equal basis and all treated alike in regard to this matter.

We had a report sent us a few days ago to which considerable reference has been made. I am not going to make extended reference to it, but there is one matter to which I call attention which illustrates the disadvantage under which the farmer labors at this time under the present system of doing business.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. I quite agree with the Senator from Idaho that the price of $2.20 is high enough for wheat, and I believe, when the Senator stated that, he voiced the sentiment of the largest farm organizations of the country; but, as he also states, that is predicated upon the fact that the price of other products should also be regulated to conform to the $2.20 price. We know that the price of everything the farmer buys—twine, for instance—has increased more than 50 per cent in price just in one year. Farm machinery has increased all the way from 50 to 100 per cent; and what the Senator from Idaho stated, that labor, I think he said, has increased 150 to 200 per cent, is absolutely true. So we are not here asking for an unduly high price for wheat, nor do I believe any farmer is asking for that, but he is asking to be treated fairly. If an arbitrary price is fixed upon his product, he asks that like treatment shall be accorded to other industries.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have received during the last 30 days several letters, some from the State which I have the honor in part to represent and some from other States, in reference to the price of hides, which the stockmen and the farmers have occasion to sell. There is no market for them practically at all, for some reason which it is very difficult for one to understand when he goes into a shoe store or to a harness shop or those places where leather is sold. There seems to be no demand practically for hides of any kind; that is, the kind which are sold by stockmen and farmers of the West. In two of these letters they state to me that the buyer told them there was no demand at all; that they would pay them so much, and if they did not desire to take it they could take the hides back. In other instances they give the price at which the farmer finally sold the hides, which, as one of them stated, "was not sufficient to justify my stopping and taking the hide off the animal and taking it to the market."

Mr. President, let us look at the other end of the transaction. It is said here that if you raise the price of wheat to $2.50 it will mean an increase in the price of flour and bread, and so forth, and will therefore be a burden upon the working people of this country or upon those who are not in a position to pay more than they are paying now. If it were not true that between the wheat raiser and the man who eats the bread there is some one absorbing enormous, extortionate, unconscionable profits, that might be a just and reasonable argument, but if you will raise the price of wheat to $2.50 and reduce the profits of those who are dealing with it in its intermediate stages, you will not only prevent a rise in the price of bread but you will reduce it considerably to the bread consumers of the country.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. KING. I was interested in the statement made by the able Senator from Idaho in respect to the price of hides, and I was wondering if the low price, the inadequate price fixed by the purchaser, was the result of some combination in restraint of trade, and if the Attorney General of the United States or the district attorneys should enforce the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law that condition might not be remedied. I am asking for information because, in view of the enormous demand for leather and the very high price of the finished product, I can not understand why the price of the raw material should be so low.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator is correct in his inference. It is just as the able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] said, they are not playing both ends against the middle, but they are playing the middle against both ends.

Now, with reference to leather and leather goods, this report says:

LEATHER AND LEATHER GOODS.

During the year 1917 a large proportion of the tanners in the United States made unusual profits. As the commission reported in January last, reports of a number of the larger companies show that net profits in 1916 were in several instances two, three, four, or even five times as large as in 1915, and the 1915 net profits in turn showed increases of from 30 per cent to more than 100 per cent over those of 1914. One striking instance is a company whose net profits were reported as follows:

1914	$644,390.90
1916	3,576,544.27

Here is the quotation from a letter:

As an indication of earnings of the big packers in the selling branch of their leather business the following is quoted from a letter of January 17, 1917, by the Eastern Leather Co., an Armour selling subsidiary, to Mr. F. W. Croll, of Armour & Co.:

"We are inclosing our check on the National City Bank, New York City, payable to Mr. J. Ogden Armour, for $915,787, same being a dividend of 53 per cent on the 17,279 shares of common stock standing in his name. In addition to this, and in accordance with our conversation when in Chicago, we have set aside as a surplus $250,000, which represents 10 per cent on the common stock.

It is under such conditions as these that the American farmer has to deal with this situation. He can secure practically nothing for the hides which he sells; but when he goes to buy his leather, his harness, his saddlery, or anything of that kind he pays these enormous prices, and the range of articles runs clear down the line. So it is that he is compelled to add to his price of wheat in order that he may sustain himself.

The American farmer has been asked to cut out other things, to cut out his corn acreage and different products which he might raise at a better price. Why? Because of the fact that those things are not accepted in Europe. The people of Europe do not want that kind of an article.

The fact is, they are not acustomed to using it and they do not use it. So the American farmer is asked to cut out these articles with which he might plant his acreage and receive a better price under the conditions and to raise wheat, and wheat is the one thing that he is forced to take 80 cents less a bushel for than under the law of supply and demand. If he were permitted to enjoy the price which is fixed by the law of supply and demand he would have far in excess of what he would receive at $2.50. If under the appeal which has been made to him by the Government he were permitted or would exercise his right nevertheless to plant his acreage in other products he could still enjoy a greater income than he does. But, yielding to the price-fixing system and also to the appeal of the Government, he is placed in a position where he is compelled to ask what seems to the world an extraordinary price; and I do not hesitate to say again in concluding that it is an extraordinary price under any circumstances or conditions except those which the farmer is compelled to meet, which have been imposed upon him by no act of his own.

Mr. GORE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BORAH. I was about to yield the floor.

Mr. GORE. I wish the Senator to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BORAH. I am pleased to do so.

Mr. GORE. I merely wish to state in this connection that the farmer out of his proceeds has to pay an income tax to the Government if he passes the exemption and also has to pay the railroad companies the guaranteed returns they have enjoyed on the average in the past three years.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely.

Mr. CURTIS obtained the floor.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Kansas yield to me?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

MOUNT DESERT NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. HALE. I should like to call up from the calendar the bill (S. 4569) to establish the Mount Desert National Park in the State of Maine.

Mr. CURTIS. If it does not lead to any discussion, I have no objection. I should like to retain the floor, however.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill he has indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This is rather an extraordinary proceeding right in the midst of the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HALE. It is simply a bill to turn the Sieur de Monts National Monument into a national park. I should like very much to get the bill to the House to get action upon it there before Congress takes a recess. It will take only a few moments. I think there is no opposition to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the tracts of land, easements, and other real estate heretofore known as the Sieur de Monts National Monument, situated on Mount Desert Island, in the county of Hancock and State of Maine, established and designated as a national monument under the act of June 8, 1906, entitled "An act for the preservation of American antiquities," by presidential proclamation of July 8, 1916, is hereby declared to be a national park and dedicated as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people under the name of the Mount Desert National Park.

SEC. 2. That the administration, protection, and promotion of said Mount Desert National Park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provision of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes," and acts additional thereto or amendatory thereof.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to accept in behalf of the United States such other property on said Mount Desert Island, including lands, easements, buildings, and moneys, as may be donated for the extension or improvement of said park.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the bill by adding, after the words "national park," page 2, line 2, the following: "under which name the aforesaid national park shall be entitled to receive and to use all moneys heretofore or hereafter appropriated for Sieur de Monts National Monument."

I will state that in the sundry civil appropriation bill there is an appropriation of $10,000 for the Sieur de Monts Monument, and now that the name of the park is changed the appropriation should go to the Mount Desert National Park.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12281) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DENT, Mr. FIELDS, and Mr. KAHN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 61, and 83 to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SISSON, Mr. MCANDREWS, and Mr. DAVIS managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12633) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 1553. An act to give effect to the convention between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds concluded at Washington, August 16, 1916, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 159. Joint resolution to extend the time within which the President may relinquish control of any railroad or system of transportation, as provided in section 14 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, to January 1, 1919.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate resolution 268, instructing the conferees on House bill 9054, the Agricultural appropriation bill, to recede from the amendment of the Senate numbered 44.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and think he has correctly stated the position of the producers of wheat throughout the country. They would be perfectly willing to depend upon the law of supply and demand to fix the price of wheat. I think I can make the following statement without fear of successful contradiction, and that is that when the original bill was being considered there was no one who contended or believed that the price of wheat was to be fixed. I attended several conferences at which representatives of the Food Administration were present, and it was at no time contended that they wanted to fix the prices of wheat, but in order to encourage a large acreage they asked that a price of not less than $2 be guaranteed for the 1918 crop, so that if a large production was had and the market price fell below $2 the Government would guarantee at least $2 for the wheat so that the farmers might not lose by having put in the large acreage. When the price of wheat was fixed at $2.20, as has been said by, I think, both Senators from North Dakota, wheat was then selling at from $2.75 to $3 a bushel.

I remember the day before the price was fixed at $2.20 the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], and myself called upon the price-fixing power and urged that the price, if it was to be fixed at all, be fixed at the then market price, so that the farmers would continue to get what they were then receiving in the open market for their wheat. But the price was fixed at $2.20 a bushel, notwithstanding the showing made by the four of us.

As has been said here—and there is no use of again going over the ground—all the things which the farmers are compelled to buy have increased in price. A few weeks ago I submitted a list of farm implements and showed how greatly the price had been increased. I desire now to call the attention of the Senate to one article, and I desire to do that because I wish to refer to a question asked by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. In 1915 a 12-foot harvester cost f. o. b. Chicago $130; the same machine costs in 1918 f. o. b. Chicago $250. That is a fair sample of how farm machinery has increased in price.

The Senator from Utah asked the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] why these parties had not been prosecuted under the Sherman antitrust law? The gentleman who sent me this letter and gave me the cost of farm machinery brought that question to the attention of the Federal Trade Commission. The Federal Trade Commission asked that they be sent information. The gentleman secured the information, giving the cost price of various articles of farm machinery in 1915, 1916, 1917, and 1918. Then the matter was referred to the Food Commission. The Food Commission in turn referred it to the Agricultural Department, and the Agricultural Department in turn referred it back to Congress, when, as a matter of fact, the Food Administration had jurisdiction, and the Federal Trade Commission could have proceeded to investigate and verify the figures and if found true they could have caused the prosecution of the dealers under the Sherman antitrust law. Instead, however, of doing that they sent the complaint around the circle and then brought it back to Congress.

There is another reason, in my mind, why the Senate should not yield on this question. When the bill was before the Senate a vote was had, and 49 Senators voted for fixing the price of wheat at not less than $2.50 per bushel, while only 18 Senators voted against that proposition. The measure went to the other House, and there was no vote taken on the 4th of April when it was submitted, but the bill was sent to conference. There, a little later on, I think about the 18th of April, a vote was had. That vote stood 127 for not less than $2.50 wheat and 180 against it, with 120 absentees. I insist that because there were so many absentees at the time the vote was taken in the House the wheat producers of this country have the right to ask the House to again vote upon this question. The only way a vote can be forced is to send the matter back to them and let the House say whether or not they want to agree to the price of wheat fixed by the Senate, to wit, at not less than $2.50 a bushel, or whether they will agree to some other price.

We have been told here in the Senate that out of the 10 conferees only 3 have held up this measure. They were members of the conference from South Carolina, Mississippi, and Georgia. I contend that those three men have no right to prevent a vote in the House upon this question. I believe that if the question shall be submitted to the House a majority will agree to not less than $2.50 wheat.

I am not going over the arguments which have been made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and by other Senators. They have fully covered the ground; but I did want to state the vote in the other House and the vote in the Senate on this question, and then ask that the question be again submitted to the House and let us see if the House will not be fair; let us see if the House will not refuse to follow the three gentlemen who have refused even the consideration of a compromise.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to withdraw the substitute which I offered, so that we may vote directly on the original resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, what I have to say I desire to present as a part of the remarks I made on Saturday. Those remarks I withheld from the RECORD, because I had not then completed the discussion of the theme, and I shall ask to print what I say now and what I said on Saturday as one address.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. REED addressed the Senate. [See Appendix.]

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill referred to by the Senator from Virginia.

The bill (H. R. 12633) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill without a reference to a committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MARTIN. I offer an amendment to the bill, which I send to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 72, after the word "Alaska," in line 4, insert "employees paid from lump-sum appropriations in bureaus, divisions, commissions, or any other governmental agencies or employments created by law since January 1, 1916."

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I think it is necessary for me to explain that amendment, but it will not take me three minutes to do so.

The language of the amendment was incorporated in the bill when it was in the Senate, and it was adopted by the Senate. It went to conference. The matter was elaborately discussed and considered in the conference, it was agreed to by the conferees, it was reported to the two Houses, and passed.

Mr. SMOOT. It was agreed to by both Houses.

Mr. MARTIN. It was agreed to by both Houses; but, to my amazement, the other House, when it undertook to change the bill to conform to the views of the President, as stated in his veto message, struck out that language, which had not been referred to in the veto message, but, as I have stated, had been agreed to by both Houses and put into the bill by the action of both Houses; and yet, under those circumstances, the House struck out that language. I am simply moving to reinstate the language as it had been agreed to by both Houses of Congress.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Virginia if he has a copy of the President's veto message?

Mr. MARTIN. I have not now, though I had it. I sent over to the other House for it, and it was sent to me, and I have read it. I can assure the Senator that the President, in his message, alluded to nothing except what is known as the Borland amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not question that at all; my purpose in making the inquiry was not to question the statement, but I am curious to know the grounds upon which the veto message is based. The information conveyed here this morning that there would be a veto of this bill because it contained what is known as the Borland amendment was a matter of great surprise to me, and it is due to the fact that I was wholly unprepared for such a result that I made inquiry whether or not the Senate had been informed of the President's veto.

Mr. MARTIN. I have read the President's veto message. I will not undertake to give his reasons, but he was simply opposed to what is known as the Borland amendment and vetoed the bill on that account, and none other.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DATA RELATIVE TO PROFITEERING AND THE REVENUE.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to ask that the report of the Federal Trade Commission, sent to the Senate on Saturday last, be printed as a Senate document, if that order has not heretofore been made.

Mr. THOMAS. It has been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from Idaho if he knows whether the Federal Trade Commission has printed it?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know.

Mr. SMOOT. If they have, I will say to the Senator that it would hardly be proper, under the rules that have been adopted by both Houses, to print it as a Senate document. If the Federal Trade Commission has not printed it, however, I have no objection to having it printed, but I should like the Senator to find out whether or not it has been printed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask if the order was not made in the House at the time it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD that it also be printed as a document?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know as to what happened in the House.

Mr. McCUMBER. The RECORD so reads, I think.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator mean printed as a House document?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think so.

Mr. SMOOT. I quote from the Senate proceedings of Saturday last:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, pursuant to a resolution of the Senate of the 10th instant, the report of the Federal Trade Commission relative to profiteering, which will be printed, and also printed in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

Then the communication is printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the record of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the record of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

PROTECTION OF FOREIGN UNIFORMS.

Mr. LEWIS obtained the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this morning there came from the House of Representatives a message informing the Senate that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 11247) providing for the protection of the uniforms of friendly nations, and for other purposes. A similar bill has passed the Senate, and I now ask that the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which the House bill was referred, be discharged from its further consideration and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill, which, as I have said, is exactly similar to the bill which has passed the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Committee on Foreign Relations is discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person, with intent to defraud or mislead, within the United States or Territories, possessions, waters, or places subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to wear any naval, military, police, or other official uniform, decoration, or regalia of any foreign State, nation, or government with which the United States is at peace, or any uniform, decoration, or regalia so nearly resembling the same as to be calculated to deceive, unless such wearing thereof be authorized by such State, nation, or Government.

Any person who violates the provisions of this act shall upon conviction be punished by a fine not exceeding $300 or imprisonment for not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate resolution 268, instructing the conferees on House bill 9054, the Agricultural appropriation bill, to recede from the amendment of the Senate numbered 44.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I wish to address myself for a few moments to the pending measure, which is a motion to recede from some position heretofore taken upon the question of the price of wheat. My remarks shall not be distinctively upon that issue. However, they will not be altogether foreign to it.

Mr. President, we have had a discussion from Senators who have information touching the cultivation of grain. They represent the grain States; they know the needs of the farmers; they know the uses and benefits of the legislation. Mr. President, we are confronted with the question as to whether it were advisable to fix the price at one figure, $2.20, or another figure, $2.50. I confess ignorance as to what would be the best course, so far as applicable to the general welfare of farming, and particularly of the growing of wheat.

Mr. President, I wish to refer to the condition which has brought about the necessity for such legislation. I differ from my esteemed friend, the eminent senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; I differ from Senators of his school of thought. The time has been put upon this Republic, whether it will or not, when the Government is compelled to lay hands upon the instrumentalities of business, and control the agencies essential for the public welfare. It may be that it is not wise that we do this, so far as the standards of our Constitution shall be consulted; but the conditions of the country at this particular time, under a declaration of war, justify the exercise by the Republic of these powers which it has assumed to enter upon.

Sir, the time has really come, though such scholars as the eminent senior Senator from Missouri and those who follow in the same line of thought may be shocked at the contemplation—the time has really come when this Government will have to go much further than prescribe the rates concerning wheat in order to prevent extortion by the master powers controlling the different elements of human welfare. While this war is on this Government must go one step further and take some measures to prescribe all prices as to all the necessary elements that enter into human life. There can be no real reason that can be assigned for the fixing of the price of wheat to the farmer which can not apply equally to fixing the price of steel and iron which that farmer has to buy from the results of the price he obtains through Congress for his wheat.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I not ask the Senator if the Government has not exactly the same power to do that to-day, and under the same law, as it has to fix the price of wheat?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the able Senator from North Dakota to say it may have; and if it has such power, I, for one, during this war, am ready to see it exercise it. I would, sir, instead of the Government isolating here and there some particular subject of human welfare and making it the sole object of its supervision and care, that it should turn its attention to all of the things upon which human life depends and prescribe such conditions and such terms as shall make it impossible for those who through artificial manipulations dominate the necessities of life and starve the hungry of the city, distress the creators of the farm, embarrass the welfare of business, monopolize the opportunities of life, and deprive the Government of its real purpose of existence, namely, happiness and justice to mankind.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Would the Senator also invoke the powers of the Government to regulate the wage scale?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator that I would not invoke the power of the Government to regulate wages in times like these, but, having adjusted prices in order that the toilers be protected, I would likewise exercise the power of seeing that wages were just in proportion to what the laborer turned out.

Mr. President, what I am coming to is this, sir: I did not intend to go afield of the suggestion I wanted really to make, and that was that, instead of taking the time of Congress to prescribe a price of $2.20 for wheat, and then, to encourage the production of wheat, to raise the price 30 cents, what is needed in this country is that there shall be more farming, that there shall be more production; and what I would propose—and I have a bill embodying this suggestion now pending which has been before the Agricultural Committee for consideration for a long time—is that there shall be created by this Government now, sir, a commission that shall have for its object the cultivating of the uncultivated land of the United States, and cultivating that land according to the particular things that land and the zone where it lies may produce; so that, instead of taking the poor man and sending him to the country, tendering him land, and calling upon him to cultivate the land at his own instance, when he has nothing by which he can pay, the Government shall discover that portion of the land that is now uncultivated, summon all of those citizens who have been found to be disqualified for military service and who because of physical infirmities or for other reasons may not fight for their country, and tender them the opportunity to go upon the land. Let the Government equip them with the necessary farm utensils, advance them money enough to enter upon the enterprise, and then, assuring them the preliminary utensils and implements and giving them enough money to initiate them into the enterprise of farming, make a contract with them by which so much of their products shall be turned over to the Government for the uses of the war and the remaining portion to be at their service and privilege, to be sold for their private profit, then to arrange that they by contract return to the Government the sum of money advanced by the Government to them as a loan by which they entered into the farming process. In this way, Mr. President, we would cultivate that barren land that lies idle before the eyes of every person in every State; we would do away with that landlordism that is prevailing throughout the West and in my State and in neighboring States that is growing to so alarming a degree and shutting out the opportunities of a home and independence to thousands and thousands of human beings; these latter being forced to work as tenants, seeing from day to day nothing ahead of them except to toil for another man, being unable to buy land for lack of money, and having no credit because they have no land to pledge to obtain money. In this way, sir, large farms are idle, a part only of the land being cultivated. Many, being mere tenants, are not inspired to toil beyond the mere necessity of paying their rent and living. That system, if continued in America, will reproduce a status such as has cursed Ireland and brought upon that land the blight that all men by their eyes behold and by their hearts must really suffer when they realize the situation of those defenseless and miserable people.

Mr. President, if a policy such as I suggest were to be undertaken now by the Government, as I insist it should be, particularly under the present conditions, the wide areas of the West would be under cultivation; idle people from the cities would be sent out of town; the purlieus and darkened places of the municipalities would not be shadowed by the shrunken forms and emaciated faces of thousands who are hungry. They would not have to live in little tenement places, sir, literally like letters in a box. They would not be crowded like bugs in a hive. They would be human beings. The Government would be justified in that undertaking, because of the need which we now see for bread to the Army of America, for bread to the allies who are our cowarriors in the conflict, for bread and supplies to the thousands who live all around us, seemingly helpless and hopeless.

Let us not resort to the mere artificial and temporary subterfuge of raising the price, which may induce those who have land merely to cultivate it, but to those who have not it offers no opportunity whatever to compete and reduce the price by the only legitimate method—the forms of competition in the industry of man. Instead, sir, of taking our time, day in and day out, in discussing the abstract question of a mere increase of price to induce those who have land to plant more, and reap plenty, and obtain riches, let us turn our attention, sir, to the places throughout the United States that could be cultivated. Let us seize them with the governmental hand—aye, with parental care, if you will—water them with some suggestion, give them the inspiration of encouragement, take the citizen who is homeless, the man who is without occupation, the man who has been proven physically unworthy to go to the war, and give him an inducement to cultivate these public lands, or private lands, if necessay, to be obtained by purchase and condemnation by the Government. Then, sir, when we outfit him with implements, and with money, and with the seed which the Agricultural Department can advance, and settle him upon those lands, we will grow enough of the fruits of the soil to harvest grain sufficient to meet the demands of our people, and not be forced to these little temporary expedients from time to time of increasing the price to the farmer who has the land upon which he can grow wheat, to induce him to feed his countrymen from the bounty which God has given into his hands.

Mr. President, I have had pending before the committee for a year or more the bill to execute this policy. The committee has been a very busy committee. It has not had time to take up all the bills before it; and I am presenting the thought now to the Senators to show them where I feel that relief could really come, and come with stability, and come, as I see it, with a sense of permanency.

Do Senators recognize that there are now in the United States vacant, unoccupied, and uncultivated lands equal to every bit of the land that is now planted with wheat? Do Senators recognize that there is now uncultivated land in the United States to the full extent of every inch that is planted with corn? Without going into these statistics, which are always burdensome and seldom informing, it is sufficient to suggest the latter—that one-half of all the cotton in all the cotton States produced is equaled by the amount of land in the South uncultivated, with nothing being done by the Government to induce the cultivation of this land, notwithstanding all the uses that could flow from that cultivation and the benefits that would come from the planting of that soil.

I know there are eminent Senators, such as the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and others of his thought, who differ strongly with me, who feel that the Government should not enter upon such a course; that all of these benefits and improvements should be left to individual initiative; and that we are entering upon a field that can be classified as socialism, or might be termed a form of parental centralism, that is contrary to the theory of the formation of the Republic.

Mr. President, I shall not take issue with any gentleman on that point. This Republic has gone far afield from the theory upon which it was founded. There is not a State of the Union to-day that cries out for State sovereignty if there is a particular project which it desires, for the success of that State, to have carried out at the hands of the National Government. The time has come when a thing that is necessary to be done for the citizen should be done by whatever agency can rightfully do it. The Government has gotten to the point where the adoption of the plan which I suggest is justified by the war necessities; and if, when the war is over, it is found then convenient to withdraw from it, that may be considered at that time.

Mr. President, the thought that I suggest is in harmony with the other. The time has come to take the railroads, to take them because they are a necessary branch of Government, to possess them by the United States, leaving to subsequent determination the mere matters of detail of management desirable upon a particular road, depending upon where it is located and the particular circumstances surrounding it. Equally, the time has come when we should take possession of the telegraphs and the telephones of the United States as an instrumentality of commerce, and take them by the Government as a necessary element of Government. With these in our hands, and then, sir, with the proper encouragement of agriculture, with a proper inducement to farming, the great, populous centers will no longer be darkened by those who are hungering and needy, and the great number of those who now have no thrifty occupation will not be in the cities. The inducement will be to take them to the land, where they can cultivate the soil, have an independent home, a prosperous farm, and tender to the Government those particular benefits of which now we are so much in need.

I trust we will have an end of the constant returning to Congress from hour to hour or from day to day for each little expedient, each little emergency, the increase of prices to each individual, and let us have some general principle that will be for the general welfare of the citizen. That is why I rose at this time to advocate the bill I have had pending so long and to bring this question to the attention of Congress as showing now that it was justified when I introduced it; that its policies are justified in the future; and therefore, sir, that it is timely now that the whole policy of it be revived and be carried into execution.

For myself, sir, I voted for $2.50 for wheat because, under the circumstances, I felt it justified. Having voted for it then, and not understanding now any reason for withdrawing that vote, I am compelled to vote again as I voted before, the inducement then being that I might induce the farmer of a limited area of wheat to grow more wheat, that the citizen might have more bread and the armies be fed. As there is no other alternative open to me, as the measure to which I refer has not reached the ripening period when it can be exercised and administered, I shall adhere to my position as heretofore voted and vote to sustain the price previously fixed.

At this time, sir, having stated my views, if not satisfactorily, I trust at least plainly, I yield the floor.

STATE, WAR, AND NAVY BUILDING.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 271), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of the report made by the National Board of Fire Underwriters on the condition of the State, War, and Navy Building.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I was constrained to offer this resolution because of my great interest in the condition of the State, War, and Navy Building. Last December I observed that in one of the interior courts of that building a frame structure had been erected which never would have been permitted in any other building of like character in this country. Perhaps my complaint to the officials of the War Department had something to do with having placed in that building proper fire apparatus and a sprinkler system, which, however, in case of fire would be of little value. I have more carefully examined the building since, and because of the fact that we have stored in it valuable documents of the Government, including the original Declaration of Independence, our treaties with foreign Governments, and the important records of the Army and Navy, it seemed to me desirable that these facts regarding the building should be brought to the attention of the Senate. I have therefore introduced this resolution asking for a copy of the report of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, and I trust it may be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the resolution.

The Secretary again stated the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MOTHERS OF DEMOCRACY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, last Monday I reported from the Committee on Military Affairs a bill to incorporate the Mothers of Democracy of the United States of America and received unanimous consent for its consideration; but the question was raised by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] that the bill should have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The bill was so referred and was reported by him favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary this morning, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It is Senate bill 4724.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The amendments were, in section 2, page 5, line 19, before the word "sons," to insert "husbands"; in the same line, before the word "relatives," to insert "or other"; in section 3, line 24, before the word "personal," to strike out "real and"; in the same line, after the word "personal," to strike out "estate" and insert "property and to acquire leasehold interests limited by the period for which it is incorporated, but"; in line 25, after the word "necessary," to strike out "or convenient"; and in section 6, page 7, after the words "Secretary of State," to insert "the corporate existence of the corporation hereby created shall terminate upon the lapse of three years after the date of the proclamation declaring the termination of the present war," so as to make the bill read:

SEC. 2. That the purposes and objects of said corporation are declared to be patriotic, the securing to its members of those benefits which should accrue from acquaintance and association of women residing in different parts of the Union who have sons, husbands, brothers, or other relatives or friends in the Army or Navy; the cultivation of an active interest in the morale and patriotic spirit of the soldiers, sailors, and citizens of our country.

SEC. 3. The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate resolution 268, instructing the conferees on House bill 9054, the Agricultural appropriation bill, to recede from the amendment of the Senate numbered 44.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it, and the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, when this resolution fixing the price of wheat was before the Senate, I voted against $2.50 wheat.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator understand that the resolution has been agreed to?

Mr. POMERENE. I did not so understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, I propose to say in any event what I have to say on the subject. I assume that the matter that was presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] was before the Senate when the vote was taken.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no doubt about it. The bill of the Senator from Pennsylvania was passed, and the Chair inquired about the resolution and waited.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, what resolution was pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution instructing the conferees on the Agricultural appropriation bill to recede.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I was here in the Chamber, and I confess as one that I heard nothing from the Chair about it. Perhaps it was because there was so much confusion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Reporter read it.

Mr. GRONNA. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Reporter will read what occurred.

The Reporter read as follows:

After the "Mothers of Democracy" bill was passed the following occurred:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it, and the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not doubt the statement of the Chair at all, but I am sure it was not generally understood; and I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE obtained the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I was going to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, before that is done I should be glad if the Senator would yield for the passage of a bill which will take only a moment. The senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is very much interested in a small bill with reference to the city of Faribault, Minn., in which the Government is authorized to sell to the city a small piece of land for an alley. It is very important to get the measure through; and, if there is no objection, I should like to make a report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds on the bill. It has passed the House, and simply gives permission to deed enough land from the Government to make an alley connecting the streets.

Mr. PENROSE. I will renew my suggestion after the bill has been disposed of.

PUBLIC-BUILDING SITE, FARIBAULT, MINN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia reports favorably from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a bill which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 3332) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey certain lands to the city of Faribault, Minn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell to the city of Faribault, Minn., at a proper price and upon such terms as he may deem to be to the best interests of the United States, that portion of the Federal building site in said city described as follows: The west 16 feet of lots 1 and 2 of block 46, of the original town (now city) of Faribault, Minn., for public-alley purposes; to convey said land to said city by the usual quitclaim deed, and to deposit the proceeds of such sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of S. Res. 268, instructing the conferees on House bill 9054, the Agricultural appropriation bill, to recede from the amendment of the Senate numbered 44.

Mr. PENROSE. I raise the point of no quorum, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is detained on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I expect to speak very briefly to the question before the Senate, Shall the Senate recede from its position fixing the price of wheat at $2.50 per bushel?

I have been a good deal interested in the arguments upon this subject during the past day or two. Comparisons have been constantly made between the price of wheat and wheat flour, and corn and corn meal, and rye and rye flour; and it is argued that because the prices of corn and rye and corn meal and rye flour are unusually high, therefore wheat flour and wheat should be made higher.

I think we have been overlooking the fact that the price of wheat and wheat flour has been fixed by Government agencies. The prices of corn and rye and corn meal and rye flour have not been fixed; and because they have not been fixed they are now extraordinarily high, higher than anything in the condition of the markets justifies.

I come from a State that raises wheat. Last year, I believe, we raised about 41,000,000 bushels, if I remember correctly. We do not raise wheat in as large quantities as some of the other States, but my belief is that the statistics will show that we have as many farmers raising wheat in Ohio as in any other State in the Union. I do not know of any general demand for the raising of the price of wheat. I have had a few letters on that subject. I have had more letters from farmers opposing it.

When this subject was up for discussion in the Senate before I sought to get from the Agricultural Department some figures on the cost of production of wheat in the various States. I found they did not have them, because the cost of production varies so much in the different States, owing to climatic and soil conditions, that they find it next to impossible to secure the necessary data from which to figure the costs; but at the same time I called the Senate's attention to a report which had been made by the agricultural department of Purdue University in which they had collected the figures from 207 farms in Indiana, Ohio, and Michigan; and the department found that the average cost on 207 farms in those States last year was $1.20 per bushel. I am satisfied that was an outside figure, at least for last year; but if the cost has increased—and it has increased somewhat during the past year, I have no doubt—the Government has increased the price to $2.20 per bushel. Now, why? For the purpose of encouraging production.

When this legislation was first initiated to raise the price to $2.50, the winter wheat had already been put in the ground. It is true that the spring wheat was not sown in certain latitudes, but I have not seen the evidence yet to the effect that the spring wheat was sown because they had been promised $2.50 per bushel for their product. If there was, in the earlier part of this year, any excuse for the raising of the price of wheat, it does not exist now.

We are not able to determine exactly what shall be the production of wheat of this country during the present harvest, but we have some figures which have been furnished to us by the Agricultural Department, and I assume they are the most reliable obtainable. During last year the total production of wheat was 650,820,000 bushels. The estimate on June 1 of this year of the production of winter wheat was 586,915,000 bushels and the estimate of spring wheat 343,987,000 bushels, making a total of 930,902,000 bushels. We were only expecting—or, rather, the Agricultural Department indicated that it would be satisfied if the country produced 750,000,000. We are promised, according to the best data we can secure, 930,902,000 bushels, and now it is aimed to raise the price of this wheat 30 cents per bushel. If that is done it means that by a vote of Congress, if the price is raised to $2.50 per bushel, we are adding to the first cost of the wheat of the country for the consumers $279,270,600; and I want to ask what justification there is now for the Congress of the United States to vote this bonus and thereby add that amount to the cost of the food to the consumers.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I wish to ask the Senator if the amount of wheat we are going to have may not be less than the estimate of the Agricultural Department?

Mr. POMERENE. That is true.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Everyone who is familiar with estimates along those lines knows that they are not at all accurate, or anywhere near it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, of course it is not an accurate estimate, but during the year 1915 the estimate for that year was, as I recall it, something like 950,000,000 bushels, and the total production for that year was 1,035,000,000 bushels.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. The Senator asked whether there was any evidence that the acreage of wheat had been affected by the price. Of course, no one can by any possibility trace the connection; but does not the Senator think that the prospect of a better price had something to do with the increased acreage?

Mr. POMERENE. Of course we can speculate on that subject. I assume that it had some influence.

Mr. REED. Now, I want to ask the Senator another question.

Mr. POMERENE. Just one moment. Let me say in advance that the Agricultural Department and everybody else interested in the production of food has been carrying on a propaganda for months and months urging the sowing of increased acreage of winter wheat and increased acreage of spring wheat, and it was during this time, it is true, that some Senators conceived the idea that we would advance the price over and above that which had been fixed by the President. It is probably true that it may have had some influence with some farmers, but I do not believe that it was very material.

Mr. REED. Now, let me ask further——

Mr. POMERENE. Let me finish this first. I want to get these figures in, if I may.

In 1917 there were 18,511,000 acres of spring wheat sown, and in 1918 the Agricultural Department reports that there were 22,489,000 acres sown.

Mr. REED. Now, will the Senator allow me?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. REED. Of course, this bill fixing the price of wheat at $2.50 never became a law, but it did pass the Senate. It did go to the country as the action of the Senate, and it went to the country as the action of the Senate by a very overwhelming vote.

Now, does the Senator really think that that had an influence and was one of the causes increasing the acreage from eighteen million five hundred thousand to twenty-two million and substantially five hundred thousand?

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator can speculate quite as well as I can on that subject. Neither he nor I can make any exact statement with regard to it. It may have had some influence on some minds, but I submit the mere fact that a bill may have been presented to either House of Congress or may have been passed by one branch of Congress is no reason why the wheat raisers should come here at this time and say, "We depended upon $2.50 wheat, otherwise we would not have sown that amount."

Mr. REED. But does the Senator think it is just fair to these farmers to say, "You have sown your wheat; you can not increase your crop now, and therefore we will kill the legislation"?

Mr. POMERENE. I have answered that question, I think, in substance at least.

Mr. REED. Very well; I do not care to press it further.

Mr. POMERENE. I want to say, on the other hand, I know the farmers are prosperous, and I want them to continue to be prosperous. There is no man here talking in behalf of $2.50 a bushel wheat who is more interested in the farmers than I am, but at the same time, with the price of food going skyward, I think also of the million and a half men or the two million men who are going to the front and of their families at home and of the working classes everywhere who will be forced to pay this increased cost.

Much time has been spent during the day calling attention to the abnormal profits in other lines of industry, and I indorse what has been said on that subject. It has been wrong, absolutely wrong, but are we going to right that wrong by committing another? Is it fair to the public to say that because there are enormous profits along certain lines of industry therefore we are going to have them in other lines of industry?

Mr. President, it seems to me that we have been derelict in this, that at the time we fixed the price of wheat and of wheat flour, or conferred the authority to fix it, we should at the same time have conferred the authority to fix the price of competing food products. Then there would not have been this great difference between the market prices as they now exist.

Mr. REED. I wish to ask the Senator a question, if he will permit me. Where is the law that gave the authority to fix the price of wheat?

Mr. POMERENE. It is in the food act, but I am not going to take the time to discuss it. Suffice it to say that it has been exercised.

Now, let me call the Senator's attention to this fact: We can criticize the food department as much as we wish, but the unalterable fact remains that before the price of flour was fixed flour here in the city of Washington was retailing at $18 a barrel. In looking at a market report in the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin of June 29, 1918, I find that flour was then selling—spring-wheat flour—at $10.75 to $11.20; Kansas white flour, in sacks, at $10.90 to $11.20; winter-wheat flour at $10.85 to $11.10. If we are to charge all of the shortcomings that we find in food administration to Mr. Hoover, we ought to give him credit at least for some of the good things he has done.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator spoke of the increase to $2.50 a bushel being 30 cents more a bushel than the present figure as being an imposition upon the public. Bearing in mind that the statistics show that each person consumes one barrel of flour a year, that would make a difference of 90 cents a year for each individual, or 7 cents a month, or 2 mills a day. Under the extraordinary high earning power at the present time, the Senator thinks that would be a very great imposition?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it takes from 4½ to 5 bushels of wheat to make a barrel of flour. The first cost would add about $1.50 per barrel to the flour. That is what it means. I recognize the fact that when somebody wants increased prices he says it does not amount to anything; but it is all these little things that make up the big prices.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me just a minute. I join in what the Senator says with regard to the injustice of many of these high prices, but that has not disturbed me on this question in the least. If prices on some commodities are too high, let us lower them. It is not sound policy to say because some prices are too high therefore others shall also be made too high. I think we should extend the price-fixing powers of the Government. That was my position before, and it is my position now. We will be more nearly working out reasonable justice if we do that than to leave the ultimate consumer to suffer on all sides and from all branches of industry. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. The Senator states that flour is now selling under the benign rule of Mr. Hoover at $10 to $11 a barrel. The Senator is well aware, of course, that a great many laboring men are making $10, $11, and $12 a day, and that they make enough in a day to buy a barrel of flour. The average laboring man has a family, say, of five. The average consumption of flour is one barrel per capita. If the pending amendment would increase the price of flour $1.50 a barrel, that would be $7.50 additional to the average laboring man in Cleveland and Cincinnati. The question is, Who is better entitled to that $7.50, the laboring man who is receiving extraordinary, generous wages, or the farmer who actually produces the wheat and is entitled to his price, and would have received the price but for the intervention of his Government?

Mr. POMERENE. I have heard that question before.

Mr. GORE. I think it has not been answered.

Mr. POMERENE. I have answered it before. I do not think it needs any answer. When the Senator speaks of laboring men earning $10 and $11 a day, that is true in some instances. There is a mighty small percentage of them who are earning $10 and $11 a day. There are a good many washerwomen and scrub women who are not earning $10 or $11 a day. There are a good many men engaged in common labor who are not earning it. There are a good many poor people—men and women and young children dependent upon their own efforts—who are not earning it. Of course we can make an excuse to raise the prices in these matters.

Some reference was made here the other day to the price of meat and to the price of corn, and it was said there was not anything in the production of meat at the high prices named. We know that, generally speaking, hogs and cattle are produced on farms and the corn is raised by the farmer, and whether he gets the profits out of his corn or out of his hogs, or both, what difference does it make? No; we ought to be fair in presenting subjects of this character.

I do not care now to discuss this matter at further length. I am convinced that $2.50 wheat will be a very great injustice to the general public. I know that in my own State the farmers generally are not asking for it.

Mr. GORE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to know what the vote is on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the resolution instructing the conferees.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to have the question that is being voted on stated to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is in plain violation of the rule when the roll call has begun. Under the rule there is nothing that can take place except calling the roll.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be read. I have just entered the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the Senate at the conference on the bill (H. R. 9054), entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," be, and they are hereby, instructed to recede from the amendment of the Senate numbered 44.

Mr. PENROSE. Then all Senators who want $2.50 a bushel wheat will vote against the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. They will vote against it. They will vote "nay." The roll call will be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when Mr. TOWNSEND's name was called). The junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I will allow this statement to stand for the remainder of the day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I rise to announce the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], occasioned by personal illness.

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. REED (after having voted in the negative). I voted but neglected to announce that, while I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], I have been shown a telegram from him, and in that telegram the statement is made that he would also vote "nay" if present. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote and shall allow my vote to stand.

Mr. STERLING (after having voted in the negative). I have voted, not knowing of the absence of my pair, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. Not seeing him in the Chamber I transfer my pair to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. COLT. I have a pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has not voted. I am paired with that Senator. I transfer the pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. GRONNA. I am requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent due to illness in his family. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to anounce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]; and

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—19.

Ashurst	King	Robinson	Swanson

So Mr. MARTIN's resolution was rejected.

Mr. SHIELDS subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago, when the vote was taken on the resolution of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] to instruct the conferees on the part of the Senate on the Agricultural appropriation bill to recede from Senate amendment No. 44, I was called from the Chamber by a constituent and did not cast my vote. I wish now to state that if I had been present, I would have voted "nay," and had so stated to the Senator from Virginia during the afternoon.

EXCLUSION AND EXPULSION OF ANARCHISTIC AND SIMILAR ALIENS.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in the absence of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], the chairman of the Committee on Immigation, I am requested to report from the Committee on Immigration without amendment a bill which I send to the desk. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. I think when the bill is read by title there will be no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the bill by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12402) to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

Mr. HOLLIS. I should like to hear the bill read.

Mr. ASHURST. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That aliens who are anarchists; aliens who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law; aliens who disbelieve in or are opposed to all organized government; aliens who advocate or teach the assassination of public officials; aliens who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property; aliens who are members of or affiliated with any organization that entertains a belief in, teaches, or advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law, or that entertains or teaches disbelief in or opposition to all organized government, or that advocates the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized Government, because of his or their official character, or that advocates or teaches the unlawful destruction of property shall be excluded from admission into the United States.

SEC. 2. That any alien who, at any time after entering the United States, is found to have been at the time of entry, or to have become thereafter, a member of any one of the classes of aliens enumerated in section 1 of this act, shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor, be taken into custody and deported in the manner provided in the immigration act of February 5, 1917. The provisions of this section shall be applicable to the classes of aliens mentioned in this act irrespective of the time of their entry into the United States.

SEC. 3. That any alien who shall, after he has been excluded and deported or arrested and deported in pursuance of the provisions of this act, thereafter return to or enter the United States or attempt to return to or to enter the United States shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of not more than five years; and shall, upon the termination of such imprisonment, be taken into custody, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor, and deported in the manner provided in the immigration act of February 5, 1917.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator from Oklahoma has asked for the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the principle upon which the bill is founded is a correct principle, but I should dislike very much to vote for the bill offhand, without knowing its details; that is, as to how it is going to be determined as to whether or not a man is guilty of the offenses described in the bill or whether or not he entertains the views which he is to be charged thereunder with holding. Without a little more consideration than we can give it in this way, I should feel I was voting blindly.

Mr. GORE. If there be any objection to the bill, I shall not insist on its consideration to-night.

Mr. BORAH. Who is going to determine whether or not a man is an anarchist under the provisions of this bill? Are you going to leave that to the department?

Mr. PENROSE. That is to be left to the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. GORE. It is left to the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. BORAH. Are you going to leave it to an ex parte hearing by the Department of Immigration or of Labor?

Mr. GORE. I will say that I have a letter from the department touching the bill, which explains it.

Mr. BORAH. It is not the principle of the bill to which I am objecting, but I want, before a man is exiled from this country, that he shall be accorded a hearing in accordance with our system of government. Before it is determined that he shall be exiled, if he is guilty of the things which are condemned in the bill, I want him to have an open hearing before a judicial body. I do not want any ex parte determination of such a question. Even an anarchist is entitled to a trial in the orderly way provided by American jurisprudence before he is to be condemned and driven into exile. This system of ex parte, bureaucratic hearing is the way to make anarchists. So I ask time to look into the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not see how the alien is to be deported; I do not quite understand how the immigration laws can be applied. An immigrant may be stopped at the port of entry; but after a man has been here four or five years, how is he to be deported and where is he to go? If he comes from Germany we can not send him back to Germany, because he can not get in there or into Austria, and we should have considerable difficulty even in landing an alien in Russia; the landing party might be captured perhaps. and so get into trouble. It would not be a popular service. I think the bill contains a good principle, but certainly it ought to be thought out a little more in detail.

Mr. GORE. I shall not insist on the consideration of the bill to-night, in view of the objections which have been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the calendar.

Mr. GORE. I ask to have printed in the RECORD the letter from the department to which I referred a moment ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 1, 1918.

Hon. THOMAS W. HARDWICK,
Chairman Committee on Immigration, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The bill H. R. 12309, introduced in the House by Representative BURNETT at the request of this department, entitled "A bill to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," has been passed by the House without a dissenting vote. You will recall that, at the request of this department, you introduced in the Senate a similar bill; also that your committee, at a meeting attended by certain representatives of this department and at which Representative BURNETT explained to the committee the purposes of the bill, concluded to report it favorably to the Senate as soon as possible after its passage by the House provided a slight amendment was made in the wording before it passed the House, at least, this is the department's understanding of the matter. The amendment which you suggested was incorporated on the floor of the House and another amendment was made, the purpose of the latter, however, being merely to improve the grammatical construction of one of the clauses.

There are now pending before this department a large number of cases of aliens who fall within the provisions of the bill and with respect to the possibility of deporting whom under the terms of the existing law there is considerable doubt. The matter is regarded as one of great importance, and the department trusts that it may be possible for the bill to be enacted into law before Congress takes a recess.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN W. ABERCROMBIE,
Acting Secretary.

ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think it necessary to have an executive session.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator for any matter which may be disposed of briefly.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think it will be very brief. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 156, being Calendar No. 473. I think it will take but a few minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 156) to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the years 1919 and 1920.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask that the Secretary read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada if this is similar in all respects to the joint resolution suspending the annual assessment work on mining claims during the years 1917 and 1918?

Mr. HENDERSON. I will state, for the Senator's benefit, that it is; the only difference being that the years 1917 and 1918 have been changed so as to read "for the continuation of the war."

Mr. SMOOT. As I read it hastily, I thought that it was exactly the same, of course with the date changed as indicated.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is just the same.

Mr. SMOOT. That being the case, I think the joint resolution ought to pass.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 156) to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the years 1919 and 1920, which had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with amendments, on page 1, line 8, after the words "during the," to strike out "years 1919 and 1920" and to insert "continuation of the war in which the United States is now engaged, and until December 31 of the year following that in which the war is concluded"; and on page 2, line 4, after the words "December 31," to strike out "of each of the years 1919 and 1920" and to insert "of each year," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed or improvements to be made during each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended during the continuation of the war in which the United States is now engaged, and until December 31 of the year following that in which the war is concluded: Provided, That every claimant of any such mining claim in order to obtain the benefits of this resolution shall file or cause to be filed in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded on or before December 31 of each year a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this resolution: Provided further, That this resolution shall not apply to oil placer locations or claims.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the continuation of the war in which the United States is now engaged, and until midnight of December 31 of the year following that in which such war is concluded."

PROPOSED SUSPENSION OF THE RULES—GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to offer a notice of a motion to suspend the rules in connection with the general deficiency appropriation bill. I do not ask that it be read but that it be incorporated in the RECORD, if that be necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The notice referred to is as follows:

"I hereby give notice, in writing, that during the consideration of the general deficiency bill I will move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI of the standing rules of the Senate so as to permit the offering to said bill of the following amendment:

"'That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to determine whether any contracts entered into prior to June 30, 1917, for the erection of public buildings under the supervision of the Treasury Department have become inequitable and unjust on account of increased costs of labor and materials and other unforeseen conditions arising out of the entrance of the United States into the war with Germany, and in his discretion and with the consent of the contractors to modify and readjust the terms and conditions of said contracts in such manner as he may deem equitable and just to the contractor and the subcontractor, and any sum which may be necessary to provide for the increased cost of any such contracts due to any such modifications and readjustments not exceeding the sum of $500,000, in addition to existing appropriations, which are hereby made available, is hereby appropriated, out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and any penalties or forfeitures incurred by any such contractor due to conditions resulting from the war may be waived by the Secretary of the Treasury.'

"ATLEE POMERENE."

INVESTIGATION OF LIGNITE COAL.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 3220, being Calendar No. 474.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the bill be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 3220) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make investigations, through the Bureau of Mines, of lignite coals, to determine the practicability of their utilization as a fuel and in producing commercial products, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make experiments and investigations, through the Bureau of Mines, of lignite coals, to determine the commercial and economic practicability of their utilization in producing fuel oil, gasoline substitutes, ammonia, tar, solid fuels, gas for power and other purposes; and there is hereby appropriated, out of the funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, to conduct such experiments and investigations, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and including supplies, equipment, expenses of traveling and subsistence, and for every other expense incident to this work.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to offer an amendment, which has the approval of the department and, I believe, of all the members of the committee. In line 5, after the word "coals," I move to insert the words "and peat." Peat is an important article, which comes under the same head as lignite coal, and is found in numerous States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, after the word "coals," it is proposed to insert the words "and peat."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. After the bill is passed, I shall move to amend the title so as to insert after the word "coals" the words "and peat."

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the appropriation ought to be increased from $100,000 to $150,000, and I move that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida offers an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 10, it is proposed to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$150,000."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think amendments of this sort ought at least to have been presented to the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. The committee understands them, and the committee is quite in accord with every one of the amendments I am offering.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is it too late to object to the present consideration of this bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent has been given. The Senator can talk it to death.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will not press it, because, if he does, I shall be compelled to object. I am opposed to the bill, and I want to discuss it a little.

Mr. GRONNA Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Utah that this is a bill which has been drawn and sent here by the Interior Department. It has the recommendation not only of the Bureau of Mines, but of Secretary Lane. Hearings have been held on this same bill in the House, and it has been favorably reported from the House committee.

I have no objection, of course, to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida. The peat industry is, I understand, a very important one; but there is no bill before this body that is of any more importance, not only to my State but to the entire West, including Canada, than this very bill, so far as it relates to lignite coal. If it were not so late in the afternoon, I know that by simply reading the hearings and the statements made by Secretary Lane and Director Manning and Mr. Darling, of the Bureau of Mines, I could satisfy the Senator from Utah so that he would not object to its consideration.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I know that many of these bureaus and departments are very anxious to extend the field of their activities; and they find many reasons, some of which are very sophistical, to justify their entrance into activities that do not belong to the Government.

Mr. GRONNA. This bill is in the interest of economy, and I am sure that the Senator will not object to it after he goes into the subject fully.

Mr. KING. Then will the Senator from North Dakota consent to its postponement until to-morrow morning, if he is so sure that after further investigation I will not dissent?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that after he has read the report—and I will give him a copy of the hearings in the House—if he has any objection, I shall be very glad to move to reconsider action upon it; but we are anxious to have the bill sent to the House as soon as possible. The department is anxious to have the bill become a law before the recess. I will say to the Senator, and I know the committee will bear me out in that statement, that the committee unanimously voted in favor of it.

Mr. KING. I can only say, Mr. President, that schemes of this kind do not commend themselves to me at all. I do not believe in governmental experimentation. Private individuals can experiment with these things, if there is any profit in them, and do it with far greater success.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I think that lignite coals have been the subject of experiment for a hundred years.

Mr. KING. Surely.

Mr. THOMAS. And why the Government should spend $100,000 or any other sum of money for experimenting upon a well-known fuel, which has been used as a fuel ever since coal has been used at all, passes my comprehension.

Of course the Senator says that he has listened to hearings upon the subject, and is convinced that the passage of the bill is of great importance. A few days ago I was talking with a coal man who told me of recent experiments that he had made in pulverizing lignite, and stated that by mixing it with oil he had produced a most wonderful fuel. In the State which I in part represent here, lignite coals have been commercially produced and consumed for the last 50 years; and I think we might just as well expend money in ascertaining the fuel value of anthracite coal, or of bituminous or semibituminous coal, or of old-fashioned hickory wood, as to expend $100,000 in further experimentation upon lignite coal.

In the Senator's State there are vast quantities of this coal. The experiments that have been made by private enterprise, particularly the last one of which I speak, demonstrate the value of that fuel. Now, why should we expend $100,000 for this purpose? And, Mr. President, it will only be the commencement of appropriations for experiments upon lignite coal and other coals, once we begin making appropriations for it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall object to the present consideration of the bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FLETCHER. The consideration of the bill was begun, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent was given to consider the bill. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 2, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 1, 1918.

(Continuation of legislative day of Saturday, June 29, 1918.)

The recess having expired, the House (at 11 o'clock a. m.) was called to order by the Speaker.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10854. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12599. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3929. An act for the construction of a private conduit across Michigan Avenue NE. in the District of Columbia; and

S. 2653. An act to revive, with amendments, an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 12281) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, had requested a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. WARREN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 2653. An act to revive, with amendments, an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DISINTERMENTS FROM CONGRESSIONAL CEMETERY.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12429) to authorize the health officer of the District of Columbia to permit the disinterment of the bodies of Eliza Hill Bowles, Bernice Worthen Bowles, and Bessie Vivian Bowles.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the health officer of the District of Columbia be, and he is hereby, authorized, under such directions and precautions as he may adopt, to permit William C. Bowles to disinter, remove, and reinter the bodies of his deceased children, Eliza Hill Bowles, buried October 8, 1893; Bernice Worthen Bowles, buried October 17, 1893; and Bessie Vivian Bowles, buried October 17, 1893; all of whom died from diphtheria and were buried in Congressional Cemetery in said District.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "eighth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventh."

Page 1, line 9, strike out the word "seventeenth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighteenth."

Page 1, line 11, strike out the word "seventeenth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighteenth."

Page 2, line 2, after the word "District," insert the following: "But such permit shall not be issued unless there has been filed in the health department of the District of Columbia a permit from the proper governmental authorities at the place where the reinterment is to be made authorizing said interment there of the said remains."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CERTAIN HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 4555) to validate certain homestead entries, a similar bill being on the House Calendar. It has been favorably reported by the House Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar that should be given consideration.

Mr. STEENERSON. I know that. I have several bills on that calendar myself, but this is a very urgent matter. These settlers are in need. There are only 14 of them in that district, and the Secretary of the Interior has suspended action in order to give Congress time to act.

Mr. GARNER. May I make a suggestion to the gentleman from Minnesota that this being ordinarily unanimous-consent day and there being a number of bills on the calendar, would it not be better to clear up the desk and then take an hour and see if we can not clear the Calendar for Unanimous Consent?

Mr. STEENERSON. This will take only a moment, and the other side have had one bill passed by unanimous consent this morning.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, we would like to go on and finish up the census bill, and if we finish that up very shortly, then we can take up the remainder of the day with the Unanimous Consent Calendar until conference reports or matters concerning conference reports come in.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

FOURTEENTH AND SUBSEQUENT DECENNIAL CENSUSES.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses.

The SPEAKER. Before the Chair puts that motion he would like to make the suggestion that whenever a conference report or anything of that nature comes in, or a resolution continuing appropriations, the committee ought to rise, so that these matters of pressing importance can be considered at once.

Mr. LARSEN. We understand that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire whether that covers the report of the deficiency appropriation bill, which is likely to be presented in a very short time?

The SPEAKER. That will cover all of them.

Mr. LARSEN. In that connection I will say that there are only three sections of this bill remaining before we are done with it.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. Does the suggestion of the Speaker include the report of the special committee to investigate the East St. Louis riots?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; the committee will not rise for the presentation of that.

Mr. DYER. I understand that committee are ready to report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that, and the Chair wants them to report, but these other matters have got to be attended to. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the census bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I direct the attention of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN], and also the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM], who, I see, has just entered the Hall, to line 17 of page 27, where it says "such census shall be taken as of January 1." In section 20 it is provided that the enumeration shall be taken "as of the 1st day of January." Now, of course, "January 1" is not the proper form of words to use in an act of Congress, and I move to strike out the words "January 1" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the first day of January." That will make the language conform to sections 19 and 20.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 27, line 17, strike out "January 1" and insert in lieu thereof "the first day of January."

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had, on June 29, 1918, approved and signed joint resolutions of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 255. Joint resolution authorizing the readmission to the United States of certain aliens who have been conscripted or have volunteered for service with the military forces of the United States or cobelligerent forces; and

S. J. Res. 158. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue permits for the diversion of water from the Niagara River.

FOURTEENTH AND SUBSEQUENT DECENNIAL CENSUSES.

The committee resumed its session.

The Cleak read as follows:

SEC. 32. That the Director of the Census be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to collect and publish, for the years 1921, 1923, 1925, and 1927, and for every tenth year after each of said years, statistics of the products of manufacturing industries; and the director is hereby authorized to prepare such schedules as in his judgment may be necessary.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I much regret that I have to call the attention of the House to this matter, but unfortunately it is the disposition of some people in this country to misrepresent the House. Last year this House enacted a law which taxed every Member in it not only an income tax but an excess-profits tax and a supertax. I am particularly touchy about it myself. Although a very poor man, I paid $799.90 in income taxes, and yet miserable prevaricators are going around saying that this Congress voted to exempt itself. I am going to insert in the RECORD a statement by the collector of internal revenue calling attention to the fact, so that it may be well circulated. While I am here employed in the work of my constituents and the Republic thousands of these false, malicious publications are being circulated through our district, paid for from a campaign fund which they have, because I dared fight for the conscription of wealth. When I said, "Let their dollars die for their country, too," I touched their tender spot, and these vicious falsehoods in an immense issue of a paper which has not the privilege of the mails is their answer. "Let the galled jade wince."

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Do the people who still think that live in the gentleman's district?

Mr. LITTLE. Some of them. A man in our district has just sent out thousands of copies of a paper in which he gives that as the reason why he should go to Congress from our district. I do not think that anybody really thinks so. There was a man traveling around our district making that statement on behalf of the candidate who sent out these papers. I met him on the train and called his attention, in a kind and firm way, to the fact that somebody had been lying to him; and he agreed with me after a slight argument. But I find other men interested in the primaries still reiterating that statement. I do not think that any honest man would make the statement. A man who would circulate, as has been done, thousands of that falsehood to get into Congress would violate any law for political triumph. I think the collector's ruling is proper matter to be circulated for public information.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think that some of these people who are circulating this statement are seeking themselves to avoid taxation?

Mr. LITTLE. No; the man that I refer to probably never paid a dollar of income tax in his life, has no dependents, and has thrifty and industrious relatives who will not let him suffer. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not that evidence the foolishness of the contention?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; but I think the evidence ought to be presented to the people. My vote was the same as yours, and if this deliberate misrepresentation goes unchallenged every man here is slandered.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did the gentleman ever know a tax shirker who did not find fault with those who paid taxes?

Mr. LITTLE. I have noticed that. The traveler I corrected had a kinsman who was worried over his brother's big income tax under this law——

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Did I understand that the gentleman is going to put into the RECORD a ruling by the collector of internal revenue?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; Mr. Roper.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will say that that ruling was put in the RECORD two or three months ago. It is now a matter of public record. If a man in the gentleman's district has been saying that the Members of Congress do not pay a war tax, a supertax, and all other taxes they are simply mistaken.

Mr. LITTLE. That is not quite the word, I think. That is correct, but it should be characterized by a stronger word. Here is a man in our district who wants to go to Congress by inducing people to believe this falsehood, which he circulates by the thousand, and since that statement is made I think it right that the RECORD should again show it, so that there may be no doubt about it. There was a time when some reputable newspapers made the statement, but they were misled. Since Mr. Roper has ruled on it there is nothing for further discussion. No honorable man would make the statement for political purposes.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 1, 1918.

SALARIES OF UNITED STATES SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES HELD TO BE SUBJECT TO EXCESS-PROFITS PROVISIONS OF THE ACT OF OCTOBER 3, 1917.

To collectors of internal revenue and others concerned:

In reply to numerous inquiries, the Bureau of Internal Revenue is of the opinion that it was not the intention of Congress to exempt the salaries of United States Senators and Representatives from the excess-profits tax, and holds that the salaries of Members of Congress are subject to the provisions of Title II of the act of October 3, 1917, and are included in the income to be reported by such Members for the purposes of the excess-profits tax as well as for the purposes of the income and the war-income taxes.

DANIEL C. ROPER, Commissioner.

Another false statement made by men who know better is that some who favored giving the President power to raise troops by draft and by calling volunteers fought conscription. The Military Committee bill gave authority for conscription and to take volunteers. The Kahn amendment cut out the power to call volunteers, and it was not till September, 1917, the first drafted men got to camp. If the committee bill had gone through, we would have enforced conscription and raised 1,000,000 volunteers before the first conscript came in. Those who favored the double system supported the bill as amended, and voted for conscription.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the campaign of villification and abuse which is being made I desire to place in this record for the information of my constituents the facts that I have just presented. In the last 20 years I have been a candidate for political office just twice. He who makes these statements has been a candidate 12 times in the last 12 years. He served his country by running for office 12 times and I by fighting in 11 pitched battles, one behind him. In all my life I have been a candidate for office just four times. Once the rival candidate was this same man. His claim was then that I was a candidate of the breweries and similar charges, which was just as false as this present statement he is making. When I was in the Philippines, risking my life in 11 pitched battles for my country, he was at home going to school at the age of 29. When I went to the Secretary of War and volunteered he was attending a Chautauqua course in oratory, equipping himself for a campaign on the rostrum, arranging, as he said, to lay his jawbone on the altar of his country. I suppose he was dreaming of Samson and his similar feat.

Five weeks before my term of office began and 60 days before the declaration of war he announced his candidacy, taking the position before my term began that I was not entitled to the usual second term. Now he offers as the reasons why he began his fight for the nomination in January, 1917, his claim that Congress voted to exempt itself several months later. He is running for office, as he states in his circular of October 1, 1917, to "realize his ambition," and in that circular he does not say one word about supporting the administration or making the war a success, though it had been going on six months. When he assails Gen. SHERWOOD, a hero of the Civil War, and CLAUDE KITCHIN for voting against this war he attacks Webster, Clay, and Lincoln, who opposed the Mexican War. Mr. Chairman, I am not a candidate for Congress to "realize my ambitions." I merely wish to serve my country, as I did in 1898–99. Do you imagine I went to the Philippines to "realize my ambition"?

Twenty years ago, when I returned from the Philippines with the Twentieth Kansas, the great leaders of the Republican Party offered me a nomination for Congress. All I desired was a home and family and a quiet fireside, and I declined to run. Seven years ago this gentleman, with his $3,000 assessment, wrecked the Republican Party in our district and turned it over to the Democrats, who held the seat till I defeated their champion by 4,000 majority two years ago.

The experience we have all had here in the last 15 months has given us an equipment for the future during this conflict such that no man has a right to shirk his responsibility. The year and a half I had in the American Army, largely on the firing line, has enabled me, in a humble way, to be of use to my country on this floor. During this contest I have voted for every measure, without exception, to uphold the administration and make the Army successful and bring victory to our flag, and nobody but a copperhead would refuse to volunteer, stay at home, and yet malign those who have served their country here as well as on the field of battle. If I had never been to war, if I were 10 years younger than some soldier of the Republic in this Congress, I would move to make that soldier's nomination and election unanimous at such a juncture, and I would be ashamed to contest with him the right to serve under the flag under which he fought beneath the Southern Cross.

Of course, the fact that I voted for volunteers rankles in the heart of this gentleman, but not half as much as the fact that I volunteered. I know he is constitutionally opposed to volunteers because he did not volunteer in 1898, though a bachelor and "ambitious." So was Cæsar, but he was willing to take a chance where men died for glory and honor and patriotism. That orator is not worrying so much as to whether I voted for conscription of men, as I did. The real fact is that there would not be much of a campaign against me if I had not gone out on the floor of this House and made a fight for the conscription of wealth, for taxing into the Treasury all incomes above $100,000, and that is where the campaign fund against me comes from.

CURTIS, THOMPSON, ANTHONY, LITTLE, CAMPBELL of Kansas, DOOLITTLE, HELVERING, CONNELLY of Kansas, SHOUSE, and AYRES all voted just alike on the income tax, and when they assail one of them they assail them all on that point. And every honest man who has examined the RECORD knows that not one of them voted to exempt himself. When we see that the principal claim advanced against me is so willfully false, you can judge how the rest must run, and what consideration such rivalry is entitled to among honest men and women who have small regard for back-wounding calumny. Mr. Chairman, I decline to be drawn into a campaign of slander and abuse and I do not care to win if I must resort to such methods. That is something I leave to those who have pursued it all their lives and know no other. Men who circulate such malicious misrepresentations of the record of the Congress of the United States in order to "realize their ambitions" are not proper persons to sit in a body of which Webster, Clay, Calhoun, John Quincy Adams, and Abraham Lincoln were Members.

As for me, I stand on my record here. No honest man can point to a vote I cast since war began which he would change if he wished the war to be a success. As for a liar, he can say anything, and when he is uncovered thereafter he will be known. As Othello said, "I have done the State some service, and they know it." A man's first term is naturally devoted to acquiring the experience that enables him to be very useful here. Those districts which keep their Members here are the most powerful. Yet there are things I have accomplished here of which many of my constituents know personally and individually. The 6-foot channel of the Missouri River will start from Kansas City, Kans., hereafter, on my motion. Mr. FERRIS, chairman of the Democratic national congressional committee, said on this floor January 23, 1918, that if the bill brought in by the Irrigation Committee passed, the taxpayers would lose $70,000,000 and the revolving fund for future irrigators would disappear. On the motion of LITTLE of Kansas, that bill was killed and $70,000,000 saved for the taxpayers. I was a member of the Committee on Woman Suffrage which put through this House the suffrage amendment and opened a new era to the women of the Nation, as my dear mother instructed me a generation ago. On this floor I presented the claims of the first Christian nation, the Armenians, for the consideration of the greatest Christian Republic, and on this floor I made the first speech ever made in Congress for the conscription of wealth by the assessment of a tax of all above $100,000 incomes during this war.

The night war was declared I introduced the first war measure, and the National Anti-Saloon League, by its official organ, the American Issue, said that that bill and my fight for it established the present temperance zone about the camps and gave us a sober Army. Imagine, gentlemen, a bachelor, 10 years younger than I, wholly without dependents, old enough to go to the other war and young enough to go to this, who at 29 went to school while I went to war, and who was studying elocution at Chautauqua when I was here tendering my services for this war! Which one would be the more inclined or the better prepared to look after the interests of your boy yonder on the firing line for the liberty of the world? Do you think that a man who told the people two years ago that I was the candidate of the breweries, do you think that a man who tells the people now, in an edition of thousands of papers, that CURTIS, THOMPSON, ANTHONY, CAMPBELL, DOOLITTLE, HELVERING, CONNELLY, SHOUSE, AYRES, and LITTLE voted to exempt themselves from taxation, to, as he said October 1, 1917, "realize his ambition," would in a year and a half make a better record or prove to be a more honorable and patriotic man?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, biginning on line 22, strike out all of section 32.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he can advise me what will be the cost of taking this census in each of these years specified in this section, namely, 1921, 1923, 1925, 1927. Has the gentleman any information as to what the cost will be each of these years?

Mr. HELM. The statement made before the committee was to the effect that the cost of taking the census of manufactures, mines, and quarries would be about $300,000.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, no; if you look at the hearings you will find that the census for manufactures will cost $1,945,000, and the Director of Census stated that these censuses that are to be taken in 1921, 1923, and 1925 will not cost quite so much as $1,945,000, because they will not be so comprehensive; but he does not state exactly what they will cost.

Mr. WALSH. In view of that fact I do not think we ought to provide at this particular time for taking census of manufactures in the future after 1920.

Mr. HELM. If the gentleman will permit, this period is covered by the decennial census period, which comprises three years, beginning July 1, 1919, and ending June 20, 1922.

Mr. WALSH. You have one census in here of 1921.

Mr. HELM. That is embraced in the decennial census period. The census of 1927 is a part of the quinquennial census; that is, the census taken every five years. The census of manufactures taken every five years is distinguished from the decennial census. That is a provision of law that has been in force for a number of years. The census of manufactures is taken every 5 years, and the census of population is taken every 10 years. Manufactures are taken every five years under existing law that has been in force for a long period of time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, if your write this section into the law, you are going to take a manufacturing census in 1920. Before statistics are published or made available you start in in 1921 and take another manufacturing census, and when the statistics of the 1920 census will have been published, in 1923, to start in and take another census.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. At what time can the public expect the 1920 census to be published?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio, as I understand from statements which have been made here by members of the committee, it is hoped that this information will be available within three years after it has been collected, but of course we all know that the complete information which will be collected beginning January 1, 1920, will not be available within three years.

The point that I am making as a reason why we should not authorize these manufacturing censuses every two years at this particular time is that before they begin even the 1920 census, we may think it wise to authorize a manufacturing census to be taken every year or every six months, and if it is taken under this schedule, they will take a census in 1920 and before they have even completed collecting the statistics upon it, they will start in to take another one in 1921, and before the statistics of the 1921 census have become available, in 1923 they are authorized to start in to take another manufacturing census.

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman will permit, it has been the practice in taking these complete censuses for the public to be compelled to wait for four or five years after it is taken for the information to be made available.

Mr. WALSH. We have been obliged to wait, so that particularly in these times, if we were compelled to wait a like period, statistics collected three years previously would be practically worthless. The point I make is that it would be better to defer this and possibly we might find it necessary to take a census every six months, at least a census to collect sufficient information so that it would be available for that current year, and it would be wiser, in my opinion, to defer this manufacturing census to be taken every two years, particularly when we are going to start in to take a census in 1920 that is not expected to be available until 1923. Then in 1921 we start in to take another, and in 1923 another, and in 1925 another, and in 1927 another, and then for every tenth year thereafter. I submit to the chairman of the committee it might be wise to defer authorizing the various manufacturing censuses to be taken, and to wait until the year 1920 when Congress will be in session, or in the session of the next Congress, when we might provide for a distinct correction of manufacturing statistics which might require, or at least might become available every six months. For that reason I trust that the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HELM. I find that on referring to the hearings on page 164 that I was incorrect in my statement made in answer to the gentleman's inquiry a few moment's ago, that the cost of taking this census would be about $300,000. The chairman asked Mr. Rogers the following question:

What was it you stated would be the cost of taking the census of manufactures?

To which Mr. Rogers replied:

One million four hundred and ninety-five thousand dollars. The census provided for in section 32, however, is a restricted census and would not cost that much.

I want to correct that statement.

Mr. WALSH. The census provided for when; in 1921?

Mr. HELM. Yes; the censuses of 1921, 1923, 1925, and 1927; a biennial census instead of a census every five years.

Mr. WALSH. It is going to cost $1,945,000 for the 1920 census.

Mr. HELM. No. The director says it will not cost that sum of money because it is a restricted census; that is, the cost of taking a manufacturing census——

Mr. WALSH. In 1920?

Mr. HELM. Yes; if taken separately would be that much, if not taken in connection with the census of population and agriculture.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, of course the census of 1920 will have to be taken separately, and each of these other biennial censuses would have to be taken separately, except, possibly, the census of 1925, when we take an agricultural and live-stock census; and, possibly, they would find a lot of agriculture and live stock around these manufacturing establishments, so that the same force may collect both sets of statistics. It will be a separate census even in that case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] for a moment. I have not been able to follow this bill very carefully, but I want to ask if this section 32 provides for a separate manufacturing census, with all of the machinery incident thereto, for 1921, 1923, 1925, and 1927.

Mr. HELM. It is my understanding that while this is to make the manufacturing census a biennial census, it is covered in the decennial census period. I understand that it is to progress with the taking of the regular decennial census period, in so far as the dates coincide with the decennial census, and will be taken by the force performing the work for the decennial census.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The law heretofore has provided for a census of manufactures once in five years?

Mr. HELM. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now you propose to take that census every two years?

Mr. HELM. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman who has asked for this biennial census? It looks like a lot of machinery——

Mr. HELM. The gentleman will understand this recommendation was made by a body of men, a committee of men, who had had considerable experience, long time experience in connection with the bureau and who are familiar with the business affairs generally of the country and the methods the office has of making them useful——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman name some of them?

Mr. HELM (continuing). And upon the recommendation of those gentlemen connected with the Census Bureau this section was inserted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did it arise from gentlemen wholly within the bureau or from gentlemen outside the bureau?

Mr. HELM. I take it that the officials in the bureau undertook to perform this work in such a manner that it would be serviceable to the public generally and, in my opinion, the business interests of the country. Of course, that is not done by the officials for the benefit of the bureau; it is for the benefit of the people and the commercial world.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will it be of benefit to the public to have these census takers go around to the factories every two years? You are compelling these people to examine their books and make returns every two years for census purposes. Does it not build up another big machine, with agents, inspectors, census takers, who, instead of being employed once in 5 or 10 years, will now be employed every 2 years to harass and annoy the business men all over the United States?

Mr. HELM. I think the gentleman is mistaken in his conclusion there. I think this work is to be done by what may be termed the office force. Now, you understand the men who take the population, if the gentleman will give me his attention just a moment, the men who take the census of manufactures are not the enumerators who go around and take the census of population or the census of agriculture, but they are the office force and detail special agents, many of whom are constantly occupied in the bureau. I do not think it is contemplated, do not think it will require a large increase of the office force such as the gentleman evidently has in mind. Certainly there is no intention to build up a political machine.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am quite sure that if it takes a large office force to collect these statistics once every five years it is going to take a larger office force to take them once every two years.

Mr. HELM. Let me read some of the testimony——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It looks to me like the building up of a permanent institution, with increased machinery, for the sole purpose of keeping business men employed making Government returns.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am going to say a word or two about this, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. LARSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LARSEN. I want to inform the gentleman I have had a conversation with the Director of the Census in reference to this section. He advises me that it is the purpose of the department to take this census the first time in the regular way, which he says should not cost exceeding $100,000, and that he believes that after that it will be possible to take it through mail facilities, and that will simply require the various manufacturing enterprises over the country, upon request, to send in the information desired; that it will include a report from something like 75 different kinds and characters of manufactured products, and it would not increase the force.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the thought underlying this movement to secure information for the Revenue Service?

Mr. LARSEN. No, it is not; it is purely and simply intended for the purpose of getting information which will be helpful to the various manufacturing industries throughout the country and to the people who desire information relating to manufactured products.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What manufacturing industries have asked for this? Have they ever been consulted about it? What manufacturing interests have sought to have this decennial census of their particular business?

Mr. LARSEN. Well, I do not understand it is a question of whether they want it, but I understand it is a question of whether the public needs it, and if the public interests of this country demand it it ought to be given, regardless of the fact whether the manufacturing interests really want it or not; but so far as I know, I may say to the gentleman, there is no objection being made by any manufacturing establishment at all, and, as I understand, it will have their cooperation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is there any manufacturing interest in the United States now which desires to have imposed upon it a decennial census? What chance has there been for them to be heard upon the subject?

Mr. LARSEN. I take it for granted a number of manufacturing enterprises throughout the country have been furnished with copies of this bill by some Member of Congress or by different enterprises.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I represent a very large manufacturing district and I have not heard from a single manufacturer about this bill.

Mr. LARSEN. That indicates their entire satisfaction.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; they did not know about it. I want to say in the time I have left that this bill came along rather unexpectedly to a large number of the Members of this House. It might just as well have laid over until after the November election.

It is not a war measure. It has no relation to any urgency due to the war, but is due to the fact that the majority now in control wants to put this bill through so that it can cinch additional officeholders before the November election.

Mr. LARSEN. The gentleman recognizes the constitutional requirement, does he not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not yield to the gentleman. I admire and respect him, and recognize in him an able defender of the committee, but I believe down in the depths of his heart he will agree, and the gentleman from Kentucky will agree, that we could just as well have brought this census bill in with its great horde of appointees, following the November election, as readily as before the election. That would not have shocked the Constitution.

Mr. LARSEN. That is not the information of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We make appropriations for the Department of Agriculture to take all the censuses it needs. We give appropriations every year for taking cotton censuses; we do all that is required in that respect; we do it for the war boards. But the purpose of this bill is simply to enable the party that is in power to get it through before election rolls around, so that assurance may be given to a large proportion of the few "deserving Democrats" who are left in the country without positions, that they may be able to obtain them before the November election.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. You are proposing by this section a charge upon the manufacturers of this country that they would resent if they had fair notice of the burden it imposed.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. To the inquiry of my friend from Pennsylvania as to the cost and the amount of work required, the answer came that they did not propose to take an exhaustive census, but only the census of the important manufactures.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It seems to be a special census.

Mr. FESS. If that be true, what value will the facts be to the country if they are not exhaustive and do not satisfy the inquiry as to what these manufactures are?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was trying to get that information from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] and from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN], but up to date they have not informed me upon that very question. The gentleman from Georgia has indicated that there was a great public demand for this census.

Mr. HELM. In that connection, will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says the public wants it. I respectfully challenge that statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN]. I have not heard a single demand from anybody in my section for this particular census.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes in order to answer these questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania answer a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. I wanted to ask a simple question, namely, whether the proposed manufacturers' census will be sufficiently comprehensive to ascertain how many lines of industry have been suspended and put out of business entirely on account of the war? The census would not be worth much unless it disclosed that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] have put two very pertinent questions, and they ought to be answered. The gentleman from Ohio states what seems to be confirmed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN], in defense of the bill—that this manufacturing census is to be only with regard to certain manufacturing industries.

If that is the fact, it is to be a special census. Certain industries are to be picked out and annoyed and harassed by a requirement to make biennial reports. The gentleman from Georgia indicates there is a great public demand for these reports. Of what value will they be if they are not general, but pertinent only to one or two industries? Now, the distinguished gentleman from Georgia and the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky both know, because they are on the Census Committee, that every line of manufacture is subject to scrutiny and investigation to-day as it never was before.

Mr. LARSEN. I am sure the gentleman does not want to misrepresent the committee. I stated to the gentleman I was informed it would not be less than 65 industries. The gentleman says one or two.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. LARSEN. Different characters of industries.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let it be 65. Well and good. It is still special. Why not all? Our laws ought to be uniform and our procedure against the industries or in favor of them should be general. There should be no exceptions; there should be no special legislation.

But what I want to say to the two gentlemen—the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Georgia—is this, that the various war-industry boards in this country are now taking a very effective census, at the expense of the people of the country, of all our manufactures, and are requiring all the special information that it is necessary for anybody to have now in respect to those industries.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And they are doing it under such pressure that it is impossible for any of them to resist giving the information.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman has stated that he has not been in the Chamber and has not heard the discussion on this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have been busy with the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. HELM. I understand what a busy man the gentleman is and realize that there are few, if any, more efficient Members than the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for that compliment, which is wholly unexpected and entirely undeserved.

Mr. HELM. But in the discussion of this bill——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield until we get order on the Republican side?

Mr. HELM. I think that is impossible.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is a very noisy minority to-day. Generally the noise is on the majority side, but to-day it is on the Republican side. [After a pause.] Now, you see we have order at once. It is hard to keep order in a Democratic House. The gentleman will understand that.

Mr. HELM. Most of the activities, if not all, that the gentleman has referred to in the way of taking a census of the industries of the country are provided for in what is known as the Lever agricultural bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; nearly everything was covered in that—appropriations and all—as the gentleman will admit.

Mr. HELM. Yes. All the appropriations provided in that bill expire June 30, 1919, and none of the work to be done under this bill begins until July 1, 1919, so that there is no overlapping and no duplication whatever of the activities.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, why on earth do you propose to have a census taken every two years when you can not make the returns public for three years?

Mr. HELM. There is where the gentleman has been led into another error by reason of his inability, on account of his more pressing business, to be present in the Chamber. The point I urge upon the gentleman was more aptly expressed by Mr. Hartley, who was a member of the commission that drafted this bill. In answer to a question he said:

I would like to say that the Fuel Administration, the War Trade Board, the Tariff Commission, and the Internal-Revenue Bureau make daily use of the basic census facts. There is not a day passes that the Division of Manufactures is not called upon to supply basic facts, no matter what industry they are engaged in, because they get various returns, and they do not know what they tie to; they come to us and ask for special tabulations, and we make them, and then they know what to tie to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Who is this?

Mr. HELM. This is Mr. Hartley, the Chief of the Division of Manufactures in the Census Bureau.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He is an employee of the Census Bureau?

Mr. HELM. Yes; he is Chief of the Division of Manufactures in the Census Bureau.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman state what part of the public, to which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN] referred, requested this special manufactures census?

Mr. LARSEN. I did not say they specially requested it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman said the public wanted this information.

Mr. LARSEN. Oh, they do want a lot of things. I have wanted a lot of things myself in my life, and could not get them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman said this was in response to a public demand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will not the gentleman give me some more time?

Mr. HELM. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HELM. To further answer some of the misunderstandings that I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania has, the Director of the Census stated, to illustrate what I mean in explanation of this very section:

There is in existence a volume giving reports for 73 principal industries of this country out of a total of 270,000 manufacturing establishments. They cover the things that enter most largely into our industrial and commercial life. The statistics for these industries are being called for almost every day.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. By the war boards?

Mr. HELM. By the different governmental instrumentalities in connection with the management of the war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose that the census is taken in 1921, which is the one provided for here, how long will it be before the public will have the result of that census?

Mr. HELM. The gentleman has again been unfortunate in not having been able to be present in the Chamber during the discussion of this bill. As soon as the statistics are gathered and sent to the bureau a pamphlet or summary is issued and distributed over the country, to the newspapers, and the public is advised of the conditions existing in the manufacturing industries and in the commercial world.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Take the census of 1921. When will we have the returns of that? In 1922 or 1923? The gentleman says I have not followed the discussion. What does the gentleman say now?

Mr. HELM. If the census is taken in the early part of 1921 in my opinion the public will be advised of it in less than nine months, possibly six months.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman thinks if the census of 1921 is started by——

Mr. HELM. If it is started in 1921. Let me clear up the gentleman's confused idea about that. The complete work of the census consists of these bound volumes that the gentleman has seen, and in his activities as a very active and alert Congressman I know he has had occasion to call on the Census Bureau for data——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I frequently do——

Mr. HELM. For the writing of tariff bills and matters of that kind.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not finding fault with the Census Bureau. It is a valuable adjunct to the Government. There is no question about that. But the gentleman will not tell me when we are going to get the returns from this first biennial census of manufactures taken in 1921. I suspect he thinks we will get it in 1922.

The gentleman says, and the testimony indicates, that the war boards are seeking this information. The war boards have all this information in hand, because they have absolute control over all the industries. Now, then, what value for war purposes will this census of 1921 be in the year 1922 or 1923 when it comes along? We are told that this is a war proposition. I fear it means that those manufacturers who are doing a war business will be halted by those census inquiries at a time when they are expected to use all speed to win the war. They are to be told to stop in order to make new returns every year, or every other year, when the results can not be known for one or two years following.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HELM. A representative of the Food Administration, Mr. Pearl, was before the Census Committee, and he stated that the censuses taken in 1910 and 1915 were found almost indispensable to the uses and services of that board, so that——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I venture to say that Mr. Hoover, having given millions of dollars to ascertain——

Mr. HELM. The information taken six months ago ought to be of service to this war board.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Hoover, having received millions and millions of dollars for the purpose of employing thousands and thousands of men—more than 5,000 are now in his service and that of the Fuel Administration—is better posted to-day upon the actual business statistics of this country than is the Director of the Census, because he has practical control over every food producer and food consumer. The Director of the Census has no such authority as that. Mr. Hoover and Mr. Garfield already have thousands upon thousands of employees engaged in this kind of work, and I fear that you are now proposing to duplicate it.

Mr. ASWELL and Mr. ROBBINS rose.

Mr. ROBBINS. I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana, a member of the committee, desire recognition?

Mr. ASWELL. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL], a member of the committee, and then he will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS].

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say only a word. After the first biennial census of manufactures is taken it will require no additional force in the Bureau of the Census, and will cost practically not a dollar after the first is taken. Why the Director of the Census should not be directed to take the next biennial census of manufactures when it will cost little extra I can not understand.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASWELL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Upon what basis does the gentleman make the statement that the taking of the census of manufactures once every two years instead of once every five years will entail no additional cost upon the bureau?

Mr. ASWELL. Simply because after the first biennial census is taken the information, being easily accessible, will be gathered by correspondence largely, and will require no great tax upon the manufacturers to furnish the information. It saves money and at the same time brings to the country the information that everybody ought to have.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman is entirely in error; and if the House will give me an opportunity I will show beyond peradventure of contradiction that the gentleman's statement is entirely erroneous.

Mr. ASWELL. I base my statement upon the statement of the Director of the Census made this morning and on statements he has made time after time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman kindly indicate in the record of the hearings where any such statement has been made by the director?

Mr. ASWELL. I have not the record before me.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will furnish the gentleman with a copy of the record.

Mr. ASWELL. I make this statement upon the statement of Mr. Rogers this morning. It seems to me somewhat unreasonable to argue in favor of striking out this section when the country urgently demands this information. The war certainly will not continue many, many years, and when the war is over gradually, step by step, we will have a continuous record of the manufacturing industries of the country. I hope the gentleman will not press that point.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASWELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is the 1st of July, 1918, and we have been at war with Germany for 15 months. Six months of this year are to elapse, and the whole of 1919 is to elapse, before the first of these biennial censuses is arranged for. It will be 1921, fully two years from this time, before the first biennial manufacturing census herein proposed will be inaugurated. The returns from that census can not possibly be available for the public, which the gentleman says is in need of this information, until well on into the year 1922.

Mr. ASWELL. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let us say that it will be ready in three months after the census is taken. I will give the gentleman the benefit of a very close margin. Of what use will that information be for war purposes?

Mr. ASWELL. I made no claim especially for war purposes. There is a necessity for it all the time, in war or in peace.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understood the gentleman to say that the public was demanding this, that we were at war, and that it was important that this legislation should pass.

Mr. ASWELL. It is important now, and will be more important as the years pass on.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is a very active member of the committee. He says there will be no additional expense by reason of this additional census. May I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact——

Mr. ASWELL. I said after the first one was taken.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the Government will have to print a large number of blanks, and that it will have to keep employed a large number of people?

Mr. ASWELL. Not another man more than there are now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That it will have to send out a great deal of mail matter to all sections of the country, which, of course, is franked, but which the Government has to pay for? Is it not a fact that manufacturing establishments and business men all over the United States, in every section of it, will be required to make two or three more returns to the Census Bureau than they now have to make?

Mr. ASWELL. Yes; and they would be glad to do it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I question whether that is a fact.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair promised to recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS].

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I should like to see if we can not come to some agreement as to the limitation of debate on this section.

Mr. WALSH. How would an hour on each side do?

Mr. HELM. I am satisfied the gentleman from Massachusetts can talk 10 hours, as far as that is concerned; but there are some other matters here which require attention to-day.

Mr. WALSH. I have spoken on the amendment once, so that I would not be able to press my views upon the committee again unless I got unanimous consent.

Mr. HELM. I do not see anybody else besides the gentleman from Boston who wants to take time.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe this is the last section that will provoke a debate of any length.

Mr. HELM. How much time does the gentleman from Wisconsin want?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not to exceed 10 minutes, and perhaps not more than 7.

Mr. ROBBINS. I should like 10 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I should like five minutes.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, how will that time be distributed?

Mr. HELM. I want 10 minutes time, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. NICHOLS] can control the remainder.

Mr. BLACK. Unless I can have the assurance of five minutes I shall object.

Mr. ASWELL. We can take care of the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman make it 35 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. How is the time to be divided?

Mr. HELM. Twenty-five minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan and ten minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Will that take care of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BLACK. I so understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 35 minutes, of which time the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. NICHOLS] shall control 25 minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11984 and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MCLEMORE, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absense from June 24 to June 29, inclusive, on account of illness.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12281, the Army appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12281, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. MCKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Reserving the right to object, this is a proposition to send the military bill to conference?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. MCKENZIE. And disagree to all the Senate amendments?

Mr. DENT. Yes; and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I have no objection to disagreeing to all the Senate amendments and sending the bill to conference, but I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, in view of the fact that there are so many very important and far-reaching legislative amendments that have been added to the bill since it passed the House, whether or not, in view of the importance of many of these amendments, such as the Slovak Legion, the creation of a number of regiments in certain States to be used as independent organizations, the creation of a new bureau to look after social hygiene of the country, lieutenant general for the Judge Advocate General, and the creation of a great number of major generals in the Medical Corps—I ask the gentleman if it is not his judgment that we should on these very important matters, which have not had the judgment of our committee and upon which the House has no information, if it will not be the purpose of the conferees to bring back some of the more important matters for the House to vote upon?

Mr. DENT. I will state to my colleague on the committee that I would not like to make any absolute promise as to what the conferees will do, but I think my colleague knows me well enough, from association on the committee, that where new legislative propositions are brought in it is my policy not to take the responsibility unless I can in some way, at least, get the sense of the House. I would not like to make any absolute promise as to what will or what will not be brought back. I will state, however, that I agree with the gentleman's proposition that these legislative matters ought not to be on this appropriation bill and that we ought to raise an American Army. [Applause.]

Mr. MCKENZIE. I realize that we are all anxious to get this bill completed and to have a complete agreement by the conferees. I shall interpose no objection at this time preventing that, but I do say very frankly, Mr. Speaker, that there are propositions injected into this bill by the Senate that I feel, regardless of my desire for a recess, that before I would vote for a conference report containing them I would stay here and fight as long as I could. But I have confidence that the chairman of the committee will bring them back and give an opportunity to express ourselves on it.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Illinois, as well as the chairman of the committee, realizes that these are extraordinary times and that it is important for the success of our forces that some provisions pertaining to the Army should be enacted into law at once, including the provision in relation to the Medical Corps.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Alabama and his committee given consideration to the plan to take this bill to his committee before sending it to conference?

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I suggested myself to Gen. Crowder and to Senator CHAMBERLAIN, prior to the time that the Senate committee reported on the appropriation bill, that there were certain matters of legislation which the War Department was anxious should be enacted into law, and that both committees had practically agreed on, and that it would be all right if the Senate would put those legislative features on the appropriation bill. In response to that suggestion the chairman of the Senate Military Committee invited the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and myself to sit with him and the ranking minority member of the Senate Military Committee and Gen. Crowder and certain officers of his force. We went over the legislation that Gen. Crowder suggested and which the War Department was insisting upon. We agreed substantially upon the legislation that should go in the bill. I then called the House Military Committee in session and narrated what had been done and they substantially approved. After that there were put in the bill legislative matters that we were not advised about at all; and, of course, I have had no opportunity to confer with the Military Committee about them. For instance, in the Senate on the floor 22 amendments of a legislative nature were added to the bill. The bill has just come over. I tried to get a print on Sunday but was unable to do so. I have had no chance to confer with the Military Committee on the new legislative features that have been put on the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, there are some matters here that would seem were not of such an urgent nature that they should be put on the appropriation bill.

Mr. DENT. I agree with the gentleman that there are some matters that ought not to be put on the bill.

Mr. WALSH. I think the House ought to have some opportunity for discussion of the new legislative features, because we can not assume that they are in perfect form simply because they are put on by the Senate. I think that we ought to have a chance to vote on some of these Senate amendments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, if objection is made to this motion, does it mean that the bill will go back to the Committee on Military Affairs?

The SPEAKER. The practice is, if the chairman asks that the bill lie on the table it will be allowed to do so; but this is an exigency and the Chair would be disposed to refer it to the Military Affairs Committee at once unless there was some good reason to have it lie on the table.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, may I have one minute?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, my inclination is to object and send this report back to the Military Affairs Committee for further consideration. We should not, in my judgment, be forced to accept amendments involving important principles in this way. Stories come up through the camps, both here and abroad, that discontent in the ranks follows the tendency of men of high position in the Army to inject their personal affairs into these appropriation bills. Matters affecting rank and individual salaries should not halt these great measures nor bring disappointment to the boys in the trenches. We all want victory to perch upon our banners as quickly as possible. We do not help matters by stopping to contend over the rights or privileges of certain generals. For one I am tired of hearing complaints that come up from the ranks through members of soldiers' families with respect to the effect of the quibbling of men in Washington. I do not believe we are improving the morale of our boys in France or in the Army camps in the United States by stopping legislation until the personal interests of certain men are promoted. I shall not object to the report going back to conference, but——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; if I have the time.

Mr. CANNON. Did my friend get information from the boys in the trenches by wireless?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; but I have had it in various ways sufficient to satisfy me that some of the boys "over there," as well as some of them here, are very much discontented. They have hard drills, a hard life, and they are anxious to have the thing over. They should not be held up by these quarrels over grades in Washington.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say that I understand that the Senate has added to the Army appropriation bill, an amendment making Gen. Crowder a lieutenant general. It was but a few days ago that this body expressed itself in the most emphatic fashion in the case of Gen. Barnett, in opposition to this policy of making lieutenant generals out of bureau heads in Washington. The House should be advised whether an opportunity will be given it to vote on this amendment, otherwise a motion ought to be made to instruct our conferees not to agree to this item. Of course if this matter is returned to the House for consideration in advance of final action by the conferees, that will be entirely satisfactory to everyone who is opposed to this amendment.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, to-day is the beginning of the new fiscal year. The amounts carried in this bill are the largest that have ever been carried in any appropriation bill in any legislative body. It is essential that the conferees be appointed as speedily as possible in order that the War Department may know at least what they can depend upon in the way of money appropriations. The legislative features that have been added to the bill by the Senate can be taken up at some length and can be disposed of in regular order. But I suggest that the conferees who have been appointed by the Speaker upon military matters in the past generally have given ample opportunity to the House to express its view upon such legislative features as may have been inserted in the bills by the Senate. The conferees should not, in my opinion, be instructed before they go into conference the first time. There is no disposition, so far as I know, on the part of any conferee of the House to preclude ample, full, free, and fair discussion on every one of the proposed legislative features. I sincerely hope that the request of the chairman of the committee will be agreed to and that the bill may go to conference at once.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee regarding those 22 amendments about which he spoke having been adopted in the Senate. As I am informed and understand, those amendments were not even considered and reported by the committee of the Senate.

Mr. DENT. I think there were seven of them that were committee amendments, but the others were put on from the floor.

Mr. TOWNER. I desire to make this suggestion to the gentleman: I hope this bill will go to conference, and I hope the conferees will take all the time necessary to consider all of these amendments. The Senate having placed upon the House the responsibility of acting upon these new propositions, the country should understand that the House will not be driven, because of the consideration of time, from a full consideration of the amendments. The country will not justify us, in my judgment, if we do not fully consider before we pass upon all of these amendments that have been submitted by the Senate, no matter how much time it may take.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Is it not true that a number of the amendments offered from the floor of the Senate were included in legislation that had previously passed the Senate and is now pending before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House?

Mr. DENT. That is true as to committee amendments, but only 7 of the 22 were committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Chair announced the following conferees: Mr. DENT, Mr. FIELDS, and Mr. KAHN.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

The Clerk proceeded to read the message.

Mr. STAFFORD (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The Clerk will read the veto message of the President.

VETO MESSAGE, LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL (H. DOC. NO. 1207).

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

Though I realize very keenly the inconvenience to the Government of returning without my signature H. R. 10358, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, I feel constrained to do so because of the provision contained in the last paragraph of the bill, which increases the hours of work for the employees of the Government within the District of Columbia from seven to eight hours per day.

At the outset of the war I felt it my duty to urge all employers in the United States to make a special effort to see to it that the conditions of labor were in no respect altered unfavorably to the laborer. It has been evident from the first how directly the strain of this war is to bear upon those who do the labor which underlies the whole process of mobilizing the Nation, and it seemed to me at the outset, as it seems to me now, that it is of the highest importance that the advantages which had been accorded labor before the war began should not be subtracted from or abated.

Having taken this position in an earnest appeal to other employers, I do not feel justified in assenting to a measure in which the United States as an employer changes the conditions of the labor of its own employees unfavorably to them, and I feel the freer to take this position because I have not learned from any quarter that the employees of the Government in the District have been slack in their labor or have demurred from doing any of the necessary additional tasks which the time and the exigency require. On the contrary, I have learned that they have cheerfully done additional labor and have not needed the compulsion of law.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 1 July, 1918.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a motion that the House proceed to reconsider the measure mentioned in the message.

The SPEAKER. It does not require a motion. It is the business of the Chair to put the question without any motion about it. The other day the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] made a motion, and inasmuch as he made it the Chair put it; it amounted to the same thing exactly. The question before the House is, Will the House on reconsideration pass the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the objection of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 50, nays 248, answered "present" 3, not voting 129, as follows:

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 50, the nays 248, answering "present" 3. Two-thirds of the House having failed to vote in the affirmative, the House declines to pass the bill, the President's objection to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the veto message of the President be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the veto message of the President be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

WATER-POWER LEGISLATION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill known as the water-power bill be taken up for consideration by the House, subject to all privileged bills, resolutions, or other matters.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, at this time I feel compelled to object to that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

GENERAL DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I present for printing under the rule the general deficiency bill, and I wish to serve notice on the House that later in the day I shall ask unanimous consent to take up the bill, without regard to its being printed under the rule. A copy of the bill and the report (No. 727) will be available for the benefit of the Members, if not available now.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12600) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill is ordered printed under the rule.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill just reported.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SISSON, from the Committee on Appropriations, called up the conference report on bill H. R. 11692, the District appropriation bill, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 61, and 83 to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

T. U. SISSON,
JAS. MCANDREWS,
C. R. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN WALTER SMITH,
JOE T. ROBINSON,
J. H. GALLINGER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I will state that the conferees are still at disagreement on amendments Nos. 1, 61, and 83, the three amendments that were in disagreement before. The first amendment was the amendment involving the half and half and the other was the Keller amendment, involving the reversal by Congress of the judgment of the court in condemnation preceedings on land, and the other amendment involves the principle of the half-and-half law.

Now, I ask unanimous consent that the conference report be agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the gentleman since this matter was last under consideration in the House whether the conferees have had any protracted conference on the amendments that are in disagreement?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I will state that the conferees on the part of the House met with the conferees on the part of the Senate, and the Senate conferees declined to discuss either of these amendments. I made an effort to discuss the matter with the Senate conferees and endeavored to go into the history of the half and half, the reasons for its adoption at first, which I did at some little length, and then started to discuss with them the report of the joint commission. Neither of the conferees said anything, made no sort of reply, did not in any way controvert any statement that I made about it, and said that the conference was useless. I then stated to the conferees that if they would assign reasons——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. I want to make the point that the gentleman is not permitted to state what took place in the conference.

Mr. SISSON. I am stating that we did not have a conference.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman has stated what took place and what the Senators and the members of the conference said, or what they did not say.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman if he thinks it proper to detail to the House information of the conference?

Mr. SISSON. I think so. If not, I do not know how the House could act understandingly upon this matter. I have absolutely nothing to conceal about it nor do I believe the Senate conferees have.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman does not think this is a question they are not familiar with?

Mr. SISSON. I say that this question has never been discussed in the Senate in debate except once. There has never been a real debate on this matter in the United States Senate.

Mr. GILLETT. That does not mean they are not posted on it.

Mr. SISSON. I have my doubts if they are all posted. I am willing to go back and try to confer with the Senate conferees once more, and if this conference report is agreed to, and I have asked unanimous consent that it be agreed to, I shall follow that up with the request that we further insist on disagreement to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Was not the conference report agreed to the other day?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. But this is another conference, although the items are identical with the items before.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he has brought in a conference report that has already been agreed to by both branches?

Mr. SISSON. We agreed to the conference report before, and in that conference report there was a disagreement on three items. We agreed to the conference report by unanimous consent, and then upon a vote the House sustained the disagreement of the House conferees upon amendments Nos. 1, 61, and 83.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. GILLETT. Is it not true that, by reason of this bill not having been agreed to by the House to-day, officials of the Government throughout the city of Washington are breaking the law? Every employee whom they use——

Mr. SISSON. I do not think they are breaking the law yet.

Mr. GILLETT. Why not?

Mr. SISSON. The law does not consider part of a day; and we are not going to permit them to violate the law, because if we can not get an agreement upon this bill we will bring in a resolution and save them.

Mr. GILLETT. The resolution has got to provide whether it shall be paid by the half-and-half principle or not.

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. GILLETT. The same issue will arise.

Mr. SISSON. That can be dealt with by a resolution. But I am willing to go back to the Senate and make an effort to agree if we can.

Mr. GILLETT. I agree with the gentleman as to that. I think we ought to pass the bill in some way.

Mr. SISSON. One moment. I do not believe that there is a single Member of this House that wants to agree to the Keller amendment; not one.

Mr. GILLETT. Is it not probable, if the House agrees, as we always have done in the past ultimately, to carry on the appropriations in the way they have been accustomed to be carried on, that the Senate would abandon that amendment?

Mr. SISSON. I can not say as to that.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman knows it has been so in the past, if my recollection serves me.

Mr. SISSON. I can not say about that; but I am willing to make another effort to have a conference with the Senate.

I hope that the House will agree to the motion that I have made for our further disagreement to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Has the Senate asked for a conference on the half-and-half principle and now declines to confer on that subject?

Mr. SISSON. This is the first time they have asked for it.

Mr. GILLETT. They did not decline to have a conference.

Mr. SISSON. We sat around the table. I did most of the talking, and I and my colleagues insisted that the Senate conferees give some expression of their views on this subject.

Mr. DYER. The regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is——

Mr. SISSON. One moment; Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SISSON. When this conference report was here before we agreed to the conference report. There were only three items in disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that.

Mr. SISSON. Now, if that conference report has to be agreed to again——

The SPEAKER. It does not have to be agreed to again.

Mr. SISSON. Then I ask unanimous consent that we further insist upon our disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments undisposed of, Nos. 1, 61, and 83, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. SISSON, Mr. MCANDREWS, and Mr. DAVIS.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter defending second-class postal rates.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, who wrote the letter—an official of the Government?

Mr. McCLINTIC. No; a constituent of my district.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for a few moments.

Mr. WALSH. On this same subject?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Then I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I would like to withdraw that point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma withdraws the point of no quorum. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] is recognized.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, if anybody else has anything that he wants to be considered, I will not make the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole just for 10 minutes and then have to rise.

The SPEAKER. Nobody seems to be demanding consideration.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to say to the gentleman that I have a motion that I would like to have considered.

FOURTEENTH AND SUBSEQUENT DECENNIAL CENSUSES.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. HELM. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11984, the census bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11984, the census bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 47.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11984, with Mr. BURNETT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11984, which the Clerk will report by title:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses.

Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan, Mr. ROBBINS, and Mr. WALSH rose.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, there was an agreement limiting discussion to 35 minutes, 10 minutes to be controlled by the chairman of the committee and 25 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. NICHOLS].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not in at that time. What was the agreement?

Mr. HELM. There was an agreement that we would have 35 minutes on section 32.

Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this section 32 provides for an entirely new feature in the census law. There is no such provision in any previous census law. It is new and without precedent. It provides for taking statistics of manufactures in 1921, 1923, 1925, and 1927 as to the industries of the country. This section reads as follows:

SEC. 32. That the Director of the Census be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to collect and publish for the years 1921, 1923, 1925, and 1927, and for every tenth year after each of said years, statistics of the products of manufacturing industries; and the director is hereby authorized to prepare such schedules as in his judgment may be necessary.

In the testimony on page 163 of the hearings before the committee on this bill, with reference to this section Mr. Rogers, Director of the Census, testified, at the bottom of that page, and states as follows:

It would hardly be possible, even if desirable, to make the biennial censuses as comprehensive in character as the census of manufactures now in the bureau taken quinquennially * * * but that it is believed that the proposed bill—

Speaking of this section of the bill—will, if enacted into law, meet in a great measure the need for more up-to-date information in regard to the materials needed for the manufacturing industries of the country.

On the next page he states that it will probably cost $1,945,000, but adds, "that this is a restricted census and would not cost that much." This proposed census is therefore not to be complete and will, of course, be of little or no value. There has been a lot of discussion here as to what good this data would actually be. I am opposed to it because I do not think it would yield any substantial benefit to the country or contribute any fund of accurate knowledge to the statistical information of the country that would be of any value.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBBINS. For a question.

Mr. HELM. Is the gentleman from a manufacturing district?

Mr. ROBBINS. I am; and I am coming to that. This information will not be available until one year after it is taken. The commissioner admits that on page 166 of the hearings. In answer to this question, "When would that work be complete and available to the public?" He said:

If you mean December 31, 1918, you would get them about December, 1919, or the 1st of January, 1920; in other words, one year from the date of the receipt of the schedules in our office.

That information would be of no use a year after it was collected. More than that, we must seriously consider the conditions that confront us now among the industrial institutions of the United States. We have all sorts of commissions collecting information and this would only be a duplication of the data we already have.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBBINS. For a question.

Mr. HELM. If the gentleman will look at page 167, he will see that Mr. Hunt, who is at the head of the manufacturing bureau, says:

What we call the press bulletins will be ready within three months.

Mr. ROBBINS. I was reading from the testimony of the Director of the Census, whom you have been quoting all through this debate as the highest authority. Mr. Rogers, the Director of the Census, says "one year." I will leave the dispute with the gentleman, and I accept the Director of Census rather than an irresponsible clerk. I will take the evidence of the Director of the Census. He is the head of the bureau and must answer for its work, and he testifies to one year.

Now, I want to call the attention of the committee to the number of commissions that we have created by various acts of Congress for collecting statistics from our various industries for various uses right now in active operation. We have the Federal Trade Commission, to which we have appropriated $1,500,000, with 83 expert clerks, and a lot of other employees, who are collecting statistics; and as an evidence of the statistics that they have collected, if you will turn to the bulletin published last Saturday, you will find a report filed with the Senate of the United States, giving facts and figures, data and information, concerning profiteering in the mining industry, in the manufacturing industry, beef industry, lumber, sulphur, copper, steel, petroleum, and in quite a number of other industries.

Therefore it will be a duplication to go through this work again by the experts of the Census Bureau. The Federal Trade Commission already has all this information and we are spending a million and a half dollars annually to collect it through this commission.

Mr. HELM. What has profiteering got to do with statistical information?

Mr. ROBBINS. You could not get evidence of profiteering if you did not know the statistics concerning the industry investigated that showed the actual cost of production. Profits only exist above the cost of production. The profiteer is one who obtains excess profits after deducting cost of production and a fair return.

Then we have the Tariff Commission, to which we have just appropriated $200,000. It is the whole purpose of this commission to ascertain the cost of manufacturing in our industries and recommend a tariff where protection is needed. We have the Interstate Commerce Commission, to which we have appropriated $4,518,000 to collect statistics about the transportation systems, both rail and water, throughout the country. Of course that is not information concerning manufacturing, but it is statistics, and these are obtained by an investigation. Then we follow that up with this Fourteenth Census, which will cost approximately $20,000,000; and by this section 32 we propose to compel these interests and industries to again submit to an investigation not every 10 years but every 2 years. Then we have the Bureau of Markets in the Agricultural Department, for which we have appropriated $1,945,000, that collects all kinds of statistics and issues a yearbook and monthly bulletins and has a multitude of agents traveling about the country nagging and annoying our people for information so they can be busy and hold their Government jobs. In Pennsylvania we have about 5,000 manufacturing corporations.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBBINS. I can not yield; my time is too limited; I mean no disrespect. I wish to impress upon the committee the iniquity of these investigations. This whole system is an outrage. We are investigating so much that legitimate corporations can not transact their business. I was in the office of a large Pittsburgh manufacturing company, one of the largest producers of commodities in Pennsylvania, last spring, and they told me that their whole clerical force was turned over to the work of getting statistics for the bureaus at Washington; that they could not carry on their usual business because of these investigations and the work entailed in getting out reports and data. Now, the director says it will probably cost $1,900,000 to gather the statistics about the manufacturing industries of the country, although he says it may cost less than that, and yet he does not know exactly how much it will cost to investigate them at every turn, investigate them day and night; and each one of these commissions must take a turn at investigating. I have given above a list of appropriations we have made for investigations and stated the various agencies that are duplicating this work, that must run well onto $30,000,000, and we are investigating as if every man engaged in any industry in our country was a scoundrel and had to be investigated and investigated over and over again, first by one commission and then by another.

Up in Pennsylvania we treat our manufacturing industries as if they were the greatest benefactors and most beneficent institutions in our State, and they are. These industries have developed our resources and give employment to millions of our people. They have made Pennsylvania the great Commonwealth that it is, the greatest manufacturing community in the United States, and the second Commonwealth in population and importance in the galaxy of States. We do not require our manufacturing industries to pay taxes. We foster and encourage them, and I object to having them harassed and annoyed by constant investigations. I am opposed to this section of the bill, and hope that the motion to strike out the whole of section 32 will prevail.

This is only a scheme to furnish places for "deserving Democrats." The work proposed is a useless duplication of work already done by several other governmental agencies, and is not only a waste of the taxpayers' money but is utterly and entirely worthless when the information sought is obtained and the work performed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LINTHICUM having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12541) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, and Mr. JONES of Washington as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

FOURTEENTH AND SUBSEQUENT DECENNIAL CENSUSES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I do not often find myself in disagreement with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] on matters of public expenditure, but this section 32 is one that I think will impose upon the country an unprofitable governmental activity and therefore unnecessary expenditure, and in view of that fact I shall vote for the amendment to strike it out.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I would prefer to make a connected statement, and then I will yield to the gentleman. I call the attention of the House at the outset to the fact that section 1 of the bill provides that a census shall be taken in 1920 of population, agriculture, manufactures, and mines and quarries. I am heartily in sympathy with the taking of a full and accurate census on these four different subjects in 1920, and if this bill does not contain every provision that is necessary for a full and complete census of that kind, then I am willing to vote any additional provisions that are needed to accomplish such purpose. I submit that the testimony of the Director of the Census in the hearings which were had on this bill show that the information that will be gathered in the 1920 census will not be fully available to the public until three years after the census begins.

It is fair to state that the information as to population will be available during the first year; but the director himself says that the completed information will not be available to the public until the end of three years. And yet in this section 32 the committee has provided that in 1921 the Census Bureau shall begin over again and take another census of manufactures. I can not see any possible good reason for taking another census of manufactures in 1921 before the information and data obtained in the 1920 census are available for public use. To call it an absurd procedure would, in my mind, be expressing it mildly.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. The gentleman is in error, the director himself has repeatedly said that the information would be available in three months.

Mr. BLACK. I am not in error; I make the statement again, that the Director of the Census says complete information as to this census will not be available——

Mr. ASWELL. Oh, the gentleman is speaking of the bound volumes.

Mr. BLACK. I hope the gentleman understood what I said; the RECORD will show that I said that some of the information would be available the first year, but the complete information would not be available until the end of three years.

Mr. ASWELL. The gentleman means the books will not be published.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman understood what I said, I hope, and I repeat again that the hearings will bear me out in the correctness of my statement. In order to show the House that I have made a correct statement, I quote the following colloquy found on page 169 of the hearings between Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan, a member of the committee, and Hon. Samuel L. Rogers, Director of the Census:

Mr. NICHOLS. When do you begin to take this census.
Mr. ROGERS. January 1, 1920.
Mr. NICHOLS. When will it be completed; that is, completed for the dissemination of the information to the country?
Mr. ROGERS. It will be done within the census period of three years, as provided. Some of the bulletins will be completed within a year.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. HELM. The Department of Agriculture issues an Annual Yearbook which is composed of all the different bulletins issued from time to time by the Agricultural Bureau for publication in the Department of Agriculture. Now, does the gentleman from Texas mean to say that these publications are of no value to the farmer at all until the date of the publication of the Annual Yearbook?

Mr. BLACK. That has absolutely nothing to do with the question we are now discussing, and I do not want to be diverted from the main point at issue, because I only have brief time in which to discuss this amendment.

Mr. HELM. The Farmers' Agricultural Bulletins, the gentleman would say, were of no value until the Annual Yearbook is published.

Mr. BLACK. I have not said that the statistics would not be of value. I said the information as to agriculture, manufactures, mines, and quarries in the 1920 census would not be completed and ready in its complete form, according to the testimony of the Director of the Census, until three years after it was taken, and that, therefore, it would be a foolish procedure to start in again in 1921, as this section 32 requires, and begin another census of manufactures before the data and information gathered by the 1920 census are available for distribution.

That is what I said, and I wish I had language that would still further emphasize it, for the gentleman's consideration. I do not criticize any necessary expenditure. We will have plenty of that kind to tax the utmost resources of this Government before the present war is ended. I do not doubt that the patriotism and loyalty and ability of the American people will be equal to the enormous task of meeting all necessary expenditures, but I submit that we owe it to them, and we owe it to ourselves, as their responsible legislative agents and servants, to keep all these expenditures to as low a figure as possible, consistent with a proper prosecution of all the work and activities of the Federal Government.

Any unnecessary tax is an unjust tax. And it is self-evident that any unnecessary governmental activity imposes an unnecessary expenditure of public money, and just to that extent it imposes unjust taxation.

It appears to me that the census of manufactures to be taken in 1920 and then the one in 1925, under existing law, are all that are necessary, and will be as frequent as the needs require, and therefore I will support the amendment to strike out this section 32 and hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this census bill, sprung at a time when the House is trying to close up the delayed bills carrying appropriations for the fiscal year which began to-day, is like the wicked flea. It hops in and is considered for 10 minutes; then it is laid aside for a conference report. Then it bobs up, is considered for another 10 minutes and is shoved aside by a veto message from the President. Just now the rush-order census bill has the right of way for a few minutes, and the particular paragraph under consideration is section 32, which proposes a special manufacturing census every two years; that is, in 1921, 1923, 1925, 1927, and every 10 years thereafter. Now, why take a regular census of manufacturers in 1920 and then come along with a special one in 1921? The ink would not be dry on the first one before the second one is in the works. I am opposed to this section for the additional reason that I think that the section, if enacted into law, will cause additional unnecessary expenses to the Government. I am confirmed in the conviction that this Congress, instead of continually and everlastingly adding to the expenses of the Government, should go through these bureaus with an ax and cut out every appropriation that is useless, ornamental, or not for the prosecution of the war. We should have started months ago. But we did not start then, and we do not start now. Time and time again—continually, almost—the Republican Members of the minority have appealed to the majority to cut these appropriations for expenses on the side lines—expenses outside of war expenses. But no; nothing doing; the bureaus are in control. Each and every chief is riding his hobby, and money makes the mare go—also the hobby. This proposed special biennial manufacturing census is a case in point. Look at the hearings. The Director of Census says one thing, modestly and carefully, and the chief of the bureau says another. The chiefs want to build up their bureaus. In almost every appropriation bill the bureau chiefs come and stand around the doors of Congress and each chief says if you will only add to the appropriation and build up his bureau it will help to win the war.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. The Director of the Census referred to the completed volume and the chief of the bureau referred to the others.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And that means two additional piles of Government publications, printed in excess quantities, and piled up in the corridors around here, to become in time useless public documents—refuse, trash, waste, and rubbish. If I could have my way I would go through these Government bureaus with a stuffed club and cut out one-half of the Government publications. Right now they are piling up in the city of Washington, largely undelivered, half of them junk, at a time when the Printing Office can not get paper to print necessary publications or even keep up with necessary printing.

And while the mails of the country are at a point of collapse, these bureaus go on sending out thousands of sackfuls of bulletins, special notices, press agents' dope, bureau newspapers, and goodness knows what all, even down to a bulletin with full and complete information as to how to make clabber cheese; and, think of it, we are putting in a zone system in order to cut the amount of second-class mail.

Every country newspaper office is simply flooded with governmental publications and letters. The country editor has not even time to tear off the wrappers or open the envelopes. The great work that he is trying to do to help the Government is made harder by the amount of useless stuff that is sent to him. He helps the Government free of charge and looks out of his window at a gorgeous three-colored, three-sheet poster, the printing and posting of which were paid for by Uncle Sam, and every time he gets a sackful of useless junk he reflects a little on governmental extravagance, and also reflects on that governmental parsimony which denies him even the smallest pay for the use of his columns.

Mr. Chairman, these double census bulletins on manufactures will go double to the country editors and be used to light the fires and line the cuspidors. I will lay a little bet that before this thing has been a law a year there will be a Census Office weekly newspaper. If not, that bureau will be away behind the times. Does anyone suppose that any Census Bureau chief will permit any other bureau chief to outdistance him in bureaucratic publicity, which is all the rage these days? They all do it. There are dozens of governmental weekly newspapers now, ranging all the way from the Alaska Railroad's free Government weekly and the Panama Canal Zone Record on up the line. They all cost money; they all go through the mails free.

But, Mr. Chairman, this special biennial census of manufactures will in itself be an additional and unnecessary expense. In my opinion, it will be entirely useless. But if it is needed, we can order it after we have commenced to pay some of the war bills, or at least we can order it after we have collected in this little matter of $8,000,000,000, for which we are about to write a tax bill. I repeat, that it is high time to begin the trimming out of all these unnecessary expenses. The chairman of the committee, Mr. HELM, has been one of the foremost advocates for cutting down appropriation bills and has made speeches for rigid economy, and I hope he will not seriously oppose the striking out of this section.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. DILLON. The provision for taking the statistics every two years does not appear in the former census bill, does it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Of course not.

Mr. DILLON. It is now proposed to take a census of manufactures every two years?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and what is more, it is not proposed to take a census of all manufactures, but only of 60 or 70 lines of manufactures. Why authorize such a step now? Why crowd this bill along at this last hour amid a maze of conference reports, vetoes, and even deficiency bills?

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, the committee incorporated this provision in the bill, thinking it would be of interest to the manufacturing States and the manufacturing industries of the country. We assumed that this information would be more valuable to manufacturers than to any other class of our people in view of the great expansion of our industries and the necessity for accurate information. It is the opinion of the committee, acting on the suggestion of the Director of the Census, that this provision should be incorporated in the bill to carry out this sound economic policy.

Following the war, in my opinion—and I think it is the opinion of most thoughtful men—there will be a great struggle for the world trade. It will be helpful to our manufacturers to get the information to be afforded by these biennial censuses, but if the manufacturing States and the great manufacturing interests of the country do not want the information, as far as I am concerned, I am not disposed to force it upon them. It is my opinion, however, representing an agricultural constituency, that they will need this information. I can not understand the narrow view taken by the gentleman who represents the Pittsburgh district and who talks about the interests of his country being harassed by requests for reports. The Director of the Census, speaking of the manner in which the information is gathered, said this:

> We have what we call special agents who take the place of the enumerators, and where it becomes necessary they go to the manufacturing concerns and there obtain the information called for on the manufacture schedule. We obtain a great many of the schedules, however, by mail. Some of the largest and best concerns in the country, upon our request by letter, send us a statement of their business covering manufactures. About 20 per cent of the schedules on manufactures are obtained in this manner.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state why they take the first of these biennial censuses in 1921? We are going to take a census in 1920. Why should not the next one be taken in 1922?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I did not observe that that was the case.

Mr. WALSH. We take a census of agriculture, mining and manufacturing, and of population in 1920. Section 32 provides for a biennial census to begin in 1921, 1923, 1925, 1927.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The fourteenth decennial census will be taken as of January 1, 1920. Then the biennial census of manufacturers will be taken, beginning with 1921, I presume at the close of that year.

Mr. WALSH. But that is not what the section says.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have not observed that, but I agree with the gentleman that it ought not to be taken earlier than that, and each two years thereafter. Those are the reasons that induced me to consent to this provision being inserted in the bill.

Mr. BLACK. I understand that under existing law there will be another census of manufactures taken in 1925, even though this section is not passed.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; and we have provided for a census of agriculture every fifth year.

Mr. BLACK. That used to be the law, but it was repealed as to agriculture. The manufacturing census was not repealed and was taken in 1915.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; by authorization of Congress; and we might as well realize that the Census Bureau is a permanent Government agency, and much of the statistical information now obtained through the other departments and bureaus of the Government ought to be gathered in that bureau, because it is a bureau equipped for that purpose. I agree that there is now much duplication of work, but this data as to manufacturers should be gathered through the Census Bureau and not through so many other governmental agencies, because the Census Bureau is equipped with experts, it has the machinery, and it is the logical bureau through which the information should be obtained.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, it is substantially agreed that these statistics will be of value only to statisticians and economists; certainly not of much value to the manufacturers of the country. I am not surprised that the Bureau of the Census should wish to amplify its powers. We have that continually before us in the framing of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Until 15 years ago the Bureau of the Census had no permanent, continuing force, but was organized every 10 years for the purpose of taking the decennial census of population. Since then there has been a strenuous endeavor continuously to amplify the powers of the Census Bureau so as to magnify its work all of the time.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HELM. Is the gentleman opposed to a census of manufactures?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am opposed to a census of manufactures at the present time, because conditions are absolutely abnormal and the census will be of absolutely no value to statisticians or economists.

Mr. HELM. I understood the gentleman to say——

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not yield further. I rose primarily to contradict the statement made by the distinguished educator and member of the committee, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL], who said that the taking of the census of manufactures every two years will not entail any additional expense.

Mr. ASWELL. After the first two years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Before me I have the estimate of the Bureau of the Census for the next fiscal year, in which it is shown that the expenses estimated for the taking of the annual statistics of cotton amounts to $265,000. To obtain the statistics of electrical industries the amount estimated is $35,000, and so on down the list. It is preposterous to claim that when you are going to call on the manufacturers of the country and send out special agents to obtain this tabulation of statistics, which will be of no value two years after you obtain them to the manufacturing establishments, that it is not going to cost anything. It means additional employees in the Bureau of Labor. At this time I want to criticize, if I may, the surrender, by the committee, and its acceptance of the recommendations almost completely of this committee of employees of the Census Bureau. This bill is a bill prepared by the employees of the Census Bureau, viséed by the Committee on the Census. If the Committee on Appropriations should accept everything that the Director of the Census in his estimates recommends, instead of having a total appropriation of half a million dollars annually for their permanent roll, we would have millions expended for that very purpose.

Our committee on appropriations has been attempting to curtail these everpresent demands, and yet our efforts are set aside by the action of the Census Committee in recommending a census of manufacturers every two years. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] points out the lack of consideration that has been given to this very amendment, because under the decennial census you will take a census of manufactures—that is, in 1920. Here you provide for a census immediately afterward in 1921, another in 1923. Under the existing law a census every five years of manufactures is provided for, and that certainly should be sufficient. Are we running wild in our consideration of these matters? There is no question of patronage involved. This is the permanent force that will be employed in the bureau to take something of value only to statisticians. Is it worth while? No manufacturers have come before the committee claiming that they will be of any value. I am not surprised that the employees of the bureau should wish to magnify their importance and equip themselves to employ these special agents who must be employed for the taking of the decennial census of population throughout the country during the years after the decennial census work is completed. I have served on the Appropriations Committee too long not to realize that once employees are put on the statutory roll, there is not much prospect of ever discontinuing them. So I ask to have the committee present some good reason to show that these statistics will be of value to the manufacturers of the country. Well may it be claimed that they will not be of value, but that the taking will be of inconvenience to manufacturers with these special agents going around the country every two years and compelling them at their mere direction to fill out these long tabulations. They do not want to be pestered that way especially when these statistics will not be of any value whatsoever to the manufacturing industries of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD].

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has spoken very earnestly in regard to the bill. I know of very few bills which have been brought into this Congress which have not been prepared in large part by the department from which they emanated. We have a regular organization, a statistical bureau. When we got into the war we needed knowledge of the conditions of this country as to manufacturing, agriculture, and mining. We found ourselves almost wholly without it, and special censuses were organized. These have been taken, based largely upon the estimates of the census which was taken in 1910. The committee thought it was not wholly unwise to see whether some organization could not be secured by which the needs continuously of an extra organization in connection with every department of the Government in the gathering of statistics might not well be turned over to the statistical bureau. You know and I know that agencies of this kind grow by what they feed upon, and the agencies which have just been brought into being by special services will continue to grow by what they feed upon unless we restrict those agencies and turn this work over to a regularly constituted bureau whose business it shall be continuously to furnish the Government with adequate knowledge.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, then it is intended that this manufacturing census shall not really stop at the number of years designated in the bill, but go on and on and on.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. It is restricted——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And that is a fair sample of a bureau enlarging itself, or, as the gentleman well says, fattening by what it feeds upon?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. The bureau already is permanent——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And is enlarging itself.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. And is now doing much work for which other departments get credit. They send their agents into the Census Bureau and get the information and to make estimates, and the further we get away from the regular census the more liable we are to error.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is it not quite possible by the time we get ready to take this census it will amount to one set of Federal employees taking the census of another set of Federal employees?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Not if we refuse in the future to make special appropriations that each department in itself may take a census for itself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Where are we going to go——

Mr. FAIRFIELD. If it is to be in the future as now, then I can understand opposition to the development of the regular bureau.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. About when is Congress going to decline to enlarge appropriations to bureaus which seem to devote much of their time in trying to build themselves up——

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I trust we shall be able to do so in the next Congress at least, if not in this one, and I am heartily in sympathy with the idea.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Is that the purpose of section 32 of this bill, to dispense with the Agricultural Department and Bureau of Statistics, Commerce Department, and these various other bureaus?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. The thought in the mind of the committee was this——

Mr. WALSH (continuing). Shall take special censuses?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. That the special censuses should be done away with as soon as possible——

Mr. WALSH. You have got to legislate them out of existence, then.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. And it should be turned over to the Statistical Bureau to which it belongs. Now, personally I do not care particularly about this section, except as to indicate the hope that actuated the committee in being willing to report the bill in, and I think it has been actuated by thoughtful consideration.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman knows I have great respect for his judgment and sincerity in discussing any question, and I want to ask him, having voted to include manufactures in the measure——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent——

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been fixed by order of the committee.

Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan. I yield the gentleman another minute for the purpose of answering a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for one additional minute.

Mr. FESS. Having voted to include manufactures in the census requirement, what is the gentleman's opinion as to the time it will take to take this biennial census limited to manufactures?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Well, we were informed it would take about six months with many bulletins out within three months.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman believe it is possible if it is at all an exhaustive census?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Well, I am not familiar enough with the work of the Census Office, but I do think this: That the statistics of the bureau, organized as it ought to be, to which is continuously referred all matters that properly belong to it, would get it into such relationship that it might be quickly done by permanent agencies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, if the membership of this House thinks that a census of manufactures is of no value to the country, if you are not interested in the progress and in the growth and in the development of your country, if you are willing to stand perfectly still, become stagnant, not undertake to expand or increase or develop your manufacturing industries, then your contentions are good. If you are inclined to know how far your country has progressed, what you are producing, what new industries have been born, what industries have been compelled to die, what the future promises to you in the way of agriculture and manufacturing expansion, then I say your contention is wrong.

It occurs to me that this is a very late date for men who represent manufacturing districts in the United States to be coming in and asking that all sources of information on this line be cut off and denied them. I wanted to ask you men who flatter yourselves with the idea that you are soon to control Congress and rewrite a tariff bill where you will go for information to guide you if you do not get it through this bureau?

Mr. WALSH. In the 1920 census.

Mr. HELM. I understand you are not in favor even of a census in 1920 for manufactures.

Mr. WALSH. I am.

Mr. HELM. You Republicans have been making arguments for a census of the population only. If you read these hearings you will see that many hundreds of new industries have been brought into operation by reason of the business enforced upon us because of the war.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HELM. No.

Mr. BLACK. I suggest to the gentleman that he used up half of my time.

Mr. HELM. I gave 25 minutes to the opposition.

Since this war has started the testimony shows that the United States has ceased to live, as it has been living in the past, as a hermit nation. Mr. Palmer, who is in charge of the Alien Enemy Property Bureau, has disclosed to the country the fact that almost 30 per cent of the manufacturing industries of this country are controlled by foreign capital and that that foreign capital is German capital. Therefore, having been forced into the production of articles that are essentially necessary under conditions that have arisen, we must have this information. You might just as well undertake to say how much land is contained in a given boundary without a survey of the land as to say what the business of the United States amounts to without an invoice of the business. The proposition to eliminate a census of manufacture is a ridiculous and senseless one.

Now, the effort to inject politics into this legislation and play upon political prejudices has nothing to do with the merits of the bill. This is a business proposition, and under the so-called Overman bill I do hope, trust, and pray that all of these legislative activities we are authorizing, and perhaps not getting good results from, which will be performed by different departments and bureaus, will be confined to the Census Bureau. If the Census Bureau is not worth while, abolish it.

But if the Government is to have a statistical bureau, a place where you can get information instead of having to trape all over the city of Washington from one place and another to get it, I do hope the result of the reorganization will throw all this business where it properly belongs—into the hands of men in the Bureau of the Census who are trained for that purpose. The men who are connected with these other bureaus have to come to the Census Bureau in order to get information as to how to do the work that they are directed and empowered to do, and without this aid they can do nothing. Now, in an effort to take away from the Government the only reliable, dependable instrumentality for gathering statistics that are worth while you say that this legislation calls for a useless waste of money. I submit to every man within the sound of my voice if there has been a Member of Congress who has stood more steadfastly against the useless expenditure of money than myself. But I do want to see my Government during this crisis have every instrumentality that is necessary to perform the functions of the Government reliably and well. And I for one do not propose to take from the Government such instrumentalities.

Mr. WALSH. Why did not the gentleman ask for an annual census if he believes in the argument he is making?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer a preferential amendment, to strike out from line 24, page 27, the words "nineteen hundred and twenty-one."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 27, line 24, strike out the words "nineteen hundred and twenty-one."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD and Mr. ROBBINS demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 27.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] to strike out the section.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 32.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. HELM took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 32, noes 37.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 1553. An act to give effect to the convention between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds, concluded at Washington, August 16, 1916, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 159. Joint resolution to extend the time within which the President may relinquish control of any railroad or system of transportation, as provided in section 14 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, to January 1, 1919.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on June 29, 1918, they presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 12441. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10854. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12599. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS (H. REPT. NO. 694).

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I report the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1919, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12633) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the House is aware of the fact that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was vetoed because it carried the so-called Borland amendment. The bill which I have just presented is an exact copy of the bill heretofore passed by the House and the Senate with two exceptions. In the first place, it eliminates the amendment referred to; and, in the second place, it provides that the $120 increase shall apply to all the employees of the Government without exception, just as was originally provided by the House.

This should be done in order that there shall be no discrimination among the employees of the Government, and in order to provide for a class of employees, many of whom are drawing less salary than those to whom the increase allowed applies. Now, the House is aware, of course, that this bill should be enacted into law without delay. This is the beginning of the fiscal year and unless enacted into law to-day the salaries carried in the bill will stop. I wish, therefore, to ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered now in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that there be no debate upon the bill, and that at the conclusion of the second reading of the bill the previous question be considered as ordered.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask of the House five minutes in which to make a statement in connection with the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], the chairman of the subcommittee dealing with this bill, has stated, the bill is now reported back to the House with the Borland amendment stricken out and with one other amendment alone made in it. In all other respects it is as agreed to by the conferees and as passed by the House and the Senate.

That one amendment consists in this: The House passed a provision giving the employees of the Government who were drawing $2,000 and less per year an increase of $120 a year, with certain exceptions as to those who had received promotions, and so forth. When the bill went to the Senate they amended that provision in two particulars. They raised the limit of $2,000 to $2,500, and then they excluded from the provisions of the $120 raise those bureaus of the Government which had been established since the 1st of July, 1916. As the bill was finally agreed to in conference it was agreed to with the limitation at $2,500 and with the elimination of these new bureaus.

In my judgment the latter provision was a mistake, and a mistake for this reason: The testimony before the Committee on Appropriations shows that perhaps in the War Department, more than in any other department of the Government, have there been increases in the pay of the clerks here in Washington, and that many of the new bureaus are employing clerks at rates that are as low or lower than those of most of the old established bureaus of the Government. These clerks are the new clerks that have come in many instances and have come here unfamiliar with conditions, who have had to get accommodations at the new prices for accommodations, and they are in a position of greater hardship than exists in regard to many of the old clerks that have been here permanently. They are paid out of lump-sum appropriations.

It would be within the power of these bureaus to increase their salaries not only $120, but more. To exclude them from the benefit of that raise would be to invite the increase of their salaries, leaving it to the discretion of these executive officers. Already there has been considerable agitation throughout the city looking to a general increase of their salaries. I think Congress ought to keep its hands, so far as it is humanly possible, upon this salary and labor situation in the country. I do not believe there can be any real justification for the exclusion of these new bureaus. For instance, the War Trade Bureau presented detailed information touching salaries and the rates of them more creditable than most any other that I know of. To exclude them would be to penalize their very efficiency.

Therefore the committee have felt warranted in making this change, with the belief that the Senate would acquiesce in the change when they understood the situation. This phase of the matter was not discussed on the floor of the Senate when the bill was pending there heretofore, and if it meets with the concurrence of the House I trust that we can have unanimous consent for the passage of this bill as speedily as possible.

This bill, more than any other annual bill, perhaps with the exception of the sundry civil bill, ought to become a law before the expiration of the fiscal year. It deals with the pay of the employees of the Government, and which makes it difficult to take care of in a proper way by resolution. If the bill becomes a law to-day, the law taking no cognizance of the fraction of a day, it will have been the law from the beginning of the fiscal year, and it will obviate a great deal of difficult bookkeeping and a great deal of trouble. Under the circumstances I feel warranted in asking the House to acquiesce in the action of the committee, the change indicated being the only change made; and I trust the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] will be agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the so-called Borland amendment, which the President disapproved and the House has approved of his position, was a subject of long controversy in conference. The House conferees felt bound in a way to follow the direction of the House on a record vote to insist upon adherence to that provision requiring eight hours, subject to half holidays and full holidays and 30 days' annual leave. As one of the conferees I declined to accept the principle, except as it was limited to the period of the war. I know of instances in private establishments, in large insurance companies, where the hours of employment are less than eight. In my opinion, we should not compel any Government clerk to work for a longer period than seven hours except under the pressing conditions of war.

Here in the District we are confronted by this peculiar situation: A shortage of clerical help; the country is being combed over to get efficient stenographers and clerks to perform the necessary work required by the Government's activities in war. Lack of quarters to house them is another pressing condition, and we are proceeding to expend $10,000,000 for building housing facilities to accommodate the increasing army of clerks. Another condition that was called to our attention was the varying standard of hours of employment; in one bureau the head would demand seven and a half hours of employment, because the working conditions in that bureau required that amount; and yet in another bureau, where the head of the department thought that seven hours should be the limit, only seven hours was required.

For instance, in the Bureau of Ordnance the employees have for several months been required to work seven and a half hours. In the Department of Labor the administrative head is opposed to requiring more than seven hours. So in different departments there is a different schedule of hours of employment.

Then, again, it is the opinion of many bureau heads, with the salaries that we are now paying to these employees, based not upon present living conditions but upon the exigent conditions prevailing by reason of the great demand for clerical assistance by the Government and the shortage of clerical help, where before we paid the clerk or typist $900 a year we are paying them $1,200 to $1,400 as a governmental necessity by reason of the conditions, that we should during the war situation exact an additional hour of all the clerks, and they would be willing during the war to make that sacrifice by giving one additional hour of employment. So that with this accumulating necessary work, with the limited quarters in the departments, where only so much work can be done, with minimum housing facilities in the District, where only so many clerks can be housed, and with the limited supply of employees, it was not unreasonable at all to require one uniform rule for all.

That was the justification on the part of some of the conferees in doing what had been done years before in peace time, requiring a certain fixed number of hours for all the employees in the departments. The House has seen fit to sustain the position of the President. I only thought it was fair to the conferees and to those of the House who had voted in support of the eight-hour law to make this explanation of the real, impelling reason for the action of the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, that the first reading be dispensed with, that all debate be omitted, and that at the end of the reading for amendment the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GARABED (S. DOC. NO. 251).

The SPEAKER. The Chair has a communication from the Secretary of the Interior that he is not certain ought to be laid before the House; but inasmuch as the matter referred to created great excitement in the House at the time it was presented, and as the communication is short, the Chair orders it to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 1, 1918.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I am to-day in receipt of report of the committee of scientists appointed by Mr. Garabed T. K. Giragossian, and approved by Secretary Lane, in accordance with the provisions of Public resolution No. 21, dated February 8, 1918, a copy of which report I am sending to you herewith.

Cordially, yours, ALEXANDER T. VOGELSANG,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

We, the undersigned, who are members of the commission duly appointed in accordance with the provisions of Public resolution No. 21, Sixty-fifth Congress, hereby certify that Mr. Garabed T. K. Giragossian showed us on Saturday, June 29, 1918, a model embodying the principles of his invention known as the Garabed. We found that the model was not in shape to run or to develop power. The inventor admitted that he had no working machine and that he was merely explaining principles. We do not believe that his principles are sound, that his device is operative, or that it can result in the practical development or utilization of free energy.

Witness our signatures at Boston, Mass., this 29th day of June, 1918.

EDWARD F. MILLER.
M. DE KAY THOMPSON,
EDWIN B. WILSON,
CHARLES L. NORTON.

The SPEAKER. This communication will be referred to the Committee on Patents.

PENSIONS.

Mr. KEY of Ohio presented the conference reports on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bills (S. 3798, 4193, and 4542) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors for printing in the RECORD under the rule.

DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the present consideration of H. R. 12600, making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] asks unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the general deficiency bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to one hour, half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and half by myself. I hope not to use that much time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks, pending going into Committee of the Whole, that the general debate be limited to 1 hour, 30 minutes to be controlled by himself and 30 minutes by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the general deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 12600), with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this general deficiency bill carries a total appropriation of $992,058,993, which is $486,016,925.61 less than the total of the estimates requested.

As the Members of the House are aware, it is customary at the end of a fiscal year for the Congress to pass a general deficiency bill to take care of those deficiencies that have developed in the various services of the Government during the fiscal year, and it is really a bill to clean up the odds and ends that necessarily occur in the running of the various departments. This year, like every other deficiency bill, the amount is very great, due to the one compelling cause that has operated on all supply bills, and that is the war and its prosecution. This bill contains two large matters which amount for the great portion of the sums carried, one relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army and the other relating to the housing problem in connection with war industries.

Touching the Quartermaster's Department, of the more than a billion dollars of deficiencies presented to the committee, $1,031,000,000 was represented in clothing and equipage for the Army. When the last deficiency bill was before the House I stated that we were not carrying any moneys under the head of clothing, not because there were not deficiencies existing and deficiencies that would occur, but because the department had the right to incur such deficiencies, and it was believed at that time that the matter could go over until more knowledge was available touching the exact situation in connection with the clothing of the Army. The committee had before it Gen. R. E. Wood, who is now in charge of the Quartermaster's Department, and he made a statement which, I think, will repay the careful perusal of the membership of the House. Summarized, he said that notwithstanding the very great increase in the size of the Army, notwithstanding the very great increase in the number of men who were being daily shipped overseas, he was glad to say that the Quartermaster's Department had been able to clothe and equip fully all of the soldiers of the Nation who are being sent overseas and those who are being called into and are in the camps and cantonments here. He stated that the requirements that had been placed upon the department were very much in excess of what had been anticipated a few months ago, due to this very rapid movement of troops across the water and to the more rapid calling of other troops to the colors; but that notwithstanding that strain, they had been in a position to take care of the situation, and he presented certain tables as to the number of various articles that had been furnished to the soldiers of the Army. On page 49 of the hearings will be found a statement both as to the cost and the quantities of equipment for soldiers. The unit cost of equipping a soldier with these various articles has been $63.51, and the total cost of a year's maintenance, with the original issue, is $195.92. That is exclusive of what is known as equipage, which includes bags, bed sacks, blankets, overcoats, and slickers, and which increases the unit cost by $28.12 and the maintenance cost for a year by $71.32. He gives in some detail the cost of the equipment and the situation that confronts the Quartermaster's Department at this time.

Gentlemen will notice that the estimates which were submitted and those which the committee recommend touching clothing differ by some $300,000,000. They differ by that amount because of the exclusion of two items which were really duplicates. One was an item of $100,000,000 for the purchase of wool, and the other was an item of about $200,000,000 to take care of contracts. By agreement with the Quartermaster Department on detailed examination of the estimates it was found that these amounts would be eliminated.

Gentlemen will also notice that under the head of barracks and quarters, roads, walks, sewers, hospitals, and other items there have been a number of reductions made that will total something approaching $95,000,000. These reductions are explained by the fact that there had been made by the construction division of the Quartermaster Department requisitions upon the quartermaster funds for various works at the camps and cantonments. Subsequently requisitions would be made that were not always of the same amount as the original request; frequently for less sums, and yet the bookkeeping had not been so checked as to make the depletion of the quartermaster funds by such draft to correspond exactly to the facts, as shown by the books of the constructing quartermaster's division.

In addition to that there have been charged to the quartermaster fund in the first instance moneys for port facilities and warehouse facilities that should have been paid, and are now being paid, out of funds appropriated for such purposes. When credits were made to the quartermaster fund for such amounts, it resulted in the reduction of their estimate, as I have indicated.

Putting it in another way, the committee has recommended moneys that are necessary to pay all actual existing deficiencies in connection with the Quartermaster Department to the extent that we know them, and to take care of such work in process of completion as is now being done by the construction division of the Quartermaster Department.

There was testimony before the committee showing $82,907,415.42 had been or was being expended in connection with camps and cantonments. This included, however, items under the head of barracks and quarters, water and sewers, regular supplies, construction of hospitals, military posts, and so forth, of some $18,000,000 as a general reserve to provide for unforeseen contingencies. The committee eliminated of that $18,000,000, $9,000,000, believing that $9,000,000 was more than enough leeway to enable them to take care of unforeseen contingencies.

There was contained in the $82,907,000 nearly $14,000,000 in the way of hospitals. This is explained by the detailed statement as to the places where the expenditures have been made, and these expenditures consisted either in the enlargement or refinement of existing hospitals at camps and cantonments or additional hospital facilities.

We are providing a bed capacity of at least 5 per cent for all the enlisted personnel of the Army, and we are providing a bed capacity in hospitals that have never been equaled in the history of the world, in my judgment, in completeness and elaborateness of their facilities. Were it not a matter that related so directly to the health of the Army and of the Nation, criticism might properly be levied at the degree of expenditure that is being made in connection with hospitals. But it is only fair to say on the other side of the question that the health of the armies, both in camp and abroad, has been such as to cause congratulation on the part of every one familiar with the facts. When it looked like there might be an epidemic of meningitis among the enlisted men in the spring and early summer months, the Medical Corps of the department were able so to handle the situation as to make important discoveries and to provide a remedy, and to break up in a few weeks what threatened at one time to be a serious epidemic. Consequently, none of us is prepared to deny any moneys that are necessary in order to continue the efficient work of these men in connection with the health of the troops.

The committee has not denied in this or in any other instance any allowance of moneys that have been asked for by the Medical Department of the Army, notwithstanding the belief that economies might be introduced without detriment to the efficiency of that service.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has stated that we have provided the best hospitals in the world. Have those all been built, or have they taken over other buildings?

Mr. SHERLEY. The big expenditures have been in providing hospitals in camps and cantonments where they have been actually built, and there has been a number of other hospitals actually built. In other sections we have taken over hospitals; in some instances we have taken over hotel properties and other properties that were converted into hospitals.

Now, the Committee on Appropriations has not been able, of course, to take up such matters in detail. We were not able to say whether a given place was properly taken over, or should have been taken over, at the price at which they have taken it over, or whether the amount of money they have expended on improvements was the amount that was needed.

In point of fact, the committee has had practically no discretion. We have been confronted with work done, and we have been asked to pay the bill, and our chief function has been in requiring these departments to check up their bookkeeping so as to know accurately whether the bill was a bill that ought to be paid. In that connection I may say that I hope that the Committee on Military Affairs will bring about a reform in connection with the present methods of carrying a lot of items relative to construction generally. We carry under the head of barracks and quarters, water and sewers, regular supplies, roads, wharves, warehouses and drainage, shooting galleries and ranges, construction and repair of hospitals, Army quarters, storehouse, and so forth, and military post exchanges the moneys that go into the making of these camps and cantonments. It would be infinitely better if, instead of having those funds so segregated we should make available by one item the moneys necessary to do this construction work just as we are now doing in connection with port facilities that are being constructed under the direction of Gen. Goethals, and it would save an intricate examination into the books and an amount of labor that can hardly be estimated.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What I want to do is to direct a question to the gentleman with respect to the hospitals in France. The gentleman referred only to the hospitals here. Are the facilities provided there to the extent they have been here as commensurate with the probable necessities?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is my understanding they have been. The reason I referred exclusively to hospitals in America was because as to this bill there is no money being carried for hospitals abroad. The moneys have been provided, and it is my understanding that what we are doing there is the occasion of the admiration and the envy of all of our allies, touching the extent and the wisdom of the provisions we have made for our troops. Nowhere in the world are troops being sent with more care for their health, their physical well-being, than are the troops of the United States.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman regard that as good policy not only from a humanitarian standpoint, but looking at it strictly from a military standpoint of efficiency and the best utilization of man power.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is no doubt about that. There is no more expensive person in the world than a sick soldier, and anything that can be done to prevent that, even putting it on the cold-blooded ground of economy and efficiency, ought to be done, and of course none of us would rest it simply upon that ground; but we desire, as far as is humanly possible, to lessen the sacrifice the boys are making in defense of their country. At the same time it is incumbent upon those who have the administration of these funds and whom we have to trust that they should exercise all of the economy that is possible along with efficiency.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not know whether I ought to ask this question, but it is a question that is asked of me and probably of every other Member who goes out working for Red Cross and Young Men's Christian Association contributions. Why is it necessary, if the War Department is appropriating sufficient money, to have these agencies so highly supplied with money?

Mr. SHERLEY. There has been a very interesting statement issued, I think in connection with the past Red Cross drive, in answer to that inquiry, and I shall not undertake to add to it, but, briefly, it is perfectly apparent to anyone who will stop to think for a moment that there are a lot of things that can be done by an individual organization that is not governmental, that can not be done by a government, that is necessarily restricted within certain more or less rigid lines in connection with its activities.

There are certain little attentions that are personal in their nature to the individual and to his needs and to his family needs that could not be met through governmental agency that are being most splendidly met by the Red Cross and the people who are working under the Red Cross, and the more one becomes familiar with that work the more he realizes that it is not a duplication of but a supplement to the work of the Government. It simply serves to give the personal, human, individual touch that can not be given by any Government, no matter what funds are placed at its disposal.

The House will recall that some time previously we voted $100,000,000 of cash, with a contract authorization of $50,000,000 more, for the creation of port facilities and warehousing in the interior in order to relieve the congestion that has arisen in connection with the movement of supplies to the seacoast and to expedite the handling of such supplies and to shorten the time of ships in loading at our ports of embarkation. That work has been under the direct charge of Gen. Goethals. There has been voted in the Army bill that is now pending, I think, $145,000,000 for additional work, and there is carried in this bill the $50,000,000 of cash necessary to meet the contract authorizations that were authorized when we voted the $100,000,000 in cash. There is a statement made by Gen. Goethals as to what has been done, what is in contemplation, which I also commend to the reading of the Members. It is impossible for me now, in the brief time that remains to discuss it, more than to say that I believe we have very greatly improved the conditions at our ports, and that we are providing facilities that will enable us to have immediately back of the ports a month's supply, as I recall it, and back in the interior two months' additional supplies, so that we will have storage capacity to take care of three months' supplies in addition to the facilities that we have at the ports in connection with the loading of our ships.

There was another matter presented to the committee that occasioned more study and about which the committee found greater difficulty in coming to a conclusion than perhaps any other matter carried in the bill, and that is the estimate submitted for $100,000,000 for additional housing facilities. The committee will recall that we authorized by acts passed through Congress the expenditure of $60,000,000 for that purpose, and that subsequently the Committee on Appropriations reported, and the Congress passed, an appropriation of that amount of money to take care of that authorization.

There was submitted by Mr. Eidlitz an estimate for $100,000,000 of additional money. The act as it passed the Congress placed with the President the power to expend the money and to employ such agency or agencies as he might see fit in connection therewith. Accordingly he designated the Department of Labor as the agency through which the money should be expended, and Mr. Eidlitz, with those who are associated with him under that department has, as was contemplated, the expenditure of this money. Since the $60,000,000 were appropriated there have been additional surveys made of the needs over the country, and I might say in passing that the committee will also recall that this is exclusive of the housing which is to be done by the Shipping Board in connection with the shipping plants and shipyards. The result of this subsequent study was that they felt that they needed $100,000,000 additional in order to deal with the situation. Part of that additional need is explained by virtue of this fact: In the months that have gone by some temporary housing has been done by the Army and the Navy out of funds voted in connection with acquiring munitions of war and as an incident to the creation of new plants and new facilities. The Judge Advocate General of the Army has rendered an opinion, which I am inclined to believe is sound and which informally I have learned is likely to be considered as sound by the comptroller, who has the right only to make a binding decision, to the effect that inasmuch as Congress has now appropriated a specific fund for doing this particular work that no other funds appropriated for other or general purposes can be so used. In other words, it is an illustration of the old legal maxim that the expression of the one is the exclusion of the other, and having designated a fund you exclude all other funds. The result of that will be that the organization under Mr. Eidlitz will be expected to take care of all housing other than that which is done by the Shipping Board, whether it be temporary or permanent.

Now, there was some fear on the part of members of the subcommittee, and particularly did the language of the letter of the Secretary of Labor to Mr. Eidlitz touching the program warrant the fear, that the change might indicate also a change of policy and a determination on the part of these administrative officers to build exclusively, or practically exclusively, permanent houses rather than to build temporary houses where they would suffice. In order that that matter might not be the subject of any doubt there was asked, and repeatedly asked, questions of Mr. Eidlitz as to the facts; and assurances were given by him, not once but a number of times, that it was his intention to build permanent houses only where temporary houses would not properly serve the situation. He stated that they had come to the conclusion that in a great many instances it was absolutely necessary and desirable to build permanent houses, due to the fact you could not get skilled laborers who had families to remain contentedly in temporary houses or barracks, and that if you held such labor at their employment and prevented the very great turnover and consequent cost resulting from such turnover you had to build them permanent houses. He also testified again to what had been the testimony by him and others before the committee when another hearing was had on this matter, that since the beginning of the European war there had been a very great cessation in the building of houses in America and that in consequence the country was short of such housing facilities, and that in his judgment after the war was over there would be sufficient demand for those houses to enable the Government to dispose of them without material loss. And in that connection I should say that the idea of having contributions made by some corporations or localities of a portion of the moneys in connection with the building of those houses has been given up because it was not believed it could be worked out practically without carrying with it the idea of immediate sale of such houses to employees, and that immediate sale of houses to employees was not deemed wise because it would require the sale at a price that might not be justified and that the employees would probably undertake to purchase the houses on partial payment when after the cessation of the very high wage that they were receiving they might not be able to continue payments, and that it would lead to confusion and trouble and it was wiser and better for the Government to build and rent and avoid the situation of having the employee rent from a landlord who was his employer.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Adjacent to what industries are these houses constructed?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is a list given in the hearing. I can not quote from memory, but they are all adjacent to industries which are engaged in munition work or other war activities for the Government—arsenals, navy yards——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman from Illinois can yield me 10 minutes, I will try to conclude in that time.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am very much obliged to the gentleman; but if it embarrasses the gentleman I do not wish to take his time.

Mr. CANNON. It does not embarrass me. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have such time as he desires to conclude his remarks. That is the better way, I think.

Mr. SHERLEY. I doubt under the rules, the time having been fixed for general debate, it can be enlarged; but I suggest this, if the gentleman can yield me 10 minutes, at the expiration of his time, if he has not concluded, we can start the reading of the bill and then under the five-minute rule he can continue his remarks.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There has been considerable discussion in the country about unemployment of labor in industrial centers where contracts have not been given. Did Mr. Eidlitz refer to the possibility of extending the zone in which war contracts are given?

Mr. SHERLEY. He did. He stated it was his understanding that the Navy Department had issued an order which excluded the New England and the eastern coast from the area in which new industries should be created and new orders placed; that a similar policy was being followed by the War Department, and that is also my understanding from other sources.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Would not that lessen the necessity for housing facilities?

Mr. SHERLEY. It would lessen the necessity for housing facilities in the future due to additional plants, but the problem he presented is an existing problem now, due to existing plants with their existing needs. Now, the committee cut this estimate in half. That may seem to some pretty drastic action. The reasons that actuated it, briefly, were these: First, it is perfectly apparent that communities in America where these industries are located are prepared, if I may use a slang phrase, "to let George do it," and to the extent that they can get the Federal Government to come in and supply facilities, to that extent they are going to lay back and not do their part of the work; they are not going to carry their load. Unfortunately we have many evidences of the desire on the part of capital in America to skim the cream in connection with a lot of matters and let the burdens be assumed by the Federal Government. Second, to the extent that any sort of this work that is done is unnecessary, to that extent you have diverted man power from the necessary things in connection with this war to things that are not necessary. And, third, it was not felt that there could be such expenditure of moneys within the next few months as was contemplated by the estimate that was submitted. If the amounts that we have recommended are agreed to by the Congress, there will be given to Mr. Eidlitz and those associated with him $110,000,000; there will have been given to the Shipping Board $75,000,000, and $20,000,000 additional in regard to transportation, which would make $95,000,000 for the Shipping Board and $110,000,000 for the Housing Commission, or a total of $205,000,000. That is a considerable sum of money even in this day and generation, and we did not believe that it was wise to give the full amount, inasmuch as Congress will be practically in continuous session, and if the need develops for additional sums they can come back and ask for such additional sums. And I am emphasizing this with the desire that every Member of Congress will emphasize it where the situation in his district may warrant it, with the hope that the communities that are benefited so greatly by the placing of these plants and the spending of these great sums, running into the billions, in their midst, will rise to their obligations and themselves help to solve some of this problem by building through private enterprise the houses that ought to be built.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I want to take exception to the gentleman's statement.

Mr. SHERLEY. I was in hopes that the gentleman would emphasize it.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I will do it if I can. But in my district, where $5,000,000 has been appropriated for housing, it is not possible for the local lumber men to obtain sufficient lumber to build the houses, and it is also impossible to get the men to build them. We would like to do it but——

Mr. SHERLEY. I agree with the gentleman that a part of the problem has been due to the difficulty of getting material, and I hope it will be the policy of the priority committee, as I believe it will, to see to it that the men that are willing to provide for the erection of houses necessary for the housing of employees in useful war industries shall be given such priorities as to the shipment of material and as to labor as will enable them to do the work. But, making allowance for all of that, it still remains true that the communities are perfectly willing to let Uncle Sam do it instead of doing it themselves if they can.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I wish to make another statement, to the effect that there have been two or three instances where the Shipping Board has commandeered the lumber in the local lumber yards.

Mr. SHERLEY. All right. I am not saying it is not the case in the gentleman's own locality, and I have not undertaken to specify; but I repeat that, speaking by and large, there is not only in this particular but in a great many other particulars a selfish desire on the part of the localities to turn over to the Federal Government the burden wherever they can do it. Now, there is nothing unusual about that. Since the beginning of time men have been selfish, and probably will be until the end of time; but it is a factor that we ought to take into mind when we come to legislate on the subject.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Could not that be remedied by extending the area? Out in the mid-western country there have been no contracts let at all.

Mr. SHERLEY. Five months ago I held in my hand on this floor and read to gentlemen a statement that there were three States that had three-quarters of the contracts, and I prophesied the conditions that have arisen. Touching shipping, that arose because you have to build ships where water is. Touching other industries, it arose somewhat because of the fact that there was the nucleus for skilled labor that would enable industries to expand and build factories. It ought not to have been to the extent that it has been, and I believe it will not be in the future; at least, I hope so. But it is a fact, and we have to recognize the fact.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Briefly. I would like to pass on, and when we get under the five-minute rule we can further discuss the housing problem.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. This criticism you are making of communities of course does not apply to all communities where housing has become necessary.

Mr. SHERLEY. This I do know: The situation is frequently not as bad as pictured. Take the housing situation in Washington. If the Committee on Appropriations had wanted to be stampeded and had listened to a lot of talk that came to it informally and to the statements in the press, we would have believed that the whole machinery of the Government would stop if we did not build houses immediately to house employees here. Yet we have managed to get along fairly well. In point of fact, it is very rarely that a community of any size ever reaches the saturation point in connection with the housing of people. There has to be a disposition on the part of people who can do it to open up their homes and take people in and help extend the present facilities to the new need.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The reason I asked the question was because of one particular case I have in mind. At one place in my district the people had organized corporations and had already subscribed 25 per cent of the amount that must be invested in their community when they were told the plans had been changed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes; that is true. But I have tried to explain the reason for that; and even at that time the desire to provide 25 per cent only was based on the idea that Uncle Sam should carry the added load of the increased cost of building at this time; and I suggest that in the gentleman's community and in every other community where that situation has occurred, instead of abandoning their program, they should take that 25 per cent and build a less number of houses and pay for them entirely, and to that extent solve the problem.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, gentlemen, the Navy presented some estimates here totaling more than $20,000,000. Some of them came in as late as 5 o'clock Saturday. I do not think there is any excuse for estimates to be sent to Congress that late in the fiscal year. Eighteen million dollars of those estimates was to provide additional facilities in connection with training camps for the personnel of the Navy. It is a matter that ought to have been brought to the attention of the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Committee on Appropriations did not feel warranted in interfering with the jurisdiction of the Committee on Naval Affairs by taking up that matter. It was not presented as being so pressing as to require that it be done, and the information with which the estimates were submitted was too meager to warrant us in so doing.

We have in the past appropriated considerable moneys on the requests of the departments in order that the war should go on. We are going to continue to do it where it is necessary. But we have reached a time when the departments ought to be able in a more regular form to present estimates and a justification for them.

And in this remaining minute I desire to say just this touching the committee's policy, as I said the other day: We have endeavored to deny no single dollar to the Government necessary to the prosecution of this war, and we have given it without regard to the burden that it lays upon the people, because in war you can not think of that phase; you must think only what needs to be done. Just because that is true the committee has endeavored as far as possible to eliminate those things which do not bear direct relationship to the war, and I repeat what has been said so frequently here, that upon the administrative officers of the Government rests the responsibility and in most cases the only security for the correct expenditure of these huge sums. No committee of Congress could possibly so investigate details as to be responsible for such amounts of expenditure. They have to trust these administrative officers, and they have the right to expect that they will exercise the utmost care in expenditure. What we need to do is to impress and reimpress upon them this responsibility, and bring home to every American the need of his cooperation. The war is going to cost enough, the burdens it lays in blood and treasure are going to be heavy enough, without being added to by inefficiency, extravagance, or greed of men. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 11247) providing for the protection of the uniform of friendly nations, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 12633) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has 18 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the subcommittee that prepared this bill and reported it to the full committee for its consideration. Much of work has been expended upon its preparation. I have here before me substantially 300 pages of closely printed hearings. The sum carried by the bill is a very large one, aggregating $992,058,993. Yet you may ask, "Did you cut out things unnecessarily? Did you cut them out without investigation?" I answer no. There was as thorough investigation as could be made in the time that the committee had at its disposal, including sometimes nights, most times days, and sometimes not going to church on Sundays.

I agree substantially to the appropriations recommended. I want, if you will allow me, to exclude myself a moment from the remarks I make. The Committee on Appropriations with respect to this and other bills, especially since war was declared, has worked very diligently in recommending appropriations to the House for its consideration. I do not believe that we have failed to recommend sufficient appropriations from time to time. This is the third deficiency bill that we have passed during this session. The others were much larger—especially the first, as I recollect it—than this one.

Now, I want to say another thing. Most of the great expenditures that are being made for preparations for war have had to be made for preparations from the stump, if you will allow me, because it was preparation all along the line. The timber was growing in the forest, but we had to have lumber. We had to have lumber adapted to shipbuilding; we had to have lumber adapted to the making of aeroplanes; we had to have lumber adapted to the construction of cantonments—lumber galore. That had to be transported. Then, faster than we could construct the cantonments, working under stress, the soldiers were enlisting and were being drafted. Not only cantonments, but you had to have roads and drainage and hospitals, and all that constituted further plants; not only to prepare the men for the performance of their duties in war, in the Navy as well as in the Army, but you had to have munitions. I doubt if from the time of the Garden of Eden to the present time there has ever been in so short a time such an extraordinary expenditure of money to prepare a people for war. Not only for the Army but for the Navy we had to create things from matter where the hand of labor had not made it useful for humanity for either war or peace, substantially from the rough.

Now, then, it was impossible without something of waste for this great work to be done. Of course, looking through the hindsights we can make criticisms now that we could not foresee in the beginning. I think there has been much of waste. Some of it might have been avoided, in my judgment, if we had it to do over again. Here and there there has been something of graft, I have no doubt; something of needlessly expensive construction. But it was done under stress.

Now, I want to say further one word before I say a word about the housing proposition. Your committee and the House after getting reports from the various committees on appropriations have performed their duty well. No man and no committee under these conditions could intelligently have examined all the estimates and intelligently recommended appropriations. Hence the necessity of appropriating what seemed to be in sight. But we went further, and we authorized by the law the expenditure of money without any limit being placed upon it for war preparation. Hence deficiency bills are necessary. When the historian comes to write up the happenings during this war we shall get some new lights. I am not prepared to criticize appropriations and expenditures, and I do not know that anything is to be gained by criticism at this time. The truth is, it is not for the want of appropriation, it is not for the want of money, it is not for the want of revenue, but if there be shortcomings they are for the want of proper expenditure of the money gathered by taxation in preparation for the great struggle.

I do not believe anybody living or anybody who has lived could have been perfect in the expenditure; but after the money is appropriated we are practically dependent upon the Executive for an efficient expenditure of that great amount. And no one man can do it. No one man can form an organization and boss the whole thing. He must have great blocks of people, each an expert at his post; and true greatness is shown in the choice of the experts, the choice of the right men in the Army and the Navy and all along the line to exercise a wise discretion and see to it that these men have not only patriotism but competency to make these great expenditures wisely after the great power is bestowed.

Now, just a word in reference to the matter of housing. I have listened to what the chairman of the committee [Mr. SHERLEY] has said on that subject. He has only just touched it. I have no time to say even as much about it as he has said. A short time ago, May 16, the first housing bill passed, which was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Do you know what was intended then? I will not read it all, but I will give you what I want to call attention to. That appropriation was for the acquirement of land and the building of houses. Was it for peace? No; for war. Was it to work out a policy by which we would spend multiplied hundreds of millions of dollars in permanent construction to last for a generation? No; it was the sense of Congress on the 16th day of May that this policy was to last only during the continuation of the existing war. It was a war measure. Hence as the money was appropriated for Army and Navy and munition plants authority was given by proper construction that the housing should be temporary within the spirit of the act which provides for housing. Then consideration was had of the proposition that the people who got great contracts, many times running into hundreds of millions of dollars, should help furnish the housing, and that the communities should help furnish the housing, and power was given for furnishing transportation, and so on. Well, some arrangements were made, I think, almost ready for completion. Then came seemingly a change of policy, looking to the building of permanent housing.

I do not know that I would have much objection to building permanent housing if you could pick out the places to build it, provided it was absolutely necessary. I do not believe any expenditure of this kind is necessary in New York, for instance, or Boston or Philadelphia. Possibly an expenditure is necessary at Norfolk and here and there at the yards where the Government is constructing ship-building plants. In my judgment, it would have better if it was all temporary. But it seems, as nearly as we can gather, that there is to be a change of policy, and that the housing is to be permanent. The selections for permanent construction ought to be wisely made, because we have no use for anything except temporary housing when this war closes. Take, for example, the arsenal at Rock Island, where a plant was established a generation ago. There are Rock Island and Moline on the eastern shore and Davenport just across the Mississippi River on the west, with bridges so that you can go back and forth, and with interurban transportation. We have 18,000 people employed there without the Government having helped a particle to house anybody. But an estimate is made that they want 5,000 more employees at Rock Island. My judgment is that that community with its transportation both in Iowa and in Illinois could furnish the housing necesary for those additional 5,000 people. But there is an estimate here for an expenditure of $8,000,000. Well, that is a Government improvement. The arsenal is a permanent institution. But many of them are scattered all over the country which are to be temporary. Wherever it can be done, buildings should be temporary

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The houses in Washington are to be temporary, are they not?

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. MADDEN. They ought to be, because when the war is over people who own property in this city will have to give it away if we are going to build houses and the Government conduct them as a business enterprise.

Mr. CANNON. I say no, but the chairman of the committee will correct me if I am wrong. I state it as I recollect it, that under the modified proposition land is to be acquired in part, with public reservations, to be utilized for the construction of permanent buildings. Am I right, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. SHERLEY. To be permanent wherever temporary construction would not supply the needs.

Mr. CANNON. But I am asked as to the construction in Washington.

Mr. SHERLEY. In Washington, so far as it relates to the housing of employees in the departments, I understand it is to be entirely on public land, without the purchase of land, and is to be temporary in the sense that buildings for housing the departments are temporary.

Mr. CANNON. I think the whole hearings will show that that may be so in part, but I think it was anticipated that land was to be bought for the Navy Yard housing.

Mr. SHERLEY. So far as housing employees for the Government Navy Yard, yes; but I was speaking of the department clerks.

Mr. MADDEN. If I may be permitted to interrupt, I think it is a very unwise policy to establish permanent housing facilities under the control of the Government in the city of Washington at Government expense.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not my understanding that it is expected that after the war the Government will continue to own and run these houses. The idea is to dispose of them right away.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. I had a part in preparation of the bill authorizing this appropriation. The foundation for this appropriation, as I understand it, and as I know it to exist, was that the Department of Labor asked for these housing facilities. The Secretary of Labor was asked personally if it was to be a permanent policy of the Government, and he said, "No." He stated furthermore that wherever Government buildings could be established, like the city of Washington, where the supply of labor might be diminished after the war, or Hog Island and numerous places where war industries have been inaugurated and where the population after the war would drift elsewhere, the buildings were to be temporary. But in some cities—like Rock Island, as mentioned, for instance—it was admitted that it might be permanent and sold when this emergency is past.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BARNHART. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate has expired. It was limited in the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest that the Clerk read the first paragraph in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, namely:

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Now I yield to the gentleman from Indiana to complete his statement.

Mr. BARNHART. I had stated that in cities like Rock Island and other places where permanent Government institutions are established and where housing is needed, such should be built on a permanent basis, with a view to selling at the close of the war.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman has mentioned Rock Island. I have a kindly feeling for Rock Island. It is in Illinois, and we like our own. Nature made Rock Island for an arsenal and for munitions. It is a very extensive plant. I know a number of people there. There are 18,000 people that work in Rock Island Arsenal, and they are housed. Rock Island and Davenport are wonderfully rich in soil and every other way, west of the Mississippi and east of the Mississippi. It has wonderful transportation facilities. It has several great manufacturing companies. It is a wonderfully wealthy section of the country from every standpoint. I have no doubt but what Rock Island, as far as private plants are concerned, that permanent Government plants could be builded to make munitions—to make everything that is necessary for war. I have no doubt that the growth of that portion of the country is so great that they would be glad to build the houses and either lease or sell them to the employees. I apprehended that many if not most of them own their houses. I am not sure of that, but I make that kind of a guess.

Now, what I want, without criticizing anybody, without criticizing the administration, without criticizing the Department of Labor, without criticizing the organization it has made with Mr. Eidlitz at the head, with this vast power during this war, I want every dollar to be expended, every effort to be made that can be made to enable our people to help conquer a peace in Europe that will spread when we have conquered it throughout the whole world. At whatever the cost may be, I stand ready, in season and out of season, while I occupy a seat on the floor of this House, to vote it. I want to sin, if I sin at all, in voting too much rather than voting too little. But I want to protest, here and now, against newspaper talk, against intimations on the floor of the House and elsewhere, against talking on the street, against agitation throughout the country, that in taking over railroads we will keep them forever and a day; that we are going to do everything in a new order; that when the war is over this new order will continue; that the United States of America on land and sea will own everything and manage everything. [Applause.] I do not assent to that proposition. Ours is a government by the people, for the people, upon their own initiative, under the law governing demand and supply, in the development of the new world, and when our part of it is developed and settled as it is in Europe we will have from seven to eight hundred million people. Nature has given us almost unlimited wealth, and we have done very well with it since our Constitution was adopted. Three times and over have we multiplied the population since 1860. Somebody suggested there were 30,000 miles of short-line railroads in this country. That would leave 230,000 miles of other than short-line railroads.

We have as many miles of short-line railroad now as we had of all railroads in existence in the United States in 1860. How marvelous has been our development! How has it been accomplished? By somebody saying that the Government was running everything? We elect the House of Representatives every two years and one-third of the Senate every two years, and we elect a President once in four years. I believe in the Government doing everything it ought to do, but I do not listen with patience to the cry that is sometimes uttered or intimated on the floor of this House, that is being heralded throughout the press to a greater or less extent, that we will take from the individual the initiative. They say, "My God, the plutocrat!" I wish the House was in full attendance, and I would call upon the 435 Members to rise up, every man who has made his way from the street in the city a poor boy, or from the farm a poor boy, or the mechanic, who is now in Congress. I would ask them to stand up. I want to keep our country and make it worth fighting for and preserving. Civilization rests upon the hustle of the unit, first, to care for yourself, your family, and for the hearthstone. I have seen this House change substantially since I have served in it at least three times, and as I have gone along and read the Congressional Directory and have become acquainted with the membership, I have noticed that the men, on the average, were, in youth, the newsboys, the boys who attended the common school in the city and in the country—the boy who has made his way; the boy who, under the hand of necessity, at the age of 9 or 10 or 11 or 12, helped to support the growing family, helped to make his own way—the boy of good brawn.

God preserve us from having somebody presiding over us and saying that industry and ability shall count for nothing. I often think of that wonderful old myth of the Greeks. Hercules had 12 tasks to perform, as I recollect; he was half divine and half human. He accomplished 11 of them, but he was yet to accomplish the twelfth, to overcome Antaeus. He then consulted his mother and she gave him the secret of the strength of Antaeus, which was that every time Antaeus touched the earth he had his strength renewed. With that knowledge Hercules in conflict with Antaeus thrust his arms about Antaeus and squeezed him to death, holding him in the air so that he could not renew his strength by touching the earth, and in that way he vanquished Antaeus.

Men are sorry for the children of the poor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Men, I say, sometimes say that they are sorry for the children of the poor. My young life and parts of my mature life have been passed in the Middle West, among the pioneers. I recollect when they pioneered to the West, and I know what it meant—the log cabin; the butternut clothing; the patriotic, cheerful mother who spun the wool and wove it on the old-fashioned wooden loom and colored it with butternut and cut and made the garments. I know what it means. I can take a country comprised in two or three counties on the Wabash where it was worth a man's life to bring 80 acres of land under subjection and raise a family, and I can count, stretching from Illinois and Indiana west across the continent, the children and the grandchildren of those pioneer people who in the grand aggregate have been the great factors in developing that country. Some of them will stand in history second to no one. They helped found the Republic and preserve it. I am not sorry for the children of the poor, but I sometimes am sorry for the children of the rich, who reap where they have not sown and grow up without skill and frequently without character.

I once made a speech on Lincoln's birthday anniversary in Pittsburgh. I looked around that great building, and I said to the man sitting beside me, "In this thousand of people who are here at this great banquet, how much of wealth is there?" I sat at the right hand of the presiding official. Said he, "CANNON, I suspect that the aggregate wealth of these people assembled here must be four or five hundred million dollars." Said I, "Call the roll." They were middle-aged men, here and there an old man, a few comparatively young men. Who are they? Why, So-and-so, So-and-so, So-and-so. Where do they get their wealth? They made their way—the answer was—they are captains of industry, employers of labor. Where did they get their education? The reply was, "The great mass of them got their education in common schools." Under the hand of necessity they made their way. "Why, I recollect many, and I could point out quite a number who were newsboys." At the conclusion of my remarks touching Lincoln and his great services, I ventured to call attention to what this gentleman had said, and I asked the question, "Who will assemble in this or some similar hall 50 years from now on a like occasion to celebrate Lincoln's birthday anniversary?" And I answered my own question by saying that to find them we would have to go out now upon the streets and take the children, the newsboys, to find the children of the mechanics who are under the hand of necessity and who must hustle.

Mr. Chairman, I grow aweary sometimes when I hear some people talk about plutocrats. Good God, plutocrats! According to the opinion in which the successful seem to be held by some, then, to find the most worthless population on earth we must go to the great State of Iowa, where the per capita wealth is $3,539, as against the per capita wealth in the State of New York, as I recollect it, of $2,626. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], always interesting, usually argumentative, and generally right, except politically, has given logical observations in his remarks, and with most of them I quite agree.

It has always been my theory, and I believe a theory of the Government of my country, that the individual should never ask of a township what he can do for himself; that the township ought not to ask of the county what the township can do for itself; that the county ought not to ask of the State what the county can do for itself; and that the State ought not to ask of the Government what it can do for itself. I believe that it is a mistaken idea, if anybody has such housed up in his head anywhere, that this Government ought to establish a policy to provide homes for its people. I have said on the floor of this House on a previous occasion that I believe that if all of the demands that some interests have made were granted, viz, that if all of the people who work were given to understand that at the end of 20 years or so, during which time they have obtained good wages, they were then to be retired on a pension and the Government had to provide them with an abode, this country of ours, self-dependent as its people have been in all the years of its existence, in 50 years from that date would be the greatest nation of laggards beneath the sun. And so I am opposed to Government ownership of homes.

But here was a situation, Mr. Chairman, that confronted the committee that had to do with the authorization of this appropriation. The departments of the Government that have to do with the employment of labor came before our committee and presented facts to show us conclusively that many of these places where munition factories and shipbuilding plants are being established are necessarily in isolated places, because they must be located remote from cities, and that with the price of material as it is to-day and property going higher and higher, the wages of labor higher than ever known before, the prospect of private capital building houses for these people is so very remote, with emergency pressing in the preparations for the war in which we are engaged, they asked that $50,000,000 might be authorized, which was finally increased to $60,000,000—$10,000,000 of that to be used in the city of Washington—for the purpose of providing housing in several ways. One was by providing transportation to carry workmen from these factories to the city nearby, where houses might be obtained, to encourage capital to build housing by the Government loaning part of the money, by conducting surveys in the cities of the country near where these plants are established to see just how much housing was available there, and to build housing as a temporary relief and built in such a way that at the end of the war it could be taken down and removed for the salvage there is in it. Now, these were the propositions which were presented to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. We left nothing undone to ascertain facts from the officials interested, the Secretary of Labor, Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy, and from Mr. Eidlitz himself.

And when I speak of Mr. Eidlitz, I did not then know him; he was a stranger to me, but I did learn on looking the matter up that he had been given some of the most important positions of trust within the State of New York when former President Roosevelt and former Judge Hughes were governors of that State, and we found him, as we believed, trustworthy to take care of this important matter. He asked that he be given the liberty, or that the Department of Labor be given the liberty, to provide any sort of houses they could get to the very best advantage of the Government and its needs, and if they found that capital would not provide enough housing to take care of the employees in places where permanent institutions are established, then they asked that they might build permanent houses and that they might be sold at the close of the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARNHART. Just one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARNHART. In the city of Washington and in many places like it, where this great influx of labor will go hence when the war is over, it is asked that ample housing be established for the purpose of inducing help to come here and be satisfied to remain as long as their services are needed. This is a war-emergency enterprise of most important necessity to the efficiency of the Government. After we have won the war, if we will pay labor the wages it earns, we can abandon this temporary Government housing, and labor will gladly furnish its own homes and be more prosperous and happy in them than if provided at public expense. Labor wants to be independent, and it should and can be so if it is treated fairly and then treats itself fairly.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee and the House for a few moments to a consideration of the question of a recess. There has been a general understanding among the Members of the House and the Senate that there is to be a recess of from four to six weeks entered into by an agreement of the House and Senate. I believe, gentlemen, that conditions have arisen that make such action on our part unwise. I think it will be unwise for the House, under existing conditions, to attempt to recess for more than three days at a time, and I want to suggest two or three reasons for that position. In the first place, we are not in the condition in which it was supposed we would be at this time. Legislation will require at least all of this week, and if it is finished by that time, according to the definitely understood program, or the indefinitely understood program, it will have to be hurried beyond a proper consideration of such important legislation. I want to call the attention of the committee to the bill for the support of the Army, which we have just sent to conference and which is now under consideration by the conferees. It is now more than twice as large in its provisions as it was when it went to the Senate. Nearly all the amendments which have been offered, and they are numerous, are new legislation regarding the Army. I have taken the pains to go through the bill, and have noted the titles of the more important amendments containing the proposed legislation, and these are some of the things that are to be considered by the conferees and afterwards by the House: The appointment of staff corps in the line of the Army; taking over the Palace of Fine Arts at the Presidio, San Francisco; increase in the Medical Department of the Army; provisions for drafted or enlisted men detailed for work; bands for the Engineer Corps; equipment, maintenance, and training of foreign troops; the organization of a Slavic legion; organization of a Russian legion; provision for medals of honor for distinguished service; provisions changing longevity pay; provisions for the purchase of real estate for military purposes; provisions regarding the Army Nurse Corps; claims for loss of private property; Army mine-planter service; amending the Articles of War, three sections, extending over several pages; disposition of the effects of deceased persons; method of determining quotas for military service; raising the age limit in the Staff Corps; prohibiting prostitution near cantonments; establishment of an international social-hygiene board; commandeering of timber; establishing an aircraft construction corporation; amending the national defense act; providing pay of certain enlisted men, covering many pages; giving power to the President to increase the drafted army, also covering many pages.

This is legislation that has never been considered by the House, but which must now be considered by the conferees and reported to both the House and the Senate, and by them considered and passed upon.

And that is not all. We have before us several other important bills for consideration, bills that are too important for hurried consideration. It is not expected and it is not justified that we shall give slight consideration to such important legislation as this.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman would not argue that it would take any great length of time to kill most of that stuff, would he, if the conferees would agree to do it?

Mr. TOWNER. I think some of it ought to be killed, and I think perhaps some of it is necessary legislation. But neither you nor I, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], can at this time determine what ought to be passed and what ought to be killed. It is urged upon us as emergency legislation, and as such certainly ought to receive the consideration of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to unduly curtail debate, but the gentleman is not discussing matters before the committee. It is important that this bill should go through. There are a number of conference reports waiting on us. Whether we adjourn or not, we ought to get the supply bills through.

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was expecting to yield and promised to yield me 10 minutes of time.

Mr. SHERLEY. I shall not object to five minutes extension, but ask that the Members shall confine themselves to the bill.

Mr. TOWNER. I shall not continue my discussion beyond the five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TOWNER. I want to call attention also, gentlemen, to some very important matters that are likely to be considered by the House and, I believe, considered by the House in the very near future.

The announcement is made, gentlemen, that there is an impending strike among the telegraphers of the United States, making a very serious condition, as all understand. The announcement has also been made, somewhat informally, that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce are reporting or considering reporting a bill for taking over the telegraph systems of this country. That ought to receive the careful consideration of the House. It ought not to be considered lightly; it ought not to be determined upon a short and hurried debate. It is too important a matter to be thus lightly passed over.

And I want to call the attention of gentlemen further to this fact: I was talking with an Army officer but yesterday, and he said to me that he had more apprehension regarding the next German offensive than any offensive that had yet been put in operation, because, he said, this would be the supreme and perhaps last effort to break through the American lines. He said that it would be aimed particularly against the American forces to make the United States feel that it will not pay to carry on the war longer. He said that he would not be surprised if 10,000 American casualties were reported to the United States each day the offensive continued. Gentlemen, if that is the condition of affairs, if things are so vital, if such a crisis exists across the waters as that, the people of the United States will feel that Congress ought to be within call. It seems to me, gentlemen, that it is most unwise for us to tie up the legislation of the country for five or six weeks under these conditions. I sincerely hope that this House will not, because of its desire for a vacation, assume such a responsibility. I believe it is incumbent upon us who are here, notwithstanding many are anxious to get away, notwithstanding many have even arranged to get away, to oppose any recess that will prevent the consideration of emergency legislation for any considerable time.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. COX. Does not he think it wiser for the House to remain here until the revenue bill is passed before adjournment is taken?

Mr. TOWNER. I think it unwise to adjourn, so that Congress can not be called almost immediately to meet any emergency. Perhaps a three-day recess after a little might be arranged, but certainly nothing more than that.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman understand that the proposed plan for a recess meets with the approval of the President and the administration?

Mr. TOWNER. I understand that the matter was presented to the President before any of these things I am now calling attention to were called to his attention. I can not believe the President would desire Congress to be away at such a crisis as this in the affairs of the Nation. Personally I am opposed to any adjournment of this Congress that will prevent our being here when needed during the summer, and I hope that the Congress will not take any action that will prevent that being done.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a suggestion or two that I hope will reach the ears of those who will be responsible for the expenditure of this money for housing. In some sections of the country there is no congested condition. There are more houses than there are people. Take it in my own city, for instance, and since the war began so many people have been called away to other sections of the country that in the township of Englewood, representing a part of the congressional district in which Mr. Wilson lives, there are over 11,000 empty residences. That is only one very small fraction of the city. There are over 50,000 idle men in the city. Most of those men are builders, and I hope that those who are to be responsible for the expenditure of this money for housing, wherever it can be done, will let the building by contract.

I believe that you can build more cheaply to-day in most sections of the country than you could build at any time during the last four or five years—not that building material is not high but that labor is idle. Take, for example, this case: I had a house to paint just a short time ago. I thought I would not paint it. I thought the painting job would cost a great deal more than I could afford to pay. One of the best concerns in the United States suggested that this was the best time to paint, as white lead was not being used in the Government work; that the board in control of the painting system in the war activities had adopted a kind of paint that would wash off with every rain; that it contained no white lead. I asked that concern to bid on the buildings that I had to paint. The cheapest I ever had these buildings painted before was at a cost of $1,100. To my surprise the bid of this concern was $995. I suggested to them that I would add some interior decoration in connection with the outside work that would amount to about $280, and I would give them $1,000. The representative of this concern said: "All right; I will take the job. I have men begging for work, and I am glad to find employment for them." And the job is done. [Laughter.]

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. VARE. I was going to suggest that the gentleman might advise his friends in Chicago to come to Philadelphia.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, Philadelphia is surrounded by shipbuilding. That is one of the congested places.

Mr. VARE. So much the more reason why we should have that good labor that is out there.

Mr. MADDEN. They have taken all the men they could find to Philadelphia and other places. My suggestion is that they should take some of the activities away from Philadelphia and New York and Newport News and Charleston, S. C., and a few of these places down South here, and add them to the Central West, where the men are now idle and paying taxes on their empty houses, trying to find employment at any price.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to repeat again that I hope, in the construction of the buildings which they are authorized to construct out of these appropriations, those who are responsible for the expenditure will take advantage of every opportunity to employ the labor that is now idle and let the work out by contract instead of letting it on the cost-plus basis.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is speaking about transferring some of these activities in the Central West. You could not build ships at Elmwood, could you?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know where Elmwood is.

Mr. WALSH. Is not that the town the gentleman named?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I said Englewood. We could build ships there. We have in the Calumet River there a body of water where we build ships by private enterprise, but the Government has failed to see the importance of building any ships for the Government there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Another thing that I would like to call attention to while I am on my feet is the fact that the Director General of Railroads, in the order fixing the new rates, has destroyed railroad movement in the State of Illinois. He has imposed a burden upon the people of the State such as they have never dreamed of. He makes the claim that he is raising the railroad rates 25 per cent, but he has taken no account whatever of classification or commodity rates, and instead of the rates being increased 25 per cent they have been increased all the way from 50 to 75 per cent. They have taken away all the power of the railroad commission of the State. They have made it impossible for the State to understand what the railroad situation is to be. They have imposed on the taxpayers and consumers an extra burden that they will be unable to bear.

In addition to taking away all the war industries while collecting the war revenue, they now propose to impose further unjust and unusual and unthought-of burdens upon the consuming public of the State. I propose to-morrow to introduce a resolution of inquiry to find out why it is that the State of Illinois, patriotic, with its 600,000 men drafted into the Army or ready to be drafted into the Army, is to be discriminated against in every form which can be thought of by anybody connected with the administration. We do not propose to submit idly or quietly to that sort of discrimination; and we do propose, if it is possible, to find out why. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois rose.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read. There is nothing pending before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] is seeking recognition.

Mr. SHERLEY. The debate has been exhausted on this measure.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I would like to speak for five minutes relative to the housing proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to get these conference reports through.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Then I will not take the time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 4569) to establish the Mount Desert National Park, in the State of Maine, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 3332. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell and convey certain land to the city of Faribault, Minn.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE.

HOUSING FOR WAR NEEDS.

The authorization fixed by section 8 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs," approved May 16, 1918, is increased from $60,000,000 to $110,000,000, and there is appropriated for the purposes thereof, including rental of offices in the District of Columbia, contingent and miscellaneous expenses, printing and binding, and personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $50,000,000, to be expended in accordance with the authority and under the conditions prescribed in the said act as amended by the deficiency appropriation act approved June 4, 1918, and to continue available during the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in the debate on this matter allusions have been made to the housing proposition; and inasmuch as the particular locality from which I come has been the subject of discussion, I have sought recognition at this time, because I have thought perhaps I might throw some light upon that particular subject.

When this matter of housing first came up it was evident to anyone who heard the discussion that the necessity for some housing existed; that it was impossible for the Government to carry on its war activities without making some provision for the people who should work in them. But at that time it was also evident to anyone who gave any attention to the matter, that there were two classes of problems presented, one having to do with the men engaged in industries where they were working on war contracts for the time being, and the other having to do with men who worked in permanent plants of the Government given over to the making of munitions of war. In the one case it was stated in the discussion that it was evident that the only thing we ought to do was to build temporary shelters for the people who were working there, because as soon as the war was over these employees would scatter and go back to their ordinary vocations, and no further necessity would exist for the continuance of these temporary shelters. But in places like the city of Rock Island, where a great Government arsenal is located, it was evident that it appeared greatly to the advantage of the Government to build permanent houses for the employees, so that the Government in the years to come might have the advantage of a class of people working there who were steady, industrious, who owned their own houses, and who were naturally the best class of workmen. Now, I want to tell you something about what happened up there to that particular locality when this war broke out. There were then working there about 1,600 men in this arsenal. Immediately their numbers began to expand wonderfully, and there came in from the little towns all around there the mechanics and men who could do work of that sort, until now, as shown by this estimate, there are 18,000 men employed there, and there will be 23,000 before the year is over. Now, in order to keep these men you have got to furnish permanent homes for them. Most of them are men above the draft age. They are mostly men with families. They want to live in their own homes, they want their children to go to school, and you must furnish places for that sort of men to live, or they will not stay there. My colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is right, in a degree, when he says most of the men live in their own homes. That is true of the men who have been working there, who were there before the outbreak of the war, but you have suddenly dumped into that community somewhere from 15,000 to 21,000 more, and in a community of 100,000 people you can readily appreciate that you can not take care of that sort of an influx of labor in the houses that are already there. The Government must help to house them, and it is necessary to have this sort of a law.

This community, after the passage of the housing act, as well as many other communities all over the country, were preparing themselves to go in with the Government as a joint enterprise in the building of these houses. I know, because I was in constant communication with the Bureau of Housing up to the time this order came from the Secretary of Labor. They were preparing their contracts by which they were going to contribute to the erection of these houses and share with the Government the responsibility of this burden, along the lines that the Government asked for. But suddenly there came from the Department of Labor an order to discontinue immediately all these activities, to do away with the corporations that had been formed, to do away with all individual participation, and that the Government would take up this work as an individual obligation of the Government and continue the housing by itself.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Of course, when the thing is over there will be a great reduction in the number of men employed in this Government plant.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Naturally.

Mr. McKENZIE. When that occurs, if the Government has these permanent homes built there, naturally the men will live in them if it is possible to do so.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, what is going to be the effect on the property owners in the city of Rock Island and in the city of Moline who own their own houses?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], I may say the effect will depend upon how the Department of Labor does its work in that community. As I view it, the thing you want now is housing. The thing that must be furnished now is housing for these employees. You have got to have these men at these industrial institutions at Rock Island, Springfield, Mass., and every other place where men are working. You have got to keep them, and in order to keep them you must have as an inducement a place where men can live decently. After the war is over a different proposition presents itself. I do not believe that the Government should change its idea so much as to go into a scheme of community housing and to embark upon some fanciful scheme of building community towns for industrial workers where we need temporary housing only for war purposes. The thing we want to do is to win the war and take care of the workmen so that they may live in comfort while they work in those temporary war activities. I state, as I have said before, that where houses can be made after the war is over as a part of the permanent plan of the Government they should be made permanent, because that is efficiency and economy; but where they can not, they ought to be temporary, because these things are going to end after the war is over. The fear in my mind is that the Government, which is responsible for the administration of this law, will forget that we are doing this thing as a war measure and will rather pursue the scheme of housing for communities that will lead us into the depths of extravagance and the expenditure of money that we do not know of now and will take us years to accomplish. I think something of that kind is in the mind of every man who has debated this proposition. Judging from what I know of the community from which I come and from what I have heard in this House, the officers of the Government who are charged with the administration of this law ought to know that it is the idea of Congress that we are doing this thing as a war emergency, as a war measure, and that we are not attempting to go into any permanent scheme of community housing at this time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Support of convicts: For support, maintenance, and transportation of convicts transferred from the District of Columbia, expenses of shipping remains of deceased convicts to their homes in the United States, and expenses of interment of unclaimed remains of deceased convicts, expenses incurred in identifying and pursuing escaped convicts and rewards for their recapture, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $15,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, line 23, page 7, I move to strike out the figures "15,000" and insert "10,000."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 23, strike out "15,000" and insert in lieu thereof "10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

One-half of the foregoing amounts to meet deficiencies in appropriations on account of the District of Columbia, except as otherwise provided herein, shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to ask the chairman a question. I observe in the last paragraph that the half-and-half principle is being carried out. Will the settlement of that point in controversy between the two Houses have any effect on this item?

Mr. SHERLEY. Not at all; this is for the fiscal year 1918, which ended last night.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of clerks and other employees of the commission detailed to work in France and who may be authorized by the commission to adjudicate claims for compensation and perform such other duties as the commission may direct; for per diem in lieu of subsistence, not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, rent, printing and binding, and all other necessary expenses for carrying on the work of the commission in France, fiscal year 1919, $25,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the necessity that requires the employees and clerks of the employees' compensation division to perform part of their duty in France?

Mr. SHERLEY. The fact that we have 300,000 or 400,000 civilian employees entitled to compensation under the compensation act for injury and death and the need of having people on the ground to investigate claims to ascertain the facts establishing third-party liability where such liability exists, and the impracticability of doing it by mail.

Mr. WALSH. Are not these civilian employees under direction of military officials?

Mr. SHERLEY. They may be under the direction of the military officials, but they are within the provisions of the law touching civilian employees of the Government and are entitled to compensation under the act. It has been found practically impossible to audit claims looking to matters of that kind, but the Treasury is doing its auditing there, and they believe that inasmuch as these claims may amount to a considerable sum, and frequently investigation on the ground establishes a third-party liability to the exclusion of Government liability, it is often economy to have the force there.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On page 9, I want to ask about the item of $9,400 for these employees—seven clerks at $1,200 each and one clerk at $1,000 for the fiscal year 1919. Is that the commission of which President Taft is a member?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no; this is a commission that is created under the compensation act for the purpose of adjusting claims for Government employees who are injured.

Mr. ROBBINS. It has nothing to do with wages?

Mr. SHERLEY. Nothing in the world.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is it under the compensation act entirely?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The amounts collected from exporters for cable charges during the fiscal year 1919 shall be credited to the appropriation for the War Trade Board and be available for the purposes thereof during the said fiscal year.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I notice in line 12, page 11, that the word "fiscal" is misspelled.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that it be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will correct the spelling of the word.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

Section of surety bonds: For the amount necessary to increase from $1,000 to $1,200 the pay of a clerk provided in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, $200.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 11, lines 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, strike out lines 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the reason for that is this: The subcommittee, at the urgent instance of representatives of the Treasury, agreed to this increase of from $1,000 to $1,200 in the pay of the clerk in the section of surety bonds, but on fuller investigation in the full committee the statements made by the chairman of the subcommittee of the legislative bill made us believe that the increase was not warranted, and therefore I move to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is authorized, for the official purposes of the War Department, and within the limits of the appropriations for rent made by this or any other act making appropriations for the War Department, to requisition the use of, and take possession of, any building or any space in any building, and the appurtenances thereof, in the District of Columbia, other than a dwelling house occupied as such or a building occupied by any other branch of the United States Government, and he shall ascertain and pay just compensation for such use. If the amount of compensation so ascertained be not satisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of such amount and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation for such use in the manner provided by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145, of the Judicial Code.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the spelling of the word "Department" in line 20, page 13.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mileage: For mileage to commissioned officers, members of the officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty, contract surgeons, expert accountants, Inspector General's Department, Army field clerks, and field clerks of the Quartermaster Corps, when authorized by law, $2,750,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Can the gentleman state whether the commissioned officers and members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and these other officials when traveling on official duty are obliged to pay the increased passenger-fare rates that have recently gone into effect.

Mr. SHERLEY. So far as I know, yes; though I have no information about it.

Mr. WALSH. Has the committee given any consideration to a plan whereby these officials might, during the control of the railroads by the Government, travel without expense being charged up in this way?

Mr. SHERLEY. We have not considered that. Of course, this mileage is not entirely to pay just the actual expenses to the railroad. Under the law the officers are entitled to mileage of so much. It is somewhat similar to the mileage allowed Members of Congress, though less in amount.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clothing and camp and garrison equipage: For cloth, woolens, materials, and for the purchase and manufacture of clothing for the Army, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, for issue and for sale at cost price according to the Army Regulations; for payment for clothing not drawn due to enlisted men on discharge; for altering and fitting clothing and washing and cleaning when necessary; for equipment and repair of equipment of laundries, dry-cleaning plants, salvage and sorting storehouses, hat-repairing shops, shoe-repair shops, clothing-repair shops, tent-repair shops, and garbage-reduction works; for educational propaganda in connection with reclamation; for equipage including authorized issues of toilet articles, barbers' and tailors' materials, for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances and applicants for enlistment while held under observation; issue of toilet kits to recruits upon their first enlistment, and issue of housewives to the Army; for expenses of packing and handling, and similar necessaries; for a suit of citizens' outer clothing, to cost not exceeding $10, to be issued upon release from confinement to each prisoner who has been confined under a court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge; for indemnity to officers and men of the Army for clothing and bedding, etc., destroyed since April 22, 1898, by order of medical officers of the Army for sanitary reasons, $712,232,605.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Is this the item to which the gentleman referred in general debate?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, this item was reduced $300,000,000, speaking in round figures, for the reasons I undertook to state in general debate.

Mr. WALSH. I wanted to inquire if this amount will provide the clothing for the new men who have recently been called under the second draft.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is a certain amount of clothing that is on hand, and to that extent that clothing will be issued to the men who come under the new draft, and would have been paid for out of some of this money, but there is also money carried in the Army bill for the same purpose. They have the right to incur deficiencies in connection with food and clothing for the Army.

Mr. WALSH. I notice that a suit of citizen's outer clothing, to cost not exceeding $10, is to be issued upon release from confinement to each prisoner who has been confined under a court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is simply the language carried in the ordinary bill; we did not go into that matter at all. We carried the usual language that is carried in the regular Army appropriation bill, and the purpose of that provision appears upon its face.

The Clerk read as follows:

Regular supplies, Quartermaster Corps: Regular supplies of the Quartermaster Corps, including their care and protection; construction and repair of military reservation fences; stoves and heating apparatus required for heating offices, hospitals, barracks and quarters, and recruiting stations, and United States disciplinary barracks; also ranges, stoves, coffee roasters, and appliances for cooking and serving food at posts, in the field, and when traveling, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; and the necessary power for the operation of moving-picture machines; authorized issues of candles and matches; for furnishing heat and light for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty, and enlisted men, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty; contract surgeons when stationed at and occupying public quarters at military posts; for officers of the National Guard attending service and garrison schools, and for recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, offices, the buildings erected at private cost, in the operation of the act approved May 31, 1902; for sale to officers, and including also fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries at established posts; for post bakeries, including bake ovens and apparatus pertaining thereto and the repair thereof; for ice machines and their maintenance where required for the health and comfort of the troops and for cold storage; ice for issue to organizations of enlisted men and offices at such places as the Secretary of War may determine and for preservation of stores; for the construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries at military posts in the United States and its island possessions; for the authorized issues of laundry materials for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances and for applicants for enlistment while held under observation; authorized issues of soap; for hire of employees; for the necessary furniture, textbooks, paper, and equipment for the post schools and libraries and schools for noncommissioned officers; for the purchase and issue of instruments, office furniture, stationery, and other authorized articles for the use of officers' schools at the several military posts; for purchase of relief maps for issue to organizations, commercial newspapers, market reports, etc.; for the tableware and mess furniture for kitchens and mess halls, each and all for the enlisted men, including recruits; of forage, salt, and vinegar for the horses, mules, oxen, and other draft and riding animals of the Quartermaster Corps at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field and for the horses of the several regiments of Cavalry and batteries of Artillery and such companies of Infantry and Scouts as may be mounted; for remounts and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; for seeds and implements required for the raising of forage at remount depots and on military reservations in the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands and for labor and expenses incident thereto, including, when specifically authorized by the Secretary of War, the cost of irrigation; for straw for soldiers' bedding, stationery, typewriters, and exchange of same, including blank books and blank forms for the Quartermaster Corps, certificates for discharged soldiers, and for printing department orders and reports, including $69,955.83 on account of the fiscal year 1917, $90,971,072.06.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose, not of opposing anything in this paragraph, but I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that there is nothing that we provide more cheerfully than money for the preparation and care of our soldiers. Great sacrifices are being made, not in the raising of money by this Nation, but in the furnishing to the world of the American soldier. Almost every household in the land furnishes its contribution. Every Member of this House takes a great deal of pride at different times in putting in the RECORD the achievements of those who have made sacrifices by the furnishing from their families of soldiers for the Army and how many stars they have upon their flag. My home town is a little country town, and they are doing their part, furnishing more than most any town of its size almost in the Nation. I wish to send to the Clerk's desk and have read in my time, Mr. Chairman, a little extract from my town paper showing what an humble family in my town is doing in the way of furnishing men.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the extract in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOULTON, ME., FAMILY PROUDLY FLIES SERVICE FLAG OF NINE STARS—RECORD THAT CAN BE EQUALED BY BUT FEW IN THE WHOLE NATION.

"If I had a son for each star in Old Glory, Uncle Sam, I'd give them all to you."—Popular song.

From many homes throughout our land a service flag has been thrown to the breeze denoting that a member of the household has taken service under the colors.

Some flags show only one star, others two, three, or four stars, but it is believed that to a Houlton family, who has given nine sons to the service of Uncle Sam, is a record that can scarcely be equaled in the whole United States.

It is with just pride that Mrs. Martha Cassidy Crabbe has given her six sons to uphold the honor of the Nation, while her husband, Mr. William Crabbe, has three sons in the various branches of the service, making a total of nine boys from one family who are training for the big drive that will make the world a better and safer place to live in.

Following is a list of the nine men and where located:
Capt. G. P. Cassidy, Dental Corps, Camp Devens, Mass.
Herman Cassidy, Dental Corps, Camp Devens, Mass.
Ernest Cassidy, in France.
Guy Cassidy, medical unit, Fort Porter, N. Y.
Clarence Cassidy, Naval Reserve, Commonwealth Pier, Boston.
Don W. Cassidy, Medical Reserve, awaiting orders.
Leo Crabbe, in France.
Thomas Crabbe, in France.
Louis Crabbe, in France.

The Clerk read as follows:

Civilian military training camps: For the expense of maintaining upon military reservations or elsewhere, camps for the military instruction and training of such citizens physically capable of bearing arms as may be selected under such terms of enlistment and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, and for furnishing said citizens, at the expense of the United States, uniforms, subsistence, transportation by the most usual and direct route within said limits as to territory as may be prescribed; for such expenditures as may be deemed necessary for water, fuel, light, temporary structures, not including quarters for officers nor barracks for men, screening, and damages resulting from field exercises, and other expenses incidental to maintaining said camps and the theoretical winter instruction in connection therewith, including textbooks and stationery; for furnishing such equipments, tentage, field equipage, and transportation belonging to the United States as may be deemed necessary as authorized by section 54 of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1916, $1,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last paragraph, to ask if this is for a continuation of the Plattsburg military training camp for officers?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is for continuation of training-camp activities and to pay——

Mr. WALSH. Such as the Plattsburg camp?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and to pay the indebtedness heretofore incurred for which there was not sufficient money. It is a deficiency in a large measure.

Mr. WALDOW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Can the gentleman from Kentucky inform the committee if there is any intention, if he knows, by the War Department to discontinue the Plattsburg training camp?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not heard anything about it one way or the other.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriations contained herein under the Navy Department and the Naval Establishment shall be available for the payment of obligations on account of the existing emergency incurred prior to the passage of this act and which are properly chargeable to such appropriations.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, after line 22, insert as a center heading the words "Department of the Interior."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Department of the Interior.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out line 4, page 31.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, line 4, strike out line 4.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The preceding paragraph is not in the nature of a deficiency, I assume.

Mr. SHERLEY. The courthouse?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is exactly that. If the gentleman will recall, we are repairing the old courthouse and the cost of the work, due to increased cost of labor and material, to the condition that the foundations were in, and to the need of remodeling very much more extensively the interior, has produced a deficiency which this supplies. The furnishing is new.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman state what the total amount to be expended on the remodeling and furnishing is to be?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the furniture costs $100,000. The $345,000 is to continue the exterior of the building.

Mr. WALSH. Well, what will be the total when it is all completed—how much will have been expended?

Mr. SHERLEY. They had $350,000, so it will be about $700,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. It will be over a million dollars.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I think not. As a result, there will be preserved in Washington what to my mind is one of the most beautiful buildings in Washington, and there will be a building that in decency and usability could not be created anew for twice the amount that has been taken to repair it.

Mr. WALSH. Where is that located?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is down at John Marshall Place.

Mr. STAFFORD. On Judiciary Square?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized to allow in the accounts of the United States marshal for the District of Columbia items aggregating $442.14, covering payments for coal actually supplied and used for heating the building occupied by the Supreme Court for the District of Columbia and offices connected therewith, notwithstanding the failure to have said coal inspected and weighed as required by law.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman of the committee why lines 18 and 19, page 31, fall under the Department of Justice—the National Training School for Boys?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is one of our penal institutions, and has been under the Department of Justice for a number of years.

Mr. FESS. It is a correctional school?

Mr. SHERLEY. A correctional school.

The Clerk read as follows:

Botanic Garden: The limitation of $2 per day on the pay of skilled laborers and laborers in the Botanic Garden, contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, hereby is removed, and skilled laborers and laborers may be employed and paid from such appropriations during the said fiscal year at rates to be fixed by the superintendent.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I present an amendment, to be put at the head of line 1, page 36.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 36, before line 1, insert as a center head the word "legislative."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. Will the chairman of the committee explain the meaning of line 7, page 36, in which the right is given to the superintendent to employ certain labor in connection with the Botanic Garden and fixing the price? There is no limit there. What is the purpose of that?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is a limit on the amount of money that he can expend, because he has only a certain amount of money allowed. Now, he has been limited by statute to $2 a day. The result is that as laborers are getting $3 or $4 a day the superintendent can not hold his labor, and we simply left him the discretion of paying what is reasonable in order to hold men as laborers. The amount of money he can expend, anyway, is very limited, and if he pays them more wages than he ought he certainly would be short of labor later on, as we would not give him a deficiency under those circumstances.

Mr. ROBBINS. What do you give him?

Mr. SHERLEY. The amount we gave him in the legislative bill was about $14,000, as I recall.

Mr. ROBBINS. That would be the limit he could then expend under this unlimited right to employ men and fix wages as he pleased?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman can tell me just what he will have to pay for unskilled labor at this time in Washington, I shall be glad to put in a limitation. We felt it was a minor matter. He had to pay more than $2, and if he was fit for his job, he could be trusted to the extent of the part of $14,000 that was to be expended for this labor, and then we could pick it up in December, if there was any abuse.

Mr. ROBBINS. I think there ought to be a maximum.

Mr. SHERLEY. Whenever you put a maximum, that becomes the Government's minimum. We did not want to invite it in that way.

Mr. ROBBINS. Since I understand the purpose of the paragraph, I will withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. WALSH. This is only for one year? It does not make it permanent law?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Office Building: For construction and equipment of additional rooms at the House Office Building, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, $5,200, to be available during the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Can the gentleman state what additional rooms are to be constructed in the House Office Building?

Mr. SHERLEY. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has moved from the Capitol here to a room that is under the Ways and Means Committee room there, and which is being divided, and this is to supply about $4,000, as I recall, for fitting up that room. The balance of the money is to meet expenses incident to the inclosing of a part of the hallways that lie just outside of the majority and minority rooms over in the House Office Building.

The Clerk read as follows:

Legislative.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Strike out line 16 on page 36.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the following employees, from and including July 1, 1918, until the close of the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress: Forty-six pages, including 2 riding pages, 4 telephone pages, 1 press gallery page, and 10 pages for duty at the entrance to the Hall of the House, at $2.50 per day each; and 8 clerks to committees at $6 per day each; so much as may be necessary.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: Page 37, line 16, after the word "each," insert "three session telephone operators at $75 a month each."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, these operators are already carried on the rolls, to be carried as the others are, to the 1st of July. Their omission was by a mistake in the other bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are they session employees or employees on the permanent roll?

Mr. SHERLEY. They are session employees, not on the permanent roll, just as these employees here. Their compensation has been arranged for up to the 1st of July, but not beyond. This is to carry them on up to the close of the session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Superintendent of Documents: For the following employees during the fiscal year 1919, to be in lieu of the positions of stockkeepers, helpers, assistant messengers, mailers, skilled laborers, unskilled laborers, janitress, folders, and messenger boys, provided in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919: Four stockkeepers at $1,126.80 each, 20 helpers at $1,001.60 each, 58 skilled laborers at $876.40 each, 11 unskilled laborers at $876.40 each, and 28 messenger boys at $500.80 each; in all, $99,033.20: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act no salary or wage shall be increased in the Government Printing Office except upon express authority of Congress.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on line 8, page 38, beginning with the word "Provided," down to and including the word "Congress" in line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: Page 38, strike out the proviso from line 8 to line 11, which reads as follows: "Provided, That from and after the passage of this act no salary or wage shall be increased in the Government Printing Office except upon express authority of Congress.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the reason for that was this: It developed, after we had increased the wages of the employees under the Superintendent of Documents in the Printing Office, in order to make them correspond with the wages paid similarly to other employees over there, that the Public Printer had increased the wages of the other employees, which made necessary an increase again of their wages, which increase is carried here. We did not want to continue to play fast and loose and have to increase one class as fast as they increased another, and so it was suggested in committee that this limitation be put on. But the Public Printer has presented to the committee since then the fact that the matter would perhaps embarrass him unduly and unjustifiably, as he is compelled from time to time to adjust some of the wages there in order to meet conditions that exist in the printing trade. We therefore have concluded it to be not wise to carry as strict a limitation as this. But we hope that the Public Printer will not think that every time an increase is made by Congress he is warranted in a further increase of other employees, with the constant boosting up of wages. With the understanding that such action by him will not be taken without some knowledge on the part of Congress as to what is proposed to be done, I now move to strike out this limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PRINTING AND BINDING.

For printing and binding for the Department of Justice, $5,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 12, 13, and 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: Page 38, strike out lines 12, 13, and 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of the final judgments and decrees, including costs of suits, which have been rendered under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," certified to Congress during the present session by the Attorney General in House Document No. 1181, and which have not been appealed, namely.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I direct the gentleman's attention to the omission of the letters "h" and "n" at the beginning of line 23 on page 38.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the printing be corrected in line 23, page 38, making it read "hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. May I also direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that on line 8, above the proviso, the colon should be changed to a period?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I request that that change of punctuation be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the change will be made.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of the judgment in favor of the State of Massachusetts, certified to Congres in House Document No. 298, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, $886,389.68.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, touching the item just read, I desire to say simply this: Some years ago the Congress submitted to the Court of Claims the question of ascertaining the amount of moneys due to the State of Massachusetts in connection with certain expenditures made at the time of the Civil War. The Court of Claims not only made a finding of facts but also rendered a judgment. There was considerable question in my mind as to whether the Congress ever intended that the Court of Claims should do more than make a finding of facts; but, in point of fact, they did render an actual judgment, and they rendered that judgment after argument by counsel for the Government questioning their jurisdiction so to do. The right to appeal has ceased, and the judgment is a legal judgment of the Court of Claims against the United States Government. In view of those circumstances, having examined the documents and the facts as shown therein, I feel that it is but proper that the Congress should pay this judgment as it pays other judgments of the courts. The amount was sufficiently large, however, to make it seem proper that I should call the attention of the House to the fact.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question before he yields the floor?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Recently I noticed a statement that the United States Government had claims against a number of States, among others a claim against the State of Pennsylvania. I asked the auditor general of the State of Pennsylvania about it, and he repudiated it and said there was nothing in it. I would like to ask if the Government has any claim against the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know about that. Prior to the Civil War certain surplus funds in the Treasury of the United States were distributed among the various States, under certain conditions looking to their repayment at some time. They have never been repaid, and I do not suppose they ever will be repaid. About once in every five years they are made the basis of a speech by somebody who thinks he has discovered something new. They have never been considered as having anything to do with these other claims.

Mr. ROBBINS. It would not be a proper item of set-off in this case?

Mr. SHERLEY. It has never been made a set-off as against other States which have had claims similar to those of the State of Massachusetts, and we did not feel that we had any right to enter into that matter. The States then in existence received moneys, which they used for various State purposes. The newer States have been more than compensated, in many instances, by the value of the public lands that they have obtained.

Mr. ROBBINS. I thought there was nothing in it, but I wanted to know whether the chairman of the committee had that in mind when the bill was made up.

Mr. SHERLEY. We did not consider that as in any sense a set-off.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance, Hygienic Laboratory, Public Health Service, $240.67.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] calls my attention to the misspelling of the word "hygienic" in line 1, page 42.

Mr. STAFFORD. It needs the addition of an "i."

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may correct the spelling.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not only in this case, but in all cases.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the Clerk may correct the spelling of the misspelled word to which attention has been called. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses, foreign missions, 1917, $39,221.85.
For contingent expenses, foreign missions, $7,117.10.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of inquiring what foreign missions are carried on by the United States Government?

Mr. WINSLOW. For the reformation of the Germans. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBBINS. I should like to have some light by the chairman of the committee on that. In lines 15 and 16, on page 49, there is an item for contingent expenses, foreign missions, $39,221.85, and in line 17, for contingent expenses, foreign missions, $7,117.10. It is suggested by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] that it is for reforming the Germans. Heretofore we have not made much headway at that. I should like to know what we are doing with this money.

Mr. SHERLEY. This is simply an audited claim in connection with contingent expenses of embassies and legations abroad, and is a true deficiency.

Mr. ROBBINS. It is connected with embassies and not with missionary work?

Mr. SHERLEY. "Foreign missions" do not mean foreign missionaries.

Mr. ROBBINS. I am enlightened, Mr. Chairman, and the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For freight on stamped paper and mail bags, $108.99.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the general deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Railway Mail Service, vacation, $14.52.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to correct the spelling of the word "mail" in line 16, page 53.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask what this item means?

Mr. SHERLEY. This is for the Railway Mail Service vacation pay.

Mr. WALSH. It does not say pay.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with sundry amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12600, the general deficiency bill, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I would like two minutes to address the House touching the situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I announced at the adjournment on Saturday that I would present a continuing resolution to-day to take care of any supply bill that might fail. Anticipating the situation that confronted the Congress I endeavored to have both House and Senate sit yesterday. In that I was unsuccessful. I believe if we had done so a great many matters could have been disposed of yesterday or to-day and much confusion avoided. To-day I have been continually engaged not only with conference reports but with the general deficiency bill which has just passed.

I sent word to the Senate requesting that that body should not adjourn, with the statement that I was prepared to offer a resolution continuing appropriations for departments of the Government that had not been taken care of by virtue of the regular appropriation bills. At my request the Comptroller of the Treasurer has been at the Capitol and has drawn a resolution to take care of the situation with which the Government is confronted. That situation is different from what has confronted the Government heretofore in that there has been created a great many new activities that were not created as the result of the provisions of any previous appropriation bills, and the size of the Government expenditures are way beyond the amount carried in former annual appropriation bills. So that a resolution that would simply provide for the proportionate amount being authorized to be expended as compared with the expenditures of last year would in no sense cure the situation. I would be prepared now to present a resolution—I hold it in my hand—dealing with the situation; but notwithstanding the request that was made to the Senate, not once but more than twice, notwithstanding word was sent an hour ago. the Senate has seen fit to adjourn. It is impossible with the Senate adjourned for the House, by any action of its own to-night, to pass a resolution that will relieve the situation.

I shall not, therefore, at this hour ask for the passage of such a resolution, but will present it when the House convenes to-morrow. I make the statement in justice to the membership of the House and in justice to my committee and myself as chairman of the committee. We have been prepared at all times to take care of the situation that has arisen. If any embarrassment should arise by virtue of the failure to take care of it the blame does not rest upon this House and does not rest on the Committee on Appropriations. That statement is due to the country and to the House. [Applause.]

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the legislative bill on the Speaker's table.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 12633. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the amendment that the Senate has placed upon the bill is an amendment restoring the bill to the exact form in which it passed the Congress with the exception of the Borland amendment. In other words, they have insisted upon their position in excluding from the $120 increase those Government establishments that have been created since July 1, 1916. I still believe that in this course a mistake is being made. It is more important, however, that this bill should be passed than that the two Houses should have a wrangle touching this situation. The matter can be, and I hope will be, taken care of economically by virtue of the action of the administrative officers. I therefore move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. LANGLEY for two days, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks made this morning upon the census bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a patriotic address delivered by my colleague, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise my remarks upon the general deficiency appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 2, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 2, 1918.

Rev. Plato T. Durham, D. D., of Atlanta, Ga., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, most mighty, most holy, and most merciful, we pause in the grave and fateful duties of this Nation and present ourselves before Thee, that our hearts may be cleansed of pride, that our visions may be cleared of all feeble images, that unto us may come the ideals and the purposes of the timeless and eternal years, that we may be able to make the work of our hands fit into the purposes and plans of God, and that in wisdom and in justice and in love we may give ourselves this day to the service of the Lord.

We pray Thy blessing upon the President of the United States and the Vice President, upon this august body, upon this Nation in all the fullness of its power and in all the greatness of its purposes. Be Thou, we beseech Thee, its light this day in the heart of its Chief Executive and in the heart of its humblest soldier, and upon them who lay down their life we pray that the vision and the splendor of God may fall, that they may of Thy mercy see their life taking its place in the long and illustrious annals of this Nation.

Preserve us as a Nation, we beseech Thee, to do the work of Christ in the historic growth of man. May the light of our stars flash full in the darkness of the world and the mighty strength of this Nation be given over only to the uplift of the weak, that without pomp and without pride of place we may deserve to be and continue to be a force in the long annals of mankind. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, June 27, 1918, when, on request of Mr. OWEN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Doc. No. 255), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of Labor, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of Commerce submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $100,000,000 required by the Bureau of Industrial Housing and Transportation for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the housing act of May 16, 1918 (S. He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation required by the Treasury Department for salaries of employees, equipment, and operating expenses of the New Arlington Building and the Treasury Annex, in the sum of $239,370.50 (S. MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11247) entitled "An act providing for the protection of the uniform of friendly nations, and for other purposes," the Clerk be authorized to strike out "persons," in line 3, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the word "person," in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 12000. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes; and

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present a petition of 6,285 voters and 11,915 nonvoters in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor during the war. I presume they will lie on the table, as the bill has been reported.

I also present the petition of 106 granges, Patrons of Husbandry, of the State of New Hampshire, with a total membership of 12,518, making the same prayer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will lie on the table.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have received a large number of telegrams, letters, and petitions urging that Congress shall not pass any prohibitory statute. I have not felt like presenting them or encumbering the RECORD, but I desire to state that I have received a large number of that character.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Lusk, Wyo., praying for the enactment of further prohibition legislation as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by sundry citizens of the State of Wyoming, favoring the enactment of further prohibition legislation as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented petitions of the Conference of Methodist Men, representing the Methodist Episcopal churches of the United States, in session at Lake Junaluska, N. C.; of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Congress Heights, D. C.; and of the Senior Society of Christian Endeavor of the First Congregational Church of Washington, D. C., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MYERS presented a resolution of the Business Men's Association of Ismay, Mont., favoring an investigation of the gas and oil conditions in the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 4179) for the relief of James W. Nugent, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of Croatian League No. 66, of Sacramento, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation whereby all Jugo-Slavs resident in the United States of America and technically subjects of Austria-Hungary, may be relieved from their present status as enemy aliens upon their disavowal of all allegiance to the Austro-Hungarian Empire or to its allies, together with an oath of loyalty to the United States of America, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. OWEN. I am directed by the Committee on Banking and Currency to report back favorably House bill 11283, with certain amendments striking out all of the bill except section 3, providing for the printing of large denominations of Federal reserve notes, and section 7, providing for imposing penalties for embezzlement of the funds of Federal reserve banks, which is not now provided for. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I shall object to the present consideration of any bill until morning business has been concluded. Then, I suggest to the Senator, he can call up the bill.

Mr. OWEN. I will ask to have the bill lie on the table until the morning business is concluded. It is impossible to get action on this matter, because of the parliamentary condition in the House, unless it is acted upon to-day.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no desire to delay the consideration of the bill, but I have some committee reports to present and other Senators have other morning business that we want to transact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. GRONNA. I report back favorably from the Committee on Claims, without amendment, the bill (S. 56) for the relief of John T. Eaton, and I submit a report (No. 539) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the bill, but as objection was made to the other bill, I do not presume it can be considered now.

Mr. WALSH. At the conclusion of the routine business I shall ask for the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2885) for the relief of the estate of Moses M. Bane, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 538) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 4562) to reimburse Horace A. Choumard, chaplain in Twenty-third Infantry, for loss of certain personal property, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 537) thereon.

Mr. KENDRICK, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3948) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjudicate claims covering the expense of removing certain Choctaw Indians from Mississippi to Oklahoma, submitted an adverse report (No. 540) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK, OWATONNA, MINN.

Mr. McCUMBER. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 1003) to reimburse the First National Bank of Owatonna, Minn., for revenue stamps stolen or lost in transit, and I submit a report (No. 541) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the First National Bank of Owatonna, Minn., the sum of $42, to reimburse the bank for that amount of revenue stamps stolen or lost while same was in transit from St. Paul, Minn., to Owatonna, Minn.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOONDAY PRAYER.

Mr. MYERS. I have been requested to introduce the joint resolution, which I now present, and I cheerfully do so. I ask that it be read, and I ask then unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of it.

Mr. PENROSE. Let it be read for information.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 164) requesting the President to commend by proclamation to the people of the United States observance of the practice of prayer at noon each day for victory in the war was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas what is called the angelus, the practice of prayer for one minute at noon each day for the success of our country in the existing war, is being observed in the District of Columbia and some other parts of the United States; and

Whereas it is the desire of some good citizens that it be observed generally throughout the country to the end of the war; and

Whereas the sentiment is in accord with the traditional spirit and sentiment of this country and recognizes the overruling power of the Almighty: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President is requested to commend by proclamation to the people of the United States observance in their homes and elsewhere, until the end of the war, of the practice of prayer for at least one minute at noon each day to God for victory for our cause in the existing war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the joint resolution which has just been introduced is no doubt commendable, but I think the people should be left to their own impulses in this matter. I do not see myself the necessity of our legislating upon or passing resolutions about everything under the sun because we are at war. I say that without reflecting or intending to reflect at all upon those who feel that the joint resolution is appropriate and should be adopted.

It is a fact, however, Mr. President, that all the nations engaged in war and their people are praying either to the Almighty or to Allah for victory. The central powers have as their ally a Mohammedan nation. As a consequence they feel that their supplications to the god of the Mohammedans and of the God of the Christians may result, and some of them contend that they have resulted in the success of the arms of the central powers up to this time. The Kaiser is not only praying to the Almighty constantly, but claiming Him as a partner. We regard both as sacrilegious in view of the manner of German warfare. But we propose to make our supplications, and are making them, to the same Divine Power, and I have no doubt as we have made them we will continue to make them. Their efficacy will be determined by results when the war is over.

Why legislate about it? I do not believe that if we enact this legislation we are going to produce any more prayers, and I am sure that if we do not enact it the number of prayers which daily ascend to Heaven will not be sensibly reduced or decreased.

I think we had better spend our time on legislation of a more material and important character, and I therefore object.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, two little girls were hurrying to school one morning and found that they were liable to be late. One of them said, "Let us kneel down and pray that we will not be late." The other replied, "No; let us skip right along and pray as we go."

I think that this little bit of philosophy would be well to be observed by the Government. I think we ought to get along with our work a little more rapidly than we are doing and pray as we get along.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation in respect to the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was objection to it, and it goes over.

Mr. PHELAN. I desire to say, Mr. President, that the President of the United States has expressed interest in this resolution. Through his secretary he has communicated that interest to one of the societies advocating it. It is a beautiful idea—the giving by the people of one moment on each day for the men at the front and to offer up a prayer of supplication for their safety and the success of our arms.

Scientific gentlemen, apart from religious advocates, have come to the conclusion that when a large body of people concentrate their minds on a given purpose it is helpful even to those who doubt and scoff. Most admit the efficacy, in that sense, at any rate, of prayer, and I trust that the joint resolution will prevail when it is considered by the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, my remarks are not those of a scoffer, although I have never made any pretensions toward Christianity. I am thinking about the boys at the front nearly all the time and I am trying to do all I can for them. My impression is that the busier we are in their behalf the more certain we are to succeed. Prayer may be available; it may produce something. The prayers that are being uttered all the time will be efficacious, whether this measure pass or whether it does not. The whole situation was summed up in the statement of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], let us pray as we work, and work, whether we pray or not, for success in this war.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, in regard to the joint resolution which I have just introduced, and as to which there was objection made to my request for unanimous consent for immediate consideration, I will say that I was requested to introduce that joint resolution, and when requested to do so I could conceive of no possible objection to doing it. The sentiment of the joint resolution is in accord with my sentiments, and I thought it a very appropriate and timely resolution to offer and for which to ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration. It did not occur to me that there would be any objection from anyone in this body to the request for its immediate consideration. However, of course, there having been objection, it can not be considered immediately. That takes unanimous consent. I will state, however, that I regret that there was objection and regret that the resolution was not given the right of immediate consideration and unanimous passage by this body. I think it is a very timely, fit, and appropriate resolution, and I heartily approve of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To what committee does the Senator from Montana desire to have the joint resolution referred?

Mr. MYERS. It is suggested to me by other Senators that it go to the Committee on the Library, and I ask that it be referred to that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 12600. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

H. R. 12429. An act to authorize the health officer of the District of Columbia to permit the disinterment of the bodies of Eliza Hill Bowles, Bernice Worthen Bowles, and Bessie Vivian Bowles, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

TUBE LINES BETWEEN NEW YORK AND NEW JERSEY.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, and before it is read I wish to make a statement.

My purpose in presenting this resolution, Mr. President, is very simple. I am anxious to have some information concerning the taking over by Director General McAdoo, of the Railroad Administration, of the electric railway system from Newark and Jersey City, through the so-called McAdoo tubes, to New York, a distance of a very few miles.

As I understand it, the railroad act, under which the Director General is operating our transportation systems, was passed "to meet conditions growing out of war," to quote the language of the act, a war measure, in other words, whereby the Federal Government might control the transportation of troops and various supplies for governmental purposes. That was the primary purpose of the act.

In conjunction with the various trunk lines, however, Congress deemed it advisable to insert in the act a positive direction that the Government should also take over the short lines of the country, those carrying passengers and freight, operating as feeders to the trunk lines. By joint resolution, Congress, on Saturday last, supplemented this original provision by again directing the taking over of said short lines.

For reasons stated, the President has turned back to private control a large number of short lines, estimated to represent a mileage of 30,000 miles. Concerning the hurtful effect upon these small roads, which this decision is likely to have, I shall say nothing at the present time. I trust the result may not be as disastrous as has been predicted.

While, however, the President has deemed it wise to leave these small railroads to their own devices without aid from the Government, such as is being given to the larger and wealthier corporations, the Director General seems to view these electric roads between Newark and New York quite differently.

As a matter of fact, in the fullest sense the latter are not railroads at all. They carry no freight and no general passenger traffic. No soldiers are carried over them and no supplies, for war or other purposes. They are operated by electricity, and belong no more to a general railroad system than a municipal trolley line. The passengers almost wholly are commuters, living in the cities of north New Jersey and engaged in trade in New York.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I desire to make a suggestion to him. I understood the Senator was reading a resolution for the consideration of which he desired to ask unanimous consent, to which of course no one would object; but as he is at this time proceeding to place in the RECORD an argument on the resolution, which is not before the Senate, I desire to ask the Senator if he does not think it would more comport with orderly procedure first to have the resolution read at the desk, and then ask for its consideration, in which event I and all other Senators would be delighted to hear the Senator address himself to the resolution?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I did not wish to take the valuable time of the Senate by delaying the proceedings. This is a matter of grave importance to my State. It will only take me a minute or two to finish my statement, which I desire to have before the Senate before the resolution is read from the desk. That is the reason why I am first making my statement. As I have said, it will only take me a minute or two to finish it, and I hope the Senator from Arizona will not object to my doing so.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Of course, I shall not press the objection in this particular instance, but I am only afraid that the precedent will lead to abuses in other cases which may be entirely different from the one which the Senator is now presenting.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am not sure as to that, but I shall not offend again.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I merely desired to protect myself against the charge of being partial in the matter.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. In a large measure these daily passengers are poor people, or people in very moderate circumstances. An increase in fare to them is a very serious matter. Their incomes are not large, and the addition of 10 or 20 cents a day is an important item in their daily expenditures, particularly at the present time.

I can not see why, for governmental reasons, or because of the war, the Director General of Railroads should assume control of these local interurban lines, and increase the rates from 60 to 100 per cent. This additional revenue is not needed to further develop these roads, or for betterment in connection with their operations. There will be a vast increased revenue from this service, out of the pockets of the commuters, few of whom can afford the additional charge, but the millions of dollars which this half million toilers will be called upon to pay the Government will doubtless be employed in building up some broken-down railway a thousand miles from New York.

This does not seem to me fair or within the scope of the power which Congress granted to the Director General of Railroads when the act of March 21, 1918, was passed.

This resolution which I offer empowers the Committee on Interstate Commerce to inquire into this matter, with a view to seeking a remedy and an adjustment satisfactory to all parties interested.

I ask that the resolution may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 272), as follows:

Whereas the United States Railroad Administration, operating under the provisions of the act of March 21, 1918, has assumed jurisdiction over the railroad systems of the country, for and during the continuance of the war, "to meet conditions growing out of war"; and

Whereas it was the purpose of the act in question to take over only those transportation lines which engage in general traffic, passenger and freight, and not roads engaged solely in local, urban, or interurban passenger business; and

Whereas the Director General of Railroads has assumed jurisdiction over the so-called tube lines running under the Hudson River, between the New York terminal and the cities of Jersey City and Newark, N. J., a class of traffic having no relation whatever to war conditions; and

Whereas by order of the Director General of Railroads the rate of fare between Jersey City and New York was increased 100 per cent, which increase was subsequently annulled; and

Whereas the rate of fare between New York and Newark, a purely local business, has been increased from 17 cents to 27 cents, or 60 per cent, though the traffic over said line has no relation to war conditions: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate be instructed to inquire into the conditions above set forth, with a view to ascertaining why these purely local lines were taken over; whether such taking over was in accordance with the spirit and letter of the act in question; why the order was issued increasing from 5 to 10 cents the fare between New York and Jersey City, and why said order was canceled; why the fare between New York and Newark has been increased 60 per cent: Be it further

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be authorized and directed to subpœna witnesses and compel their attendance, to send for persons and papers, and do such further acts as may be necessary to secure any and all information desired in the furtherance of said inquiry; any expenses incurred in the conduct of this inquiry shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that a report of the finding of the Committee on Interstate Commerce shall, upon its conclusion, be made to the Senate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will have first to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as it calls for an expenditure of money. The resolution is, therefore, referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, what disposition was made of the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as it calls for the expenditure of money.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Might I modify the resolution which I have presented by striking out the portion of it providing for appropriating money out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and thereby bring the resolution before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can offer a new resolution. The resolution which he has presented has been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that perhaps a speedier way to dispose of the resolution which has been presented by the Senator from New Jersey would be to ask unanimous consent to withdraw it from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and to strike out all that portion of the resolution that has to do with the subpœnaing of witnesses and the paying of the expenses thereof. Is there objection to doing that? The Chair hears none. Now, the Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the resolution goes over under the rule.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I have the intention of proposing to House joint resolution 200, the woman-suffrage constitutional amendment, to be inserted as a new paragraph after the word "sex." It is intended to prevent unnaturalized aliens from voting for Senators and Representatives in Congress and for electors for President and Vice President. I wish to say that there are eight States which permit that. They might elect the controlling factor in the House of Representatives and the Senate and the controlling number in the Electoral College. I shall not, however, insist upon the amendment to the extent of delaying the consideration or passage of the original suffrage joint resolution, but I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. GORE to the resolution (H. J. Res. 200) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States conferring upon women the right of suffrage, viz:

At the end of line 11, page 1, add the following:

"No person other than a citizen of the United States shall be entitled to vote for Senators and Representatives in Congress or for electors for President and Vice President of the United States."

ORDNANCE PRODUCTION—STATEMENT OF GEN. CROZIER.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, in the month of February I made some remarks in the Senate referring to the condition of the war and criticizing some of the activities of the War Department. At that time the head of the Bureau of Ordnance, who was among those criticized in the remarks I made, was abroad. Upon his return to the United States he read what I had said, and has written me on two or three points which I made, calling my attention to matters in the testimony which he believes were not given the proper construction in what I said. I have a copy of his letter here, and in order that the record may be complete I ask that it be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

JUNE 25, 1918.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: Upon my return this month from France my attention was called to your address of February 15, made during my absence, before the Senate upon the recent work of the War Department, and I proceeded to read the same with great care and interest. I could not feel otherwise than flattered at what you were good enough to say of my general work as Chief of Ordnance during the past 16 years, and I am especially pleased that you should have pointed out that for years I have been calling attention to the inadequacy of the appropriations for ordnance, and have repeatedly advocated a greater measure of military preparedness than was deemed necessary by many of my superiors or by Congress.

Nevertheless you find me "partially responsible" for certain unsatisfactory conditions in relation to three things, (a) rifles; (b) machine guns; and (c) artillery. Believing that you do not wish to place blame where it does not belong, I am sending you this letter in which I deal seriatim with your more important criticisms.

(A) RIFLES.

As regards rifles, you make this specific criticism of me:

He had constantly sought—justifiably so in ordinary times—for the best the market could produce, and in this case he was unwilling to modify that standard of perfection even though a modification would have greatly hastened the production of a satisfactory arm and one which would have answered all our purposes. (P. 7 of your separately published speech.)

At the outbreak of the war the Government was fortunate in having on hand more than 500,000 Springfield rifles (than which there are none better in the world) available for immediate use, and, barring wastage, sufficient to supply an army of 1,000,000 men. Furthermore, private factories were manufacturing for the British large numbers of Enfield rifles, but for use with British ammunition. After due consideration the responsible military authorities reached the conclusion that our Springfield rifles should be sent abroad, and that they should be supplemented as rapidly as possible with Enfields, but changed to use American ammunition; for it is elementary (and you concede it) that all rifles used by us should have one ammunition. Another important reason for so changing the Enfields was the superiority of our ammunition over the British, our cartridge being rimless, whereas theirs has a rim which might jam. (Pp. 38 and 39 of my hearings before the Senate Military Committee.)

Further reasons for the course followed by the military authorities were—

(a) That it enabled us to continue to use our Government factories for turning out additional supplies of rifles, without the necessity of changing such factories over for the manufacture of the British rifle, or of the Springfield for British ammunition. The same is true of the Government ammunition factory.

(b) That the Enfield is a better rifle when made for the American type of rimless cartridge, for which it was originally designed, than when made for the British type—my hearings, page 38.

(c) The military authorities had been advised that the American forces would be fighting alongside of the French, and not of the British forces, so that no argument based on the use of the same ammunition as that used by their immediate associates could be made in favor of using the British Enfield rifle with British ammunition.

Turning now to your position, it appears to be that we should have kept our Springfields for use in training soldiers in the United States, and used abroad the new Enfield rifles with British ammunition. "If this had been done," you say, "we would have supplied our Army with rifles in a much shorter time"—speech, page 6. After conceding that there were some arguments in favor of changing the Enfield, as we did, to use our ammunition you say:

> But all of these arguments in favor of the change did not commence to overcome the advantage of immediately providing the largest supply of rifles possible—a rifle which has served England satisfactorily during three years of actual warfare. (Speech, p. 7.)

Your position is not in accord with that of the responsible military authorities, as hereinabove outlined, who are satisfied that the preponderating advantages were and are on the side of the course adopted. I may add that the primary object of the Ordnance Department was to equip all of our soldiers in the trenches with the best possible weapon for fighting the Germans. No soldier has been sent abroad without such a weapon—hearing, page 41—and in this connection it is worth noting that on May 1, 1918, the number of rifles needed for all the combatant troops which we had sent abroad, including a proper allowance for wastage, was considerably less than that of the Springfield rifles alone which we had on hand when we entered the war.

It is doubtless regrettable that there were not enough rifles to supply all soldiers as soon as they reached their camps in this country, but under the policy of nonpreparedness, acquiesced in by the American people, it was not possible both to do this, and do what the Ordnance Department has done, namely, issue a timely and adequate supply to our troops abroad of the best rifles and ammunition. But in connection with the soldiers at American camps it should be borne in mind that lack of rifles alone has not been the cause of any such soldier going abroad without adequate rifle training. Some have remained at camps too short a time to enable them to receive proper rifle training, but that is another matter—hearings, pages 41, 44, 82.

There is another point in connection with the rifles to which you have not referred and which was one of the contributing causes of delay. It was decided by the Ordnance Department that there should be a certain interchangeability of parts as between the rifles made at the various plants. As made for the British, the Enfield rifles were not interchangeable, and at first the interchangeability required by us was of a limited nature; but later it was made quite extensive, and it is an interesting fact that within six weeks the general commanding our troops in France has expressed a desire for rifles with a maximum of interchangeability as to parts. As bearing on this, I quote the following from a cablegram received from him under date of March 25, 1918, as follows:

> The matter of spare parts and maintenance in our present situation is serious and must not be complicated by the addition of any distinctions in manufacture.

He means by this that there must not, for instance, be one set of parts for Winchester rifles and another for those made at Illion. (Hearings, p. 361.)

The standardization ultimately greatly accelerated manufacture, and while not pertinent to any criticism made by you it is proper to record here the fact that for some time past the Ordnance Department has been providing for all troops, both here and abroad, a greater number of rifles, all using American ammunition, than have been required, and the further manufacture is possible at a higher rate than would have been possible with the unstandardized rifles as they were being made for the British.

On the facts and the evidence, supplemented by actual experience—the best test of all—it would seem that under the circumstances the Ordnance Department had pursued the right course in regard to rifles; and I do not think you will find any competent and distinterested military critic to say the contrary.

(B) MACHINE GUNS.

Speaking of these, you say:

> I do not intend to discuss the long-drawn-out controversy about the Lewis gun. Possibly Gen. Crozier is right in his claim that the gun did not function satisfactorily until after our declaration of war; but it had been used during the previous two years by the English to good advantage, and it was very easy to obtain evidence that the gun was giving satisfaction." (Speech, p. 7.)

On the uncontradicted evidence, supplemented by actual experience, I believe that I was not merely "possibly," but unqualifiedly, right in the claim stated. To understand the situation it is necessary clearly to distinguish between the Lewis gun of British manufacture, using British ammunition, and the Lewis gun of American manufacture. It is only as to the former that it is possible to say that "it was easy to obtain evidence that the gun was giving satisfaction," and this gun could not use American ammunition. Also, for some reason to the Ordnance Department unknown, the British-made Lewis gun was a much better article than that made in the United States (Hearings, p. 150), and it was not until April, 1917, that a proper Lewis gun of American manufacture using American ammunition was submitted to the Government, although both in 1915 and 1916 the Ordnance Department made earnest efforts to have Lewis guns submitted for test. (Hearings, pp. 261, 262.) If prior to April, 1917, any agency of the Government had ordered Lewis guns for American ammunition, the action would have been taken in the face of the failure of these guns ever to perform satisfactorily with American ammunition and against the recommendation of every board appointed to investigate the subject. (Hearings, p. 150.)

The early failures of the American-made Lewis guns were set forth in some detail at pages 258 to 271 of the hearings before the Senate Military Committee. At the 1913 test they showed, amongst other defects, "206 jams and malfunctions" (hearings, p. 261). A second official test of machine guns was ordered in April, 1916, but the Lewis gun using American ammunition was withdrawn from test by its owners (hearings, p. 262). The board conducting this second test found that the American-made Lewis gun, even when used with British ammunition, was not as good as either the Benet-Mercie or the Vickers, which latter had already been adopted for the Army (hearings, p. 263). In the summer of 1916 we had the opportunity to put to test in the field on an extensive scale the American-made Lewis gun using British ammunition, for, no other machine guns being available, we were obliged to buy some 350 of these for use on the Mexican border. The official reports show that they functioned poorly (see hearings, pp. 263 et seq.).

In October, 1916, yet another board supported the Vickers gun over any other down to that time (hearings, p. 268), and the appropriations of August, 1916, for machine guns were used by the Ordnance Department in the purchase of Vickers guns as soon as it was permitted to do so by the War Department (pp. 267–268), which took over the determination of the question what machine guns should be purchased (p. 268).

It is proper to note that none of the boards which dealt with the Lewis gun were appointed or controlled by the Ordnance Bureau, but all were War Department boards. The fairness and ability of the board of the spring of 1916 were fully appreciated by the owners of the Lewis guns, who, under date of April 26, 1916, wrote me, in part, as follows:

> This company wishes to express its appreciation of the Ordnance Department for the courtesies extended recently by the board appointed to inspect the operation of the Lewis machine gun. The company feels that the investigation has been entirely impartial and regards the board as one very capable of judging the value of the investigation to the Ordnance Department.

In April, 1917, a proper Lewis gun of American manufacture, and using American ammunition, was finally submitted after some 17 changes had been made in the old gun. At once, not, as you say, late in the fall, the Ordnance Department urged, and successfully urged, the purchase of this remodeled gun by the thousands (pp. 151, 152, 269). It is proper to record here the fact that the War Department board which in the spring of 1917 accepted this remodeled gun went out of its way to approve the action of the military authorities in rejecting the Lewis gun using American ammunition prior to that time. In its report the board said:

Many improvements have been made in this gun since it was last tested, which justify the delay of the War Department in according complete recognition to this weapon. (Hearing, p. 269.)

Speaking of the Utica plant engaged in the manufacture of Lewis guns you say:

I think this plant should have been enlarged without delay and as many guns as possible turned out at once, even if a better gun would be provided later on.

To this I repeat that it would not have been proper for the Ordnance Department to order Lewis guns with American ammunition earlier than it did, or to have encouraged the enlargement of the plant until it had been demonstrated that the gun used with American ammunition would be a success; after which its enlargement was encouraged.

You also say:

Incidentally we have lost a great deal of time in changing this plant, which was manufacturing guns for British ammunition, to manufacture a gun to use American ammunition.

It was desirable that both American rifles and machine guns should use one ammunition, and that American, as is to-day the case. Naturally it took time to make the change to which you refer, but it was time well spent.

You further state:

After many trials and investigations it was decided to manufacture Lewis guns for aircraft purposes, and orders were given for these guns late in the fall of last year, but no Lewis guns are even now being manufactured for ground service. (Speech, p. 7.)

I premise my comments hereon with the statements (a) that none of the trials or investigations can be shown to have been unnecessary; on the contrary, they were all born of a desire to secure a good machine gun with the utmost possible speed, while at the same time refusing to accept any inferior gun, (b) that large orders for the remodeled gun were given much earlier than "late in the fall of last year." Such orders were, in fact, given beginning in April and May of last year, since which time the Ordnance Department has done whatever it could in reason to have this gun produced as rapidly as possible. One thousand three hundred were ordered in April, 6,400 in June, 12,000 in July, and 22,000 in September, and financial assistance was given for the enlargement of the plant. It is quite true, as you say, that none are being manufactured for ground service. For this there is a very good reason, namely, pending delivery of the new Browning gun, Gen. Pershing prefers to use for ground service the excellent machine guns supplied by France, and wishes the Lewis guns reserved for the air service. (Hearings, pp. 270, 271.)

You further state:

It was finally decided to manufacture for ground service what is known as the Browning gun, an untried weapon in actual service, but a gun which promises well in the tests which have been made. (Speech, p. 8.)

The event has since shown the wisdom of this decision. The Browning gun was not selected without being first subjected to very thorough tests (hearings, p. 136), and recent field tests have demonstrated conclusively its superiority to any other machine gun in existence. Incidentally, it is both simpler and cheaper than any other. (Hearings, pp. 138, 148.)

As in the case of rifles, the Ordnance Department was primarily intent on supplying to our soldiers in the trenches machine guns which would do efficient work against the Germans, and this it has done. Incidentally, it is to be noted that no soldiers have been delayed in going abroad through lack of machine guns, and while it is to be regretted that machine guns were not available at an earlier date than they were at the camps in this country, yet this is a matter for which the Ordnance Department can not be held responsible, but must again be attributed to the unwillingness of the people in any large sense to prepare for war until after it had begun.

The two foregoing subjects, rifles and machine guns, illustrate the department's conception of a proper scheme of preparation for taking part in the war. We could not hope to repair the national neglect of years by utilizing the energies of our small professional personnel and the very limited capacity for military manufacture in the hasty production of inferior weapons. We were entering the war against an enemy who had at his disposal the results of long years of the most scientific and systematic preparation on an enormous scale, and we could hope to prevail only through using the very best kinds of fighting equipment, turned out in amounts calling for the methods of quantity production, of which the initial steps are always slow. Thanks to the shelter afforded by our allies, our preparation could proceed in a systematic way. Already a great deal has been accomplished in ordnance work—though there is much more to come—and we are, in less time than might reasonably have been anticipated, meeting scientific force with scientific force. Such force is coming into play with only the delay necessarily resulting from the situation of unpreparedness in which we found ourselves and without the delay which would certainly have followed a hasty production of imperfect material, upon ill-digested plans. In seeking "the best the market could produce" and declining to lower my standard I am satisfied that I have best fulfilled the duties of my office, and it has not been shown that my methods have resulted in any harmful delay, beyond what was inherent in the situation. The event has shown the contrary.

(C) ARTILLERY.

As to artillery, you concede that I was not responsible for the wretched shortage upon our entry into the war, and credit me with having, as the record shows, frequently urged better preparation upon Congress, but you find fault with the unnecessary delay which you think occurred in placing orders for artillery after the declaration of war. Whether or not there has been any undue delay in procuring artillery is a large and difficult question, which could not be correctly determined on any such incomplete record as that taken before the Military Committee, nor shall I attempt to argue such an issue here. Instead I shall direct attention to a few of the more important things which must be taken into consideration before any determination could be reached.

We entered the war with, as you correctly state, a "pitiful showing" in respect of artillery. Its manufacture is at best a slow process, even where the necessary plants are in existence. Where they are not, they must first be created before any orders can be executed, and to do this and get an output going may take a year or more. At the outbreak of the war there were in this country only two plants for making artillery even on a moderate scale, the Bethlehem and the Midvale, and these were loaded with work almost to the full extent of their capacity, and had to be enlarged before they could be of material assistance in carrying out the vast artillery program necessitated by the war. One phase of its vastness may be illustrated by the following: In 1916 Congress appropriated $17,000,000 to be used for artillery. By contrast note that the appropriations for field artillery from the beginning of the war to the date of your speech amount to over a billion dollars.

The Government had generally to take the initiative in bringing about the erection of the new plants for artillery. It necessarily took some time and a great deal of thought, negotiation, and other intricate work to get these plants built and in operation. As a rule, the manufacturers were not anxious to build them. Six large forging establishments for the production of gun forgings have now been, or are rapidly being, brought into existence, and the same number of large machine shops have been erected and equipped for the manufacture of these forgings into finished guns. Let it be remembered that our new artillery is being made largely by people who have never before made such things. Establishments which have heretofore been making crankshafts, locomotive axles, and things of that sort have been changed into factories for making steel for guns or the guns themselves. It was not enough for the Ordnance Department to request that these establishments be created. It had to explain in detail how they could be created. It had even to tell the people where to get the information for making steel for guns, and arrange for it to be given them.

In addition to the new plants required for the manufacture of artillery, new, large, and costly ones were required for a multitude of other things, including ammunition, shells, and the explosives with which to manufacture them. Thus there have been called into existence plants for powder, trinitrotoluol, ammonium nitrate, picric acid, the fixation of nitrogen, the loading of gas shells, the manufacture of toxic gases, and there have been great extensions of plants for manufacturing small arms and ammunition, machine guns, textile equipments, and articles of tin plate, aluminum, and leather. A brief illustration of the steps required to get trinitrotoluol in quantities is given at page 193 of the hearing. These illustrations could be multiplied.

I now come to the matter of placing orders. Intelligently to spend over a billion dollars, especially for new kinds of material, involves a great deal of hard and accurate work on the part of a great many people. There was, as to most of the material desired, no such thing as going out into a willing and prepared industrial field and giving manufacturing orders to establishments awaiting them, with capacity and understanding to carry them out. This vast volume of new work found the Ordnance Department, so far as personnel was concerned, totally unprepared to cope with it. In the face of repeated warning that such personnel was inadequate, even for peace times—see my letters of October 18, 1915, to the Secretary of War and December 4, 1916, to The Adjutant General—I found myself at the outbreak of the war with only 96 Ordnance officers at my command. This number has now grown to over 4,000. The advent of war threw on our insufficient force an enormous burden, both in design and procurement, which had to be shouldered at the same time that efforts were made to increase the force by inducting new officers and new draftsmen into the service; and as there were practically no engineers and no draftsmen in the country skilled in the design of artillery, progress in increasing the organization was necessarily slow. Such a task has never before confronted any department of the Government. Our troubles were not diminished by the fact that our Washington business had to be transacted in 15 different places scattered all over town.

Having thus given you a rough picture of the situation which confronted the Ordnance Department in April, 1917, I take up your principal specific complaints as to delay in supplying artillery. You say that the larger contracts, instead of being made in May, June, or July, 1917, "were very largely made in November; many of them as late as December" (speech, bottom of p. 10). All this is true; now how can it be determined whether the Ordnance Department was blameworthy unless, amongst other things, it be first ascertained as to each contract whether it was feasible to place it earlier; which inquiry in turn involves ascertaining whether there were any existing and unoccupied plant facilities with which the work could be done earlier than where the contract was placed? Your very complaint in regard to the orders for 5,000 of the 75-milimeter guns and carriages illustrates what I have in mind. You say "small orders were placed throughout the summer, but the main order to the Willys-Overland Co. for 2,927 was not made until December 1, 1917." The "small orders" to which you refer aggregated over 1,600, and were all placed prior to July 9, which was quick work. The Willys-Overland order was not placed until December, because the company was, down to that time, not ready to receive it, and there was no other company which was ready. The explanation of delay offered in this case holds true in most if not all of the other cases involving orders for guns and carriages.

You further complain that the largest order for certain carriage limbers and for nearly three-fourths of the 75 mm. gun caissons was not given until November 5, 1917. The answer is that the order was given in sufficient time to have the limbers and caissons ready when the carriages were ready.

With adequate opportunity to do so, I believe that the Ordnance Department could give a valid reason for all of the delays in procuring artillery and ammunition, but these delays can not be disposed of en bloc. Each requires discussion in the light of the facts of the particular case. You refer to the department's failure to expend, prior to the declaration of war, the whole of the $100,000,000 allotted it in 1916—only $17,000,000 whereof was for artillery. The tables at pages 225 to 242 of the hearing show that the major portion had been obligated for supplies ordered. You refer also to our failure to use any portion of the $100,000,000 emergency fund set aside for the use of the President. I have explained as to this (hearing, p. 26) that I early learned that it was not to be generally available for ordnance work. Finally, in August, $35,000,000 thereof were obtained upon the understanding that it would be returned to the fund, as it was. This relatively small amount has not material bearing upon the issues under discussion here. The President's entire fund was not 3 per cent of the amount needed for equipment by the Ordnance Department alone, as measured by the appropriations of June and October.

You will note that I do not rely upon the fact that Congress failed to make the appropriations for the war program until two months after the estimates were submitted. Like many other things, it is to a certain extent material, but not at all controlling, and has too little to do with the larger reasons hereinabove given why the industries of the country could not be mobilized more quickly than they were for the production of artillery.

With reference to the supply of our forces in Europe with artillery by France and England, you say:

It should not have been necessary for us to depend on those countries for this assistance, or, at least, to nothing like the extent we find it necessary. (P. 11.)

I fully agree with you in this, but the necessity arose out of the failure of the country through a long series of years to provide for the preparation which I repeatedly urged; and nothing which the Ordnance Department or any other agency could possibly have done after our entry into the war could have saved us from this dependence.

I take this occasion to point out an oversight on your part in the use of certain testimony of mine at page 9 of your speech. It related to machine guns, not to artillery, the heading under which you cite it.

Please do not misunderstand me. It would be foolish for me or anyone else to claim that the Ordnance Department has made no errors. What public official or department in times like these does not make them? What I do claim at this time is that there is no proof that the action of the Ordnance Department as regards rifles and machine guns was other than in the best interests of the United States, or that the department was guilty of any improper delay; and, further, that on this record and under all the circumstances of this trying situation, some of which have been described, the Ordnance Department can not be charged with improper delay in placing orders for artillery. It did the best that could be done in the situation of unpreparedness in which the war found us, placing orders wherever they could be accepted with effective results, increasing the capacity of factories already in existence and bringing about the erection of large numbers of new ones on a scale unprecedented in the history of this country. To bridge over the interval before our vast plans for new facilities could mature we arranged for the utilization of the accumulated stores and surplus manufacturing capacity of the French and British, and did so with the hearty approval of those Governments. Under the new order of things the work of the Ordnance Department grew by leaps and bounds, and, furthermore, had to be transacted with utterly inadequate machinery. It now exceeds four times that of the great Steel Corporation. I wish to avoid no responsibility, but do feel that I may properly insist that this work be judged in the light of the multitude of handicaps under which it was performed, traceable directly to the unwillingness of the country to prepare for war, and that the actual accomplishments of the department be considered as well as possible shortcomings. When this is done, I have no fear of the result.

I am, Senator, very respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Major General, Chief of Ordnance.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 11283.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11283) to amend and reenact sections 4, 11, 16, 19, and 22 of the act approved December 23, 1913, and known as the Federal reserve act, and sections 5208 and 5209, Revised Statutes, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 2, after the word "assembled," to strike out:

That section 4 of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, be amended and reenacted by striking out that part of such section which reads as follows:

"Directors of class A and class B shall be chosen in the following manner:

"The chairman of the board of directors of the Federal reserve bank of the district in which the bank is situated or, pending the appointment of such chairman, the organization committee, shall classify the member banks of the district into three general groups or divisions. Each group shall contain as nearly as may be one-third of the aggregate number of the member banks of the district, and shall consist, as nearly as may be, of banks of similar capitalization. The groups shall be designated by number by the chairman.

"At a regularly called meeting of the board of directors of each member bank in the district it shall elect by ballot a district reserve elector and shall certify his name to the chairman of the board of directors of the Federal reserve bank of the district. The chairman shall make lists of the district reserve electors thus named by banks in each of the aforesaid three groups and shall transmit one list to each elector in each group.

"Each member bank shall be permitted to nominate to the chairman one candidate for director of class A and one candidate for director of class B. The candidates so nominated shall be listed by the chairman, indicating by whom nominated, and a copy of said list shall, within 15 days after its completion, be furnished by the chairman to each elector.

"Every director shall, within 15 days after the receipt of the said list, certify to the chairman his first, second, and other choices of a director of class A and class B, respectively, upon a preferential ballot, on a form furnished by the chairman of the board of directors of the Federal reserve bank of the district. Each elector shall make a cross opposite the name of the first, second, and other choices for a director of class A and for a director of class B, but shall not vote more than one choice for any one candidate."

And by substituting therefore the following:

"Directors of class A and class B shall be chosen in the following manner:

"The Federal Reserve Board shall classify the member banks of the district into three general groups or divisions, designating each group by number. Each group shall consist as nearly as may be of banks of similar capitalization. Each member bank shall be permitted to nominate to the chairman of the board of directors of the Federal reserve bank of the district one candidate for director of class A and one candidate for director of class B. The two candidates so nominated shall be listed by the chairman, indicating by whom nominated, and a copy of said list shall, within 15 days after its completion, be furnished by the chairman to each member bank. Each member bank by a resolution of the board or by an amendment to its by-laws shall authorize its president, cashier, or some other officer to cast the vote of the member bank in the elections of class A and class B directors.

"Within 15 days after receipt of the list of candidates the duly authorized officer of a member bank shall certify to the chairman his first, second, and other choices for director of class A and class B, respectively, upon a preferential ballot upon a form furnished by the chairman of the board of directors of the Federal reserve bank of the district. Each such officer shall make a cross opposite the name of the first, second, and other choices for a director of class A and for a director of class B, but shall not vote more than one choice for any one candidate. No officer or director of a member bank shall be eligible to serve as a class A director unless nominated and elected by banks which are members of the same group as the member bank of which he is an officer or director.

"Any person who is an officer or director of more than one member bank shall not be eligible for nomination as a class A director except by banks in the same group as the bank having the largest aggregate resources of any of those of which such person is an officer or director."

SEC. 2. That section 11 (k) of the Federal reserve act be amended and reenacted to read as follows:

"(k) To grant by special permit to national banks applying therefor, when not in contravention of State or local law, the right to act as trustee, executor, administrator, registrar of stocks and bonds, guardian of estates, assignee, receiver, committee of estates of lunatics, or in any other fiduciary capacity in which State banks, trust companies, or other corporations which come into competition with national banks are permitted to act under the laws of the State in which the national bank is located.

"Whenever the laws of such State authorize or permit the exercise of any or all of the foregoing powers by State banks, trust companies, or other corporations which compete with national banks, the granting to and the exercise of such powers by national banks shall not be deemed to be in contravention of State or local law within the meaning of this act.

"National banks exercising any or all of the powers enumerated in this subsection shall segregate all assets held in any fiduciary capacity from the general assets of the bank and shall keep a separate set of books and records showing in proper detail all transactions engaged in under authority of this subsection. Such books and records shall be open to inspection by the State authorities to the same extent as the books and records of corporations organized under State law which exercise fiduciary powers, but nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing the State authorities to examine the books, records, and assets of the national bank which are not held in trust under authority of this subsection.

"No national bank shall receive in its trust department deposits of current funds subject to check or the deposit of checks, drafts, bills of exchange, or other items for collection or exchange purposes. Funds deposited or held in trust by the bank awaiting investment shall be carried in a separate account and shall not be used by the bank in the conduct of its business unless it shall first set aside in the trust department United States bonds or other securities approved by the Federal Reserve Board.

"In the event of the failure of such bank the owners of the funds held in trust for investment shall have a lien on the bonds or other securities so set apart in addition to their claim against the estate of the bank.

"Whenever the laws of a State require corporations acting in a fiduciary capacity to deposit securities with the State authorities for the protection of private or court trusts, national banks so acting shall be required to make similar deposits, and securities so deposited shall be held for the protection of private or court trusts, as provided by the State law.

"National banks in such cases shall not be required to execute the bond usually required of individuals if State corporations under similar circumstances are exempt from this requirement.

"National banks shall have power to execute such bond when so required by the laws of the State.

"In any case in which the laws of a State require that a corporation acting as trustee, executor, administrator, or in any capacity specified in this section, shall take an oath or make an affidavit, the president, vice president, cashier, or trust officer of such national bank may take the necessary oath or execute the necessary affidavit.

"It shall be unlawful for any national banking association to lend any officer, director, or employee any funds held in trust under the powers conferred by this section. Any officer, director, or employee making such loan, or to whom such loan is made, may be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or may be both fined and imprisoned, in the discretion of the court.

"In passing upon applications for permission to exercise the powers enumerated in this subsection, the Federal Reserve Board may take into consideration the amount of capital and surplus of the applying bank, whether or not such capital and surplus is sufficient under the circumstances of the case, the needs of the community to be served, and any other facts and circumstances that seem to it proper, and may grant or refuse the application accordingly: Provided, That no permit shall be issued to any national banking association having a capital and surplus less than the capital and surplus required by State law of State banks, trust companies, and corporations exercising such powers."

On page 8, line 3, before the word "That," to strike out "SEC. 3"; on the same page, after line 20, to strike out:

SEC. 4. That paragraphs (b) and (c) of section 19 of the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts approved August 15, 1914, and June 21, 1917, be further amended and reenacted to read as follows:

"(b) If in a reserve city, as now or hereafter defined, it shall hold and maintain with the Federal reserve bank of its district an actual net balance equal to not less than 10 per cent of the aggregate amount of its demand deposits and 3 per cent of its time deposits: Provided, however, That if located in the outlying districts of a reserve city or in territory added to such a city by the extension of its corporate charter, it may, upon the affirmative vote of five members of the Federal Reserve Board, hold and maintain the reserve balances specified in paragraph (a) hereof.

"(c) If in a central reserve city, as now or hereafter defined, it shall hold and maintain with the Federal reserve bank of its district an actual net balance equal to not less than 13 per cent of the aggregate amount of its demand deposits and 3 per cent of its time deposits: Provided, however, That if located in the outlying districts of a central reserve city or in territory added to such city by the extension of its corporate charter, it may, upon the affirmative vote of five members of the Federal Reserve Board, hold and maintain the reserve balances specified in paragraphs (a) or (b) thereof."

SEC. 5. That section 22 of the Federal reserve act, as amended by the act of June 21, 1917, be further amended and reenacted to read as follows:

"(a) No member bank and no officer, director, or employee thereof shall hereafter make any loan or grant any gratuity to any bank examiner. Any bank officer, director, or employee violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not exceeding one year or fined not more than $5,000, or both; and may be fined a further sum equal to the money so loaned or gratuity given.

"Any examiner accepting a loan or gratuity from any bank examined by him or from an officer, director, or employee thereof shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned one year or fined not more than $5,000, or both, and may be fined a further sum equal to the money so loaned or gratuity given, and shall forever thereafter be disqualified from holding office as a national bank examiner.

"(b) No national bank examiner shall perform any other service for compensation while holding such office for any bank or officer, director, or employee thereof.

"No examiner, public or private, shall disclose the names of borrowers or the collateral for loans of a member bank to other than the proper officers of such bank without first having obtained the express permission in writing from the Comptroller of the Currency, or from the board of directors of such bank, except when ordered to do so by a court of competent jurisdiction, or by direction of the Congress of the United States, or of either House thereof, or any committee of Congress, or of either House duly authorized. Any bank examiner violating the provisions of this subsection shall be imprisoned not more than one year or fined not more than $5,000, or both.

"(c) Except as herein provided, any officer, director, employee, or attorney of a member bank who stipulates for or receives or consents or agrees to receive any fee, commission, gift, or thing of value from any person, firm, or corporation, for procuring or endeavoring to procure for such person, firm, or corporation, or for any other person, firm, or corporation, any loan from or the purchase or discount of any paper, note, draft, check, or bill of exchange by such member bank shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not more than one year or fined not more than $5,000, or both.

"(d) Any member bank may contract for, or purchase from, any of its directors or from any firm of which any of its directors is a member, any securities or other property, when (and not otherwise) such purchase is made in the regular course of business upon terms not less favorable to the bank than those offered to others, or when such purchase is authorized by a majority of the board of directors not interested in the sale of such securities or property, such authority to be evidenced by the affirmative vote or written assent of such directors: Provided, however, That when any director, or firm of which any director is a member, acting for or on behalf of others, sells securities or other property to a member bank, the Federal Reserve Board by regulation may, in any or all cases, require a full disclosure to be made, on forms to be prescribed by it, of all commissions or other considerations received, and whenever such director or firm, acting in his or its own behalf, sells securities or other property to the bank the Federal Reserve Board, by regulation, may require a full disclosure of all profit realized from such sale.

"Any member bank may sell securities or other property to any of its directors, or to a firm of which any of its directors is a member, in the regular course of business on terms not more favorable to such director or firm than those offered to others, or when such sale is authorized by a majority of the board of directors of a member bank to be evidenced by their affirmative vote or written assent: Provided, however, That nothing in this subsection contained shall be construed as authorizing member banks to purchase or sell securities or other property which such banks are not otherwise authorized by law to purchase or sell.

"(e) No member bank shall pay to any director, officer, attorney, or employee a greater rate of interest on the deposits of such director, officer, attorney, or employee than that paid to other depositors on similar deposits with such member bank.

"(f) If the directors or officers of any member bank shall knowingly violate or permit any of the agents, officers, or directors of any member bank to violate any of the provisions of this section or regulations of the board made under authority thereof, every director and officer participating in or assenting to such violation shall be held liable in his personal and individual capacity for all damages which the member bank, its shareholders, or any other persons shall have sustained in consequence of such violation."

On page 13, line 15, to change the number of the section from 7 to 2, and in line 21, after the word "amended," to strike out "and reenacted," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the ninth paragraph of section 16 of the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts approved September 7, 1916, and June 21, 1917, be further amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"In order to furnish suitable notes for circulation as Federal reserve notes the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, cause plates and dies to be engraved in the best manner to guard against counterfeits and fraudulent alterations, and shall have printed therefrom and numbered such quantities of such notes of the denominations of $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, $1,000, $5,000, $10,000 as may be required to supply the Federal reserve banks. Such notes shall be in form and tenor as directed by the Secretary of the Treasury under the provisions of this act and shall bear the distinctive numbers of the several Federal reserve banks through which they are issued."

SEC. 2. That section 5208 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of July 12, 1882, and section 5209 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the acts of April 6, 1869, and July 8, 1870, be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5208. It shall be unlawful for any officer, director, agent, or employee of any Federal reserve bank, or of any member bank as defined in the act of December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, to certify any check drawn upon such Federal reserve bank or member bank unless the person, firm, or corporation drawing the check has on deposit with such Federal reserve bank or member bank, at the times such check is certified, an amount of money not less than the amount specified in such check. Any check so certified by a duly authorized officer, director, agent, or employee shall be a good and valid obligation against such Federal reserve bank or member bank; but the act of any officer, director, agent, or employee of any such Federal reserve bank or member bank in violation of this section shall, in the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board, subject such Federal reserve bank to the penalties imposed by section 11, subsection (h), of the Federal reserve act, and shall subject such member bank if a national bank to the liabilities and proceedings on the part of the Comptroller of the Currency provided for in section 5234, Revised Statutes, and shall, in the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board, subject any other member bank to the penalties imposed by section 9 of said Federal reserve act for the violation of any of the provisions of said act. Any officer, director, agent, or employee of any Federal reserve bank or member bank who shall willfully violate the provisions of this section, or who shall resort to any device, or receive any fictitious obligation, directly or collaterally, in order to evade the provisions thereof, or who shall certify a check before the amount thereof shall have been regularly entered to the credit of the drawer upon the books of the bank, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, on conviction thereof in any district court of the United States, be fined not more than $5,000, or shall be imprisoned for not more than five years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 5209. Any officer, director, agent, or employee of any Federal reserve bank, or of any member bank as defined in the act of December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, who embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any of the moneys, funds, or credits of such Federal reserve bank or member bank, or who, without authority from the directors of such Federal reserve bank or member bank, issues or puts in circulation any of the notes of such Federal reserve bank or member bank, or who, without such authority, issues or puts forth any certificate of deposit, draws any order or bill of exchange, makes any acceptance, assigns any note, bond, draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment, or decree, or who makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of such Federal reserve bank or member bank, with intent in any case to injure or defraud such Federal reserve bank or member bank, or any other company, body politic or corporate, or any individual person, or to deceive any officer of such Federal reserve bank or member bank, or the Comptroller of the Currency, or any agent or examiner appointed to examine the affairs of such Federal reserve bank or member bank, or the Federal Reserve Board; and every receiver of a national banking association who, with like intent to defraud or injure, embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any of the moneys, funds, or assets of his trust, and every person who, with like intent, aids or abets any officer, director, agent, employee, or receiver in any violation of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States shall be fined not more than $5,000 or shall be imprisoned for not more than five years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"Any Federal reserve agent, or any agent or employee of such Federal reserve agent ,or of the Federal Reserve Board, who embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, or securities intrusted to his care, or without complying with or in violation of the provisions of the Federal reserve act, issues or puts in circulation any Federal reserve notes shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction in any district court of the United States shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to be sure that I have caught the import of this bill from its hasty reading. As I understand it, the first section—that is, it will be section 1—provides that Federal reserve notes shall be printed in certain denominations, and those denominations have been increased in amount from what they are under the old act with reference to national bank notes.

Mr. OWEN. They have been increased so as to permit denominations of $5,000 and $10,000 to be printed, which would take the place of gold certificates for like amounts. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought that was the purpose of that section, which I think is a wise one. The amendment of sections 5208 and 5209, as I gather from the reading, simply puts the Federal reserve bank and the member bank under the provisions of those two sections, and the penalties imposed under those two sections will apply to the Federal reserve bank and the member banks the same as they apply to the national banks to-day.

Mr. OWEN. And to the employees of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; they are added to it.

Mr. OWEN. That is all that it means.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I caught the meaning of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the committee was unanimous on this measure?

Mr. OWEN. It was.

Mr. PENROSE. I have received so many protests and complaints from Pennsylvania about many of the bills pending before the committee that I was moved to ask the question.

Mr. OWEN. This bill has a unanimous report, and has passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. PENROSE. I notice that the bill bristles with penalties, which seem to be a commendable feature of modern legislation.

Mr. OWEN. They are old penalties.

Mr. PENROSE. I was going to ask the Senator whether they conformed to the penalties of existing law.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; they are the same. The bill extends to the employees of Federal reserve banks the penalties which previously applied to the national banks.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I will not object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the ninth paragraph of section 16 of the Federal reserve act as amended by the acts approved September 7, 1916, and June 21, 1917, and to amend sections 5208 and 5209, Revised Statutes."

JOHN T. EATON.

Mr. WALSH. This morning a favorable report was made on Senate bill 56. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the calendar number of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was reported this morning. The Secretary will state the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 56) for the relief of John T. Eaton.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John T. Eaton, of Helena, Mont., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $560, in compliance with the findings of the Court of Claims, Senate Document No. 220 of the first session of the Sixty-third Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIM OF GOVERNMENT OF FRANCE.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4727.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4727) to authorize the payment to the Government of France of $13,511.13 as an indemnity requested in behalf of Mme. Crignier for losses sustained by her as the result of a search for the body of Admiral John Paul Jones.

Mr. REED. How much does it involve?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Thirteen thousand dollars.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the payment, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a matter of grace and without reference to the question of liability therefor, to the Government of France, of the sum of $13,511.13, for full indemnity for losses suffered by Mme. Crignier by reason of a search for the body of Admiral John Paul Jones, undertaken in 1899 by Gen. Horace Porter, at that time American ambassador to France, and completed by the finding of the body in 1905, as set forth in the message of the President of the United States to the Senate dated June 4, 1918.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTROL OF TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE LINES.

Mr. CUMMINS and Mr. HITCHCOCK addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution 163, which was yesterday referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, be recalled from that committee and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. The Senator who introduced the joint resolution has no objection whatever to that reference, and the chairman of the committee has indicated that in his opinion that should be the reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have just entered the Chamber. What is the resolution? I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not a resolution. It is a request to withdraw a joint resolution from the Committee on Military Affairs and have it referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PENROSE. Do I understand the Senator from Iowa to state that the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, who is not at present in the Chamber, was in favor of this change of reference?

Mr. CUMMINS. I was so informed a few moments ago.

Mr. PENROSE. I had been informed differently, and that is the reason why I wanted to know. I think it would be well to have the Senator verify his information on that point.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] told me, as well as the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], that the chairman of the committee had no objection, and believed that was the proper reference.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not doubt the Senator's statement. The Senator from Indiana is here to speak for himself. I should like to hear what he has to say on the subject.

Mr. WATSON. My understanding was that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] stated that he would have no objection to this reference, but that he wanted to confer with the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who had introduced the joint resolution.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, as the author of the joint resolution, I wish to say that I believe it should go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and I have no objection to the change of reference.

Mr. WATSON. The chairman of the Military Affairs Committee is not here at this time. I should not want to quote him on a proposition of that kind in his absence, but my understanding was that he would not object to it.

Mr. PENROSE. My understanding is different.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well, Mr. President; I withdraw the request for unanimous consent.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, and consider only bills to which there is no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I have received a great many telegrams and letters from the people of Mississippi and other States regarding the amendment to the agricultural bill prohibiting the manufacture of foodstuffs into liquor. In order that I may be able to answer them authoritatively, I desire to ask the chairman of the Agricultural Committee if he can give me any idea of when he proposes to call up this bill, and particularly I want to know whether or not he is going to insist, as I hope he will, upon the consideration of this bill before the recess?

I am very desirous of going home, but it is more important that this legislation should be enacted than that I or any other Senator should look after his political fences. I am unalterably opposed to converting foodstuffs—food that is necessary to sustain the bodies of the men, women, and children of this country, our allies abroad, and our soldiers in the trenches—into a beverage which not only destroys the body but damns the immortal soul. The Senator will kindly answer my question as to whether or not it is his purpose to urge the passage of this bill before the recess.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator's inquiry, I will say that the amendment to which he refers was reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture as an amendment to what is known as the food-production bill. The food-production bill is a special supply bill for the Department of Agriculture. It is a descendant or a successor of what was known as the food-survey bill, which was passed last summer, and approved, I believe, on August 10 of last year. The regular supply bill of the Department of Agriculture, as the Senator knows, is still in conference. The Senate on yesterday declined to instruct the conferees on the part of the Senate to recede from amendment numbered 44. Amendment numbered 44 is the so-called wheat amendment. It was my hope, and I had taken steps to that effect, to have a meeting of the conference committee yesterday immediately after the vote on the part of the Senate. The vote, however, was not taken until after 5.30. I immediately called the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture on the telephone. He was not in his office, but I was advised that he was thought to be on the floor of the Senate. I made a search at this end of the Capitol, but was unable to find him.

I then notified the conferees to meet this morning at 11 o'clock. The chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture called me up a few minutes before 11 and requested that I defer the conference until 4 o'clock this afternoon. I insisted upon an immediate conference, because I thought it would require only a few minutes, and perhaps a report of disagreement would be all that was necessary. He insisted, however, that for special reasons he could not be present, and was very much concerned to be present at the meeting, and urged me to call the meeting for 4 o'clock this afternoon. That was done. The conferees on that amendment will meet this afternoon at 4 o'clock. What will be done, of course, I can not foretell with precision, but possibly a disagreement will be reported. I shall then report to the Senate, making the proper motion to facilitate the proper consideration of that report.

It is not my purpose, speaking for myself alone, to call up the special supply bill until the regular supply bill is disposed of. It seems to me that is the orderly procedure, and that there are a good many reasons in behalf of that course. For my own part, that is the course which I intend to pursue, and, of course, the special bill will trail the regular bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that there is a great demand for this legislation; and the course to be pursued in calling up these bills——

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania will state his point of order.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask what is before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Nothing.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I raise the point of order that this discussion is out of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is an objection, it is out of order.

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the ruling of the Chair?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is an objection to the further discussion of this question as not being before the Senate, it is out of order, there being nothing before the Senate.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will permit the chairman of the committee to answer the question. It is a matter in which the American people are very much interested.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I have already said all that I am in a position to say upon the subject.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, we are supposed to be in what are equivalent to the closing days of a session. We are trying to take a recess which in its length would approximate to an adjournment. We are all interested in these supply bills, and many of them have legislative paragraphs in them in which our constituents are interested.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will desist, I will sit down.

Mr. PENROSE. I will sit down right away.

Mr. VARDAMAN. So will I, and let the business of the Senate proceed.

PROTECTION OF UNIFORMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (H. Con Res. 47) of the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 11247) entitled "An act providing for the protection of the uniform of friendly nations, and for other purposes," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out "persons," in line 3, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the word "person."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, before that question is put I want to say just a word or two.

I regret very much that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] feels that he ought not to press this supplementary Agricultural bill until after the regular Agricultural bill is disposed of. That measure is in conference, and there does not seem to be very much business before the Senate, and I had hoped very much that he would move to take it up. The Senator from Pennsylvania has suggested that we are nearing the close of the session and that we are trying to get a recess. Mr. President, there has been no proposition regarding a recess brought up in the Senate. There has been no resolution presented. There has been no motion carried. The length of this session is indefinite.

Mr. BORAH. Have not the leaders agreed upon a recess?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not in their counsel; I do not know. I am not one of that body. I have seen intimations in the papers and heard suggestions outside that we are going to have a recess, but, Mr. President, there is important business pending in Congress. We condemn slackers nowadays in the industrial world, and it does not seem to me that Congress should set any example that would encourage anything of that kind outside. We have business that ought to be done, and, as far as I am concerned, I think we ought to stay here as long as it is necessary to stay and do it.

This measure that we hope the Senator from Oklahoma will call up is a very important one. It has been urged heretofore, at any rate, that the measure is absolutely necessary and ought to be passed in order to conserve our resources and our food supply. I think it ought to be passed, and I can see really no reason which appeals to me, at any rate, why the Senate should not proceed to its consideration. I want to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that, so far as I can do it, I shall do what I can to prevent any recess until that measure is acted upon.

Mr. SMOOT. The regular order.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, if I am not out of order, I will say, in connection with what the Senator from Washington suggested, that I appreciate the importance of the legislation involved in the special supply bill. It has been suggested by the department as a matter of considerable concern, contributing to the food production of the country. I have no disposition to delay the legislation, but it has occurred to me to have the special bill follow the regular bill. That would be the more orderly procedure.

I also appreciate the Senator's interest in the amendment to which he referred. It is an interest shared by a great many Senators. I might also say that I feel myself a very keen interest in the amendment which was under consideration yesterday, involving the guaranteed price of wheat. I do not wish to do anything that would either directly or indirectly hinder the prospect of its becoming a law and the farmers enjoying the benefit of it. I am trying to pursue the course which I think will best accomplish that end. I may be in error myself.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question? The Senator intends to take up and dispose of the bill referred to by him before the recess, does he not?

Mr. GORE. Well, that is not within my power. That is within the power of the Senate. My only purpose has been to bring up that bill when the regular bill is out of the way. It ought to trail that bill. That is my judgment about it.

Mr. NORRIS. There has been a good deal said about a recess. I want to ask the Senator if he intends to get the bill up if he can and dispose of it before a recess is taken?

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that I made a motion on Saturday to bring it up; and if the resolution brought up yesterday by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] had been agreed to, I would have immediately asked unanimous consent to take up that bill, but, in view of the decision that was taken yesterday, it occurred to me that perhaps, in the interest of those who voted with the majority yesterday, it might best be postponed.

Mr. NORRIS. Still, I would like to have the Senator give a more direct answer to the question, because there is such an interest in that bill on the part of a large number of Senators.

Mr. GORE. I realize that.

Mr. NORRIS. If it could be understood that the Senator intended to press that bill for consideration before the recess, and if that is his intention, I do not think there would be any disposition to ask the Senator to call it up prior to the finishing of the wheat proposition. But can not the Senator assure the Senate that he will do all he can to dispose of the bill in question before the recess is taken?

Mr. GORE. I will say, Mr. President, that I am not speaking as chairman of the committee, but for myself alone. Pursuing the course which seemed to promise the best result to gain an object which I have had very near at heart—$2.50 wheat—I have not been disposed to do anything that would obstruct it. I speak for myself alone, and am responsible only for what I state in this connection.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GORE. I do not know when a recess will be taken, and I can not give the Senator any assurance, but if my wishes shall be fulfilled it is certainly my purpose to have the special bill trail the regular bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I inquire whether the motion made by me was carried?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not yet. That is what Senators are talking about, but the Senator did not know it. The question is on concurring in the resolution.

The resolution was concurred in.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar will now be proceeded with.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 90) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 3311) to increase and expedite the supply of munitions of war was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it was requested by the chairman that this bill should go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 1795) to relieve Congress from the adjudication of private claims against the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 3522) to amend an act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I think this same subject matter has been acted upon in bills that have already passed the Senate. I think this statement was made before when this bill was up and it was asked that it should go over. The Senator who reported it not being present, I ask that it may go over to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 951) to provide for the sinking of artesian wells, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill was considered May 16 last in Committee of the Whole, and the committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Let it go over.

Mr. MYERS. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Are we operating under Rule VIII or under a unanimous-consent agreement to consider unobjected bills only? I heard no unanimous-consent agreement, and my impression is that we are operating under Rule VIII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are operating under Rule VIII.

Mr. MYERS. I make the point of order that under the rule one objection is not sufficient to prevent the consideration of a bill, but that by vote of a majority of the Senate a bill objected to can be considered and disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that there was a unanimous consent asked for by myself, and it was granted by the Senate, to take up bills under Rule VIII on the calendar and to consider only bills to which there was no objection. We are now acting under that unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. MYERS. That is the enlightenment I wanted. I did not hear it. I wanted to know under what rule we are operating.

WISCONSIN BAND OF POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS.

The bill (S. 2120) for the relief of the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 3, line 1, after the word "page," to insert "991, and any subsequent acts of Congress making appropriations for said Indians," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of carrying into effect the act of June 25, 1864 (13 Stat. L., p. 172), and the act of June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., p. 102), the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of that portion of the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians now residing in the States of Wisconsin and Michigan the amount of money which shall be found as a balance due to the said Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians by the Secretary of the Interior, said balance to be determined as follows: By computing the interest on the original sum of $447,339, declared to be due said Pottawatomie Indians, at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from April 1, 1908, to April 4, 1910, and on the balance thereafter found by deducting the various amounts spent out of the appropriations made by Congress for the said Pottawatomie Indians under the act approved April 4, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 288); act approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 539); act approved June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., p. 102); act approved August 1, 1914 (38 Stat L., p. 606); joint resolution approved March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. L., p. 1228); act approved May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. L., p. 156); act approved March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. L., p. 991 and any subsequent acts of Congress making appropriations for said Indians); said interest to be computed at the rate of 4 per cent on balance due said Indians between the dates of said acts of Congress and to the date of the approval of this act as the proportionate share of the said Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians in the annuities and the land of the Pottawatomie Tribe in which they have not shared, as set forth in the report of the Secretary of the Interior to the House of Representatives, embodied in House Document No. 830, Sixtieth Congress, first session, confirmed in part by the act of Congress of June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., p. 102), appropriating the sum of $150,000 on account. Said sum shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum. And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes aforesaid, the amount of the balance found to be due to said Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians now residing in the States of Wisconsin and Michigan, as computed by the Secretary of the Interior by the method hereinbefore set forth: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay Erik O. Morstad, of Carter, Wis., who has lived with and cared for said Indians for many years, the sum of $5,000, said sum to be paid from the amount placed to the credit of said Pottawatomie Indians.

SEC. 2. That from the sum placed to the credit of said Pottawatomie Indians the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay to the legal representatives of R. V. Belt, deceased (Mrs. Joanna Belt and William O. Belt), in full settlement of the claim of said R. V. Belt against said Indians, such sum as the Court of Claims, to which the matter of fees of the attorneys for the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians is hereby referred for judgment, shall find to be due the said R. V. Belt and his associates on a quantum meruit for their services in the prosecution of said claim under a contract with representatives of the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomies, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for 15 per cent on the 1st day of November, 1902. Suit for said attorneys' fees shall be filed in the Court of Claims within 90 days from the date of approval of this act by petition verified by the legal representatives of the estate of said R. V. Belt, deceased, shall be defended by an attorney to be designated by the Attorney General, and the Court of Claims shall render judgment as upon a quantum meruit for such sum as it shall deem just, after consideration of all services rendered in prosecution of said claim by R. V. Belt and his associates and of the contract approved as aforesaid by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. FALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of joint resolution (H. J. Res. 200) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States conferring upon women the right of suffrage.

Mr. SMOOT. We are working under a unanimous-consent agreement to consider unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. FALL. I do not so understand. I understood the Chair to rule that a motion could be made to take up any bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There seems to be some misunderstanding between the Chair and the Senator from Utah. The recollection of the Chair is that the Senator from Utah asked unanimous consent to proceed to consider the calendar under Rule VIII, unobjected bills alone to be considered, but it was at a time when some other matter was before the Senate. Subsequently the Chair announced that the Senate would proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII. I do not know exactly where we are.

Mr. SMOOT. To consider unobjected bills. I was noticing very closely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hold that we are proceeding under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. FALL. My purpose in making the motion is to follow out what I understood was the notice given several days ago, that immediately upon the disposition of certain war measures a motion would be made to take up and dispose of this joint resolution. I will say that as far as my own personal convenience is concerned, twice I have deferred very important personal business engagements for the purpose of remaining here during the discussion of the joint resolution and a vote upon it. I am still in that same position. I yesterday notified parties with whom I had these business engagements that I could not say when the Senate would take a recess. As far as I am concerned I am anxious to be here and to assist in the disposition of the constitutional amendment for woman suffrage. I am in favor of it, and I think it ought to come to a vote, and I hope the Senate will proceed to take it up and dispose of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar will be proceeded with.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, inasmuch as the suffrage amendment is soon to be voted on, either before or after the recess—I trust before—I deem it my duty to take advantage of this occasion to submit certain observations regarding the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas understands that the Chair will hear him for five minutes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Then I will defer until later what I have to say. I had not recalled that we were proceeding, by a unanimous-consent order, under the five-minute rule.

WINFIELD S. SOLOMON.

The bill (S. 3011) for the relief of Winfield S. Solomon was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Winfield S. Solomon, late of Troop D, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said troop and regiment on the 26th day of September, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue by reason of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RATIFICATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a few moments ago the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 90) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, reported by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], from the Committee on the Judiciary, was reached upon the calendar, and I misapprehended just what it was and entered an objection. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that objection. I am very much in favor of that proposed constitutional amendment. It came from the Committee on the Judiciary, and I was under a misapprehension as to what it was.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent to return to Senate joint resolution 90. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I reserve the right to object after the joint resolution shall have been read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That Article V of the Constitution of the United States is hereby amended to read as follows, to wit:

"ARTICLE V.

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution when ratified within six years from the date of their proposal by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, or by the electors in three-fourths thereof, as the mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress: Provided, That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I feel myself in hearty concurrence with the object of the joint resolution, so I have no objection to its consideration.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not desire to have this joint resolution considered under the five-minute rule; I do not think it should be so considered. I therefore object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution goes over.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3646) to grant rights of way over Government lands for reservoir purposes for the conservation and storage of water to be used by the city of San Diego, Cal., and adjacent communities, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 136) providing for the registration for military service of the subjects or citizens residing in the United States of a foreign country with whose Government the United States has concluded or hereafter concludes a convention or agreement consenting to such aliens being drafted into the military forces of the United States under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," and all amendments thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think that matter has been taken care of by an amendment to the Army bill, and, therefore, I ask that the joint resolution go over.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then let us get it off the calendar.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The objection to taking the joint resolution off the calendar at the present time is that the Army appropriation bill might fail in conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution goes over.

JOHN F. KELLY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1478) for the relief of John F. Kelly. It proposes that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers John F. Kelly, who was a private in Company F, First Regiment Maryland Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of that company and regiment on the 15th of February, 1863; but no pay, bounty, or other allowances shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADOLPH F. HITCHLER.

The bill (S. 164) for the relief of Adolph F. Hitchler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, Adolph F. Hitchler, late of Company K, One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of the above organization on the 5th of November, 1864; but no pay, pension, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4185) to require the Commissioner of Education to devise methods and promote plans for the elimination of adult illiteracy in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That bill can not be considered under the five-minute rule, and I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The bill goes over.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 39) to print 250,000 copies of the soldiers and sailors' civil relief act, approved March 8, 1918, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution goes over.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that beginning with Order of Business 332, being Senate bill 3899, down to and including Order of Business 345, being Senate bill 3904, go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills referred to by the Senator from Utah will go over under the rule.

The resolution (S. Res. 229) to request the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred S. J. Res. 145, to give said resolution early consideration and report to the Senate thereon, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution goes over.

JACOB NICE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1477) for the relief of Jacob Nice. It proposes that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Jacob Nice, who was a private of Company G, Ninety-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 17th of August, 1865, but no back pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that Order of Business 367, being Senate bill 3907, and Order of Business 368, being Senate bill 4426, be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bills will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3172) to provide for the abandonment of Piney Branch Road between Allison Street and Buchanan Street NW., in the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

NATIONAL GERMAN-AMERICAN ALLIANCE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3529) to repeal the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National German-American Alliance," approved February 25, 1907.

The SECRETARY. The committee amendment striking out section 2 of the bill has already been agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3438) to prevent corrupt practices in the election of Senators, Representatives, or Delegates in Congress was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That bill can not be considered under the five-minute rule, and I therefore ask that it go over.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, do I understand that there is objection to the consideration of that bill?

Mr. SMOOT. There is objection to its consideration under the five-minute rule; yes.

Mr. POMERENE. The bill was very fully considered the other day. It is a very short bill. I hope the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection to its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill can not be considered under the five-minute rule, and therefore I object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 3914) authorizing a right of way for the transportation of water for improvement of grazing and development of the live-stock industry upon public and national forest lands in Arizona was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin objects, and the bill goes over.

MARY C. MAYERS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 641) for the relief of Mary C. Mayers. The preamble recites that whereas Joseph L. Mayers, lately an American citizen, residing at Yokohama, Japan, died on May 7, 1899, as the result of injuries received on May 6, 1899, by the fall of the first whaleboat belonging to the U. S. S. Charleston, then lying in Victoria Harbor, Hongkong, China, and which whaleboat was negligently detached from the davits of the ship by some of the ship's crew, Mayers having gone to the ship on official business; and that he left surviving him a widow, Mary C. Mayers, who was wholly dependent on him for support, and she is now without means; therefore, the bill proposes to pay her $5,000 for her aid and support.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, was there an amendment adopted to the bill which has just been passed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that no amendment to the bill was reported or offered.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely call the attention of the Senator reporting the bill to the fact that in the correspondence, found in the report of the committee accompanying the bill, there is a letter from Deacon & Hastings, attorneys for the applicant, in which this statement appears:

> As, however, we understand it is desired to effect an immediate settlement, we are instructed to inform you that our client is willing to accept (of course, without prejudice to his legal rights) the sum of $1,000 in full settlement of his claim, if paid promptly.

Does the Senator reporting the bill remember any discussion of that matter in the committee?

Mr. GRONNA. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. SMOOT. That is a letter of date May 8, 1899.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Utah that we did not take that letter into consideration.

Mr. OVERMAN. How much is proposed to be appropriated by the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill proposes to appropriate $5,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then, Mr. President, let the bill go over.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say that the committee unanimously reported in favor of $5,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to examine the facts as to a bill proposing to appropriate $5,000 in a case where the beneficiary was willing to take $1,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been passed, and a motion will be necessary to reconsider it before it can be amended.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3944) for the relief of Emma H. Ridley was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the consideration of that bill. I can not understand why all these claims are not put on the same basis. There is a general provision of law for paying those on the Canal Zone who are injured, and providing also for the payment of the heirs of those who are killed. Here it is proposed to pay a man in one case $3,000, and to pay another man a year's wages.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina objects, and the bill goes over.

The bill (S. 3258) for the relief of Ethel Proctor was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS IN THE CACHE NATIONAL FOREST, UTAH.

The bill (S. 2088) to consolidate certain forest lands within the Cache National Forest, Utah, and to add certain lands thereto, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to accept from the persons named below title to the following-described lands, either in whole or in part, upon certification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes and approximately equal in value to the lands to be given in exchange therefor:

Isaac P. Stewart: The southwest quarter of the southwest quarter and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 21; the south half of the northeast quarter and the west half of section 28; all of sections 29, 30, and 31; the southeast quarter and the west half of section 33, all in township 11 north, range 2 east, Salt Lake meridian.

James E. Hansen: All of section 19, township 11 north, range 2 east, Salt Lake meridian.

William H. Stewart: All of section 5, township 10 north, range 2 east, Salt Lake meridian.

It also authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue to the persons named below in lieu thereof patents to the following described areas or to such parts thereof as may be found approximately equal in value to the lands conveyed:

Isaac P. Stewart: Lots 3 and 4, the northwest quarter, and the southwest quarter of section 1; the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 12; lot 4, section 30, all in township 13 north, range 18 west, Salt Lake meridian; the east half of section 11; the west half and the southeast quarter of section 15; the south half of section 27; lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter, the north half of the southeast quarter, and the northeast quarter of section 33; all of section 34, all in township 13 north, range 19 west, Salt Lake meridian.

James E. Hansen: Lots 1, 2, and 3 in section 1; the north half of the southeast quarter, section 12, township 14 north, range 5 west; lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 in section 6, the north half of the southwest quarter, the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter, and the northeast quarter in section 7, township 14 north, range 4 west, Salt Lake meridian.

William H. Stewart: The southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 23, the south half of the northwest quarter and the southwest quarter of section 24, the west half of the northwest quarter and the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 25, the east half of the northeast quarter and the southeast quarter of section 26, all in township 13 north, range 18 west, Salt Lake meridian.

The lands conveyed to the Government shall thereupon become part of the Cache National Forest and subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3260) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Wilbur F. Lawton was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3986) to acquire the manuscript of Charles Chaillé-Long, containing an account of the unveiling of the McClellan Statue was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH and Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ARMY MINE-PLANTER SERVICE.

The bill (H. R. 9898) to establish in the Coast Artillery Corps of the Regular Army an Army mine-planter service was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the provisions of that bill are contained in the Army appropriation bill, but it might remain on the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is the better course. The matter has gone into conference, and we do not know whether or not it will be agreed to in conference.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is what I say, that it should be left on the calendar; but there is no necessity of passing it, because the Senate has already passed it as an amendment to the Army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York objects, and the bill goes over, but remains on the calendar.

VICTORIA A. THOMSON.

The bill (S. 4467) to validate the homestead entry of the heirs of Victoria A. Thomson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to validate the homestead entry No. 037153, made by the heirs of Victoria A. Thomson, deceased, for the northeast quarter section 4, township 8 north, range 14 east, Montana principal meridian, and authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent thereon upon the submission of satisfactory proof of compliance with the laws under which the entry was allowed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LYNETTE DEAN MAXWELL.

The bill (S. 4541) for the relief of Lynette Dean Maxwell, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to validate the desert-land entry of Lynette Dean Maxwell, numbered 013684, for the south half of the northeast quarter, and lots 1 and 2, section 2, township 5 north, range 8 east, New Mexico principal meridian, and authorizes the State of New Mexico through its proper officers, to select 160 acres of surveyed, nonmineral, unappropriated, and unreserved public land in lieu of that embraced in said desert-land entry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WIDOW OF RUDOLPH H. VON EZDORF.

The bill (S. 2474) for the relief of the widow of Rudolph H. von Ezdorf, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to that bill now, as it is in the same class as others to which I have objected; I should like an opportunity to look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that the committee has given this bill very careful study, and the amount asked for has been cut in two. The committee allowed one year's salary.

Mr. OVERMAN. If that is the case, I withdraw my objection to the bill. I did not understand that there was an amendment making the provision the Senator suggests, and I had objected to other bills of a similar nature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina withdraws his objection. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 4, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$9,000" and insert "$4,500," so as to make the bill read:

Whereas Rudolph H. von Ezdorf, late surgeon and a commissioned officer in the United States Public Health Service, contracted myocarditis as a sequel to an attack of yellow fever, incurred in line of duty while an assistant surgeon engaged in the special work of suppressing an epidemic of yellow fever in the State of Mississippi during the year 1898; and

Whereas said myocarditis so contracted was the approximate cause of the death of the said Rudolph H. von Ezdorf while he was actually engaged in the special work of investigating the suppression and control of malarial fever in the county of Lincoln, N. C., on September 7, 1916: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the widow of Rudolph H. von Ezdorf, deceased, the sum of $4,500, being the amount of salary and allowances for two years.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. On page 2, line 5, the words "two years" should be stricken out and "one year" inserted in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 5, after the words "allowances for," it is proposed to strike out "two years" and insert "one year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

INCREASE OF MILITARY FORCES.

The bill (S. 4459) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that bill had better go over, Mr. President.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, does the Senator object to any discussion of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I have no objection at all, if it can be passed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I simply desire to say that in all probability it will be quite useless for the Senate to pass this bill; but its presence upon the calendar with a favorable report from the Committee on Military Affairs is somewhat significant, as it authorizes the President to raise 3,000,000 more men. Since the bill was reported a decision has been reached which is contrary to that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over on objection.

SALARY OF CLERKS OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

The bill (S. 3079) fixing the salary of the clerks of the United States district courts; prescribing how and when they shall account for the fees collected; providing for the office expenses of such clerks, including salaries of deputy clerks and clerical assistants; and for the travel and subsistence expense of such clerks and their deputies when necessarily absent from their official residences, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I will inquire of the Senator from North Carolina if that bill is all right?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to say, in answer to the question of the Senator from Utah, that the bill has been examined into thoroughly by the Judiciary Committee. Three different Presidents have recommended to Congress the abolition of the fee system, and the Judiciary Committee has had the question under consideration a number of times. The bill as originally introduced by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] proposed to fix definitely the salaries of the clerks of the various Federal courts, but the bill as amended by the Committee on the Judiciary provides that the salaries of the clerks of the United States courts shall be fixed by the Attorney General at not less than $2,500 nor more than $5,000; in other words, the committee take the highest salary received and the lowest salary, and authorize the Attorney General to fix the rate of compensation, but it must be fixed between the limits provided and within that range. The salary must be based, furthermore, on the amount of work done and the location of the court. That is the only way, in our opinion, that we could fix the salaries on an equitable basis and abolish altogether the fee system. That is the purpose of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That on and after the 1st day of July, 1918, all clerks of United States district courts shall be appointed by the judge for the district, or the senior judge if there be more than one judge in the district, subject to the approval of the senior circuit judge for the circuit in which the district is situated, and all fees and emoluments authorized by law to be paid to the clerks of the United States district courts, except the clerks of the district courts of Alaska, shall be charged as heretofore and shall be collected, as far as possible, and paid into the Treasury of the United States in such manner and at such times as hereinafter provided; and such clerks shall be paid, in lieu of the fees and emoluments now allowed by law, an annual salary as hereinafter provided: Provided, That this section shall not be construed to require or authorize fees to be charged or collected from the United States.

SEC. 2. That the clerk of the United States district court for each of the judicial districts of the United States, except the clerks of the district courts of Alaska, shall be paid, in lieu of the fees, salaries, and per cent now allowed by law, an annual salary to be fixed by the Attorney General at not less than $2,500 nor more than $5,000, based in each instance upon the amount of business transacted by the court and the fees and the emoluments received by the clerks in the four years last preceding.

SEC. 3. That when any clerk of a district court is necessarily absent from his official residence on any official business he shall be allowed his actual traveling expenses only and his necessary and actual expenses for lodging and subsistence, the latter not to exceed $4 per day.

SEC. 4. That when, in the opinion of the Attorney General, the public interest requires it, he may, on the recommendation of the clerk of a district court, which recommendation shall state facts (as distinguished from concessions) showing necessity for the same, allow such clerk to employ necessary deputies and clerical assistants, upon compensation to be fixed by the Attorney General from time to time and paid as hereinafter provided.

When any such deputy or clerical assistant is necessarily absent from the place of his regular employment on official business he shall be allowed his actual traveling expenses only and his necessary and actual expenses for lodging and subsistence, the latter not to exceed $3 per day.

SEC. 5. That the necessary office expenses of the clerks of the district courts of the United States shall be allowed when authorized by the Attorney General.

SEC. 6. That the salaries of the clerks, deputy clerks, and clerical assistants to the clerks of the district courts shall be paid monthly by the marshals of the respective districts.

SEC. 7. That the expense accounts of clerks of the United States district courts, when made out and verified, and the expense accounts of their deputy clerks and clerical assistants, when made out and certified as correct by the clerk of such court, covering the necessary expenses incurred by such clerk, deputy clerk, or clerical assistants when necessarily absent from the place of regular employment on official business, shall be paid by the marshal, who shall include them in his accounts with the United States.

SEC. 8. That the necessary office expenses of the clerk of the United States district court, as allowed and authorized by the Attorney General, shall be paid by the marshal and included in his accounts with the United States.

SEC. 9. That the clerk of every district court, except the clerks of the district courts of Alaska, shall account quarterly for all the fees and emoluments earned during the quarter last preceding such accounting, except where the person requiring the services is relieved by law from prepayment of fees and costs, and for all fees and emoluments received within the quarter which had been earned prior thereto. Such accounting shall be in writing and shall be made to the Attorney General, in such form as he may prescribe, on the 1st days of January, April, July, and October in each year, or within 20 days thereafter, and shall include all moneys received in connection with the admission of attorneys to practice in the court, all that portion retained by the clerk of moneys received for services in naturalization proceedings in whatever capacity rendered, and all other amounts received for services in any way connected with the clerk's office. Such accounts shall be made in duplicate and be verified by the oath of the officer making them. The Attorney General shall cause each such return or account to be carefully examined by the proper officer of the Department of Justice, and shall approve the same as he may deem just and proper, and shall transmit it with his approval to the Auditor for the State and Other Departments, by whom an account shall be stated against the officer rendering such return or account. Immediately upon receipt of notice from the auditor, or within 10 days thereafter, the clerk shall deposit to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States the amount so stated against him.

During the reading of the amendment,

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I should like a little more information in regard to this measure.

Mr. OVERMAN. As I stated a moment ago, the purpose of the bill is to abolish the fee system of paying clerks of United States courts and to fix their salaries. I am satisfied the Senator will be in favor of it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. My recollection is that I have some letters from some of the clerks in my State against the measure. I am in favor of abolishing the fee system, but, as I recall, those who have written me think that there is some discrimination in the salaries provided.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the trouble with a matter such as this. The clerks have been here and asked us to pass a bill. This bill does not fix the salary of any clerk, because it provides that the Attorney General shall fix the salary between the highest salary now paid and the lowest salary now paid, taking into consideration the amount of business transacted and the location of the court.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is an amendment to the House bill, striking out all of the House bill and substituting the Senate provision, is it?

Mr. OVERMAN. This is a bill reported from the Judiciary Committee as a substitute for the other bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think probably the letters I have received were with reference to the provisions of the House bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will hear the bill read—it is being read now—I think he will see that the objections are obviated.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, the bill as I originally introduced it undertook to fix the salaries in the various districts; but the Committee on the Judiciary really substitutes for the bill which I introduced, fixing these salaries, a provision which authorizes the Attorney General to fix them within certain limits; so I think that the objections to which the Senator refers do not apply to the bill as amended.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was the trouble; some of the clerks did not think they were getting enough money, and in consequence we found that we could not pass the bill. We have two judicial districts in North Carolina, and the clerk of the eastern district thinks he ought to have the same salary as the clerk of the western district; and so it is all over the United States. We found Senators objecting and letters coming in here protesting against the Senator's bill because it undertook to fix the salaries. We never can pass a bill fixing the salaries ourselves because of the embarrassment we have in that respect. Therefore we fixed a rule by which the Attorney General could act and fix the salaries.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Upon that statement by the Senator, I shall not object. I think that meets the suggestion made in the letters to me, so I will not make any objection.

After the conclusion of the reading of the amendment,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to fix the salaries of the clerks of the United States district courts and to provide for their office expenses, and for other purposes."

DIRECTOR OF MUNITIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 179, Senate bill 3311, to increase and expedite the supply of munitions of war, in order that I may ask that it be indefinitely postponed, for the reason that the substance of the powers conferred by it is included in the so-called Overman bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Oregon whether that is the so-called munitions-director bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir. I do not know whether or not the Senator heard my statement of the reasons for the request. It is because the powers attempted to be conferred are included within the provisions of the so-called Overman bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, I have no objection to its indefinite postponement, although I do not agree with the Senator's estimate of the Overman bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If there is any question about it, we will let it remain on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon still request the indefinite postponement of the bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; I withdraw my request, Mr. President.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The next business on the calendar was the Senate resolution to print as a Senate document the article entitled "The Electoral College and Presidential Suffrage."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

The resolution (S. Res. 242) amending paragraph 3 of Rule VII of the standing rules of the Senate, relating to the morning hour's business, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, let me make a statement before the Senator announces his objection. I realize that perhaps there is not sufficient time to debate the matter under the five-minute rule.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I asked that the resolution go over simply because I do not know a thing about it. I do not know what it is.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I merely want to say that the bill establishes one morning hour in each week in which bills on the calendar shall be considered in their regular order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I withdraw my objection, so far as that is concerned.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Rules with an amendment, to strike out all after line 2, on page 1, and insert:

Add to paragraph 3 of Rule VII the following proviso:

"Provided, however, That on Mondays the calendar shall be called under Rule VIII, and during the morning hour no motion shall be entertained to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the calendar except the motion to continue the consideration of a bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject against objection as provided in Rule VIII."

So as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That paragraph 3 of Rule VII of the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended as follows:

"Add to paragraph 3 of Rule VII the following proviso:

"'Provided, however, That on Mondays the calendar shall be called under Rule VIII, and during the morning hour no motion shall be entertained to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the calendar except the motion to continue the consideration of a bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject against objection as provided in Rule VIII.'"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

THE PHILIPPINE SCOUTS.

The bill (S. 2933) for the relief of the Philippine Scouts was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, that is a bill in which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is personally interested, by which I mean that it is his bill, and he has been very actively engaged in an effort to secure its passage. Under the circumstances, I hope there will be no objection to its consideration. The Senator from Iowa is not in his seat. I am sure that if he were here he would ask for its consideration.

Mr. KING. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

GEORGE B. HUGHES.

The bill (S. 2176) for the relief of George B. Hughes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to George B. Hughes, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 as compensation for the loss of his right arm while in the performance of his duties as an electrician in the Government Printing Office during the month of January, 1899.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN MONTANA.

The bill (S. 4221) for the relief of private owners of lands within or near the Bitter Root National Forest, Mont., was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Let that go over, Mr. President.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I request the Senator from Wisconsin to withhold his objection for a minute. That bill is very similar to one that has just been passed, to consolidate lands within the Cache National Forest in Utah. The principle is the same. This bill was drawn by an official of the Agricultural Department. It is recommended by the Agricultural Department with an amendment which the department suggested. With that amendment it meets with the approval of the department. It is merely to enable a few private owners of lands in or near the Bitter Root National Forest in Montana, isolated tracts which are unsalable at present, to exchange them with the Government, and to receive other lands in exchange, whereby they may consolidate their holdings in larger areas, and make them salable, so that they can dispose of them.

That is the explanation which I have to offer and I hope it may meet with the approval of the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, he will recognize the distinction between this bill and the bill referred to by him that was passed a few minutes ago. In that bill the specific lands were described and approved. In this bill there is a general authority to exchange upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture only. The Interior Department has an equal interest in the matter of exchanges with the Agricultural Department; and if this bill should pass it would be the first time to my knowledge that Congress has enacted general legislation of this nature. I therefore object.

Mr. MYERS. I will say to the Senator, if he will permit me, that the report of the Secretary of Agriculture states that similar bills have heretofore been passed applicable to the Oregon National Forest, the Whitman National Forest in the State of Oregon, the Paulina National Forest, the Ochocho National Forest, and the Florida National Forest. I can not speak with personal knowledge of those bills, but the Secretary of Agriculture says that is the case.

Mr. LENROOT. I have no recollection of any bill which has passed in this form in the past. I may be mistaken, but I do not think there is any bill of this kind. We have passed a number of bills providing for exchanges, giving the description and authorizing the exchange of particular lands; but this bill authorizes the exchange of lands not only contiguous to national forests but lands near national forests. It is a very broad and sweeping power, which Congress, I feel sure I am correct in saying, has consistently refused to grant to the departments in the past.

I therefore object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2715) to authorize an exchange of lands with the State of Montana in connection with Muddy Creek Reservoir site, Sun River project, and Nelson Reservoir site, Milk River project, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 3, line 1, after the word "project," to strike out the period and the word "The" and insert a semicolon and the word "the," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon receipt of proper deeds from the State Board of Land Commissioners of the State of Montana, executed under authority of its legislative assembly, reconveying to the United States of America title to the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter section 2, north half of the northeast quarter and southeast quarter of the northeast quarter section 3, township 22 north, range 1 west, Montana principal meridian; northeast quarter of the northeast quarter, south half of the northeast quarter, and southeast quarter section 20, east half of the northeast quarter, and southeast quarter section 21, southwest quarter of the northwest quarter, east half of the southwest quarter, and southwest quarter of the southeast quarter section 27, northeast quarter, northwest quarter, north half of the southwest quarter, and north half of the southeast quarter section 28, north half of the southwest quarter section 29, southeast quarter of the northwest quarter section 30, north half of the northeast quarter, and north half of the northwest quarter section 32, north half of the northeast quarter, and northeast quarter of the northwest quarter section 33, east half of the northeast quarter, south half of the northwest quarter, east half of the southwest quarter, and west half of the southeast quarter section 34, township 23 north, range 1 west, Montana principal meridian, for the Muddy Creek Reservoir site, Sun River project; and the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter section 35, township 32 north, range 2 east, north half of the southwest quarter section 4, township 31 north, range 32 east, and all of section 36, township 32 north, range 31 east, Montana principal meridian, for the Nelson Reservoir site, Milk River project, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue patents to said State for such vacant, surveyed, unreserved, unoccupied, nonmineral public lands as may be selected by said State within its boundaries, not exceeding the amount of land included in said deeds, and said land when so reconveyed shall not be subject to settlement, location, entry, or selection under the public-land laws, but shall be reserved for the use of the United States Reclamation Service for the purposes aforesaid: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior may restore such lands as he may determine are not needed for said reservoir sites.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2171) to abolish the United States Land Office at Springfield, Mo., was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, in view of the absence from the Chamber of both the Senators from Missouri, I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4366) to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 50, 1914, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1913 (38 Stat. L., pp. 4, 75), was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator who reported the bill here; but that is a bill that clearly ought to have gone to the Committee on Printing. It affects nothing else, and how it ever got before the Committee on the Library I do not know, except that it might have been through an inadvertence. I would have asked its reference to the Committee on Printing. I shall take no notice of that, however, in the absence of the Senator who reported the bill.

CATHERINE GRACE.

The bill (S. 4017) for the relief of Catherine Grace was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of $469.50, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Catherine Grace, widow of James Grace, who died as the result of injuries received by him, the said James Grace, while in the performance of his duties as an employee of the Government.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask whether that conforms to the rule that has been laid down as to compensation? What amount is appropriated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Four hundred and sixty-nine dollars and fifty cents.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3269) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John H. Armstrong was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MAHONING RIVER BRIDGE, OHIO.

The bill (H. R. 10021) granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Trumbull County, Ohio, to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the county commissioners of Trumbull County, Ohio, to construct, maintain, and operate, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River, near the city of Niles, in the township of Weathersfield, in the county of Trumbull, State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF LIGNITE COALS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3220) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make investigations, through the Bureau of Mines, of lignite coals, to determine the practicability of their utilization as a fuel and in producing commercial products.

Mr. WALSH. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to lay the same temporarily aside until the Senate can consider certain pension bills that would have been reached if the morning hour had been extended a few minutes, being the bills H. R. 12211, H. R. 12229, S. 4722, and S. 4723.

Mr. HENDERSON. Only temporarily, and with that understanding I have no objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. How much time will it take? Will the bills lead to any discussion?

Mr. WALSH. I think not.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana whether those are special bills or do they relate to the entire subject?

Mr. WALSH. No; they are special bills, ordinary omnibus bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRONNA. With the understanding that the unfinished business will not lose its status, and that it is laid aside only for the purpose of considering the pension bills, I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; that is understood.

Mr. FLETCHER. The only trouble about that is we do not know how long it will take. It might take a week to consider those bills.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator ask to take up some particular bill?

Mr. WALSH. Four pension bills.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator does not anticipate that any of them will lead to debate?

Mr. WALSH. I do not.

Mr. SIMMONS. If they do lead to debate the Senator will be willing to withdraw any one that does lead to it?

Mr. WALSH. I shall be glad to do that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am asking the Senator the question because I am very anxious to call up and dispose of the bond bill.

Mr. WALSH. If there is to be any protracted debate upon a pension bill I shall ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked that the unfinished business be laid aside informally. Is there objection?

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say to the Senator from Montana that I shall have to leave here at 6 o'clock this afternoon. I do not anticipate that it will take very long to dispose of the unfinished business. I am perfectly willing to take a vote at any time. If those who are opposed to the bill want to take time, of course I can not object to their taking time, but I shall not occupy any great length of time, and I do hope the measure can be disposed of to-day.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator from North Dakota will pardon me, I am, like himself, very much interested in the consideration of the bill which is the unfinished business, and if the bills for which I ask consideration take any considerable length of time I shall withdraw the request.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none and the pension bills will be proceeded with.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12211) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 2, after line 18, to strike out:

The name of Sarah B. Greene, dependent mother of Benjamin J. Greene, late of the United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 4, after the word "First," to strike out "Regiment" and insert "Battalion," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Edward Blackmer, late of Company G, First Battalion Wyoming Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 6, to strike out:

The name of Annie Neate, widow of John S. Neate, late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 14, to strike out:

The name of Fred A. Angelo, late of Troop C, Thirteenth Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 2, before the words "per month," to strike out "$12," and insert "$17," so as to read:

The name of Samuel E. Spencer, late of the One hundred and twelfth Company United States Coast Artillery, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 3, to strike out:

The name of Edith V. Bowman, widow of Thomas E. Bowman, late of One hundred and tenth Company, United States Coast Artillery, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child, Charles T., of the said Thomas E. Bowman until he reaches the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 2, to strike out:

The name of Grant H. Hill, late of Company M, Fourth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 7, to strike out:

The name of Lindley Herrington, late of the United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 4, to strike out:

The name of Genevra M. Lamb, formerly widow of John D. Spittler, late of Company C, First United States Dragoons, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Montana will kindly give me his attention, I desire at this point to offer the following amendment, and then I will explain to the Senate why I offer it. On page 10, after line 4, I move to insert:

The name of Charles A. Walters, late Company G, First Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

In the omnibus pension bill, House bill 9641, there was a provision granting to Charles A. Walters $24 per month. The Senate struck that provision from the House bill, and the conferees finally agreed to the action of the Senate. At a conference the other day upon a Senate bill there was a pension granted to a soldier at the rate of $24 per month under the same circumstances and conditions that the pension was asked for Charles A. Walters. After going into the testimony more carefully it was thought by the conferees on the part of the Senate that if the conferees on the part of the House would yield upon that item, one of the Senate conferees would be asked to offer an amendment to the pending bill and that the Senate agree to the same. Therefore I have asked that this amendment be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 11, line 3, after the name "Edward P. Aler," to insert "alias John P. Edwards," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Edward P. Aler, alias John P. Edwards, late of Company G, Two hundred and second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 4, to strike out:

The name of Emma L. Green, dependent mother of Frank M. Green, alias Marshall F. Green, late of Company D, First Regiment South Carolina Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 18, after the word "helpless," to insert "and dependent," so as to make the clause read:

The name of James P. Dooley, helpless and dependent child of James Dooley, late of Company B, Second Regiment Indiana Volunteers, War with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill what is the total increase of the pension roll that is made by this bill.

Mr. WALSH. I have not had any estimate made of the amount, and I am unable to inform the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. Can the Senator approximate it?

Mr. WALSH. No; I can not.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. SMOOT managers at the conference on the part of the Senate.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12229) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, the first item read being the following:

The name of William Wilson, late of Company B, Seventy-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why Mr. Wilson is singled out and a special pension granted him. Do not the general pension laws, particularly the one passed recently, known as the Smoot Act, cover every case of this character?

Mr. WALSH. The report shows that William Wilson, aged 77 years, late a private, Company B, Seventy-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry, from September 26, 1861, to September 22, 1862 (length of service 11 months 27 days), is now pensioned under certificate No. 176279 at the rate of $30 per month under the general law for disease of lungs and heart and curvature of the spine.

His claim for increase from the $30 rate was rejected June 29, 1917, on the ground that his condition was due in part to senility.

Medical testimony filed with this committee indicates the claimant is wholly unfitted for self-support and appears to be in a condition to require periodical aid and attendance of another person by reason of disease of heart, recurring attacks of hemorrhage of lungs, curvature of spine, and the infirmities of age; further evidence shows him to be without means, property, or income other than his pension, which it is recommended be increased to $40 per month.

My recollection is that under the general act passed some time ago, known as the Smoot Act, the pension would be increased to $35. This is an increase to $40. Have I given the figures accurately I ask the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. I beg pardon.

Mr. WALSH. This pensioner was pensioned at the rate of $30 per month. Under the general act the rate would be increased to $35.

Mr. SMOOT. He is 77, and what was his length of service?

Mr. WALSH. Eleven months.

Mr. SMOOT. He would get $35.

Mr. WALSH. That is what I understood.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the general law now he would get $35, and if his physical condition is such under the rules which have been adopted by both the Senate and the House committees he would be entitled to a rate of $40 a month.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill. After the first item in it, on page 1, after line 9, I move to insert:

The name of Elizabeth K. Cottman, widow of Vincendon L. Cottman, late rear admiral of the United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. KING. I raise a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to make this suggestion to the Senator: The Senate already passed this item in a bill some little time ago. It went to the House and was stricken out there. I understand the House conferees insist that they will not grant a pension to the widow of an officer at a rate of more than $35 a month. The Senate conferees had to accede to their request, and this woman is getting no pension at all.

I understand a rear admiral corresponds with a major general in the Army. The Senate committee now provides for the widow of a major general and I want this item to go in in connection with that, so that if they are able to get the House conferees to recede from the position they have taken heretofore this widow may also be pensioned.

Mr. THOMAS. Do I understand from the Senator that the object of this pension is the widow of a rear admiral?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; a rear admiral.

Mr. SMOOT. In order that my colleague [Mr. KING], who objected to the consideration of this item, may know the situation as it really exists between the two Houses, I want to explain it in a few words.

The item the Senator from Washington has just offered as an amendment to the bill passed the Senate once as an amendment to a House bill. When the conferees met upon that bill the conferees of the House notified the conferees of the Senate that there had been a rule adopted by the House by a vote of the House that the widow of an officer should receive no greater pension than the widow of an enlisted man. This item was the only one that the Senate put upon the bill granting a pension to an officer's widow. The conferees on the part of the Senate knew that in this bill there was an item for the widow of Maj. Gen. Mills granting her a pension of $50 a month. So we concluded, as long as the conferees of the House intended to have a direct vote upon the question, that we had better have both items in one bill. The one is the widow of a major general and the other the widow of a rear admiral, and the question can be settled once and for all with that one reference to the House. Therefore I suggested to the Senator from Washington that we yield on the case, so that the bill could go to the House without any disagreement on the part of the conferees and that he could offer an amendment to this bill and then let the question be settled upon this bill alone.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask my colleague whether there is any general law providing for pensioning the widows of officers in the Army and officers in the Navy, or do we have to have special bills for each particular case?

Mr. SMOOT. Over and above the rate established by law the Pension Committees have agreed upon a rate, as I remember, by special acts for the widow of a major general of $50.

Mr. WALSH. I think the Senator is in error about that. I took occasion to look into that matter, and much to my surprise I found that the pension of the widow of a major general or rear admiral was the same as a pension to the widow of an enlisted man.

Mr. SMOOT. I was in error if I said it was by existing law. I will say this, that in the past the Pension Committees of the House and Senate have had rules, which have been printed, showing the rates that would be allowed to the widow of a lieutenant, to the widow of a captain, to the widow of a major, a colonel, and a general, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH. I understood that the Senator's colleague was inquiring as to the law, not the rule established by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the law a pension for an officer's widow is the same as for a private.

Mr. WALSH. It is my recollection that the law provides for a low rate of pension for the widow of a rear admiral, and accordingly the House adopted the rule suggested by the senior Senator from Utah of passing special bills for an increased pension, as suggested by him.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague also that I could present to the Senate a long list of major generals and generals and rear admirals whose widows have received from $100 down to $50. That is the general rate which has been given.

Those who receive $100 per month are the widows of officers who had exceedingly distinguished service.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me suggest to the Senator also that under the law, I understand, the widow of an officer in the Regular Establishment can not get a pension unless it is shown that his death was the result of disability contracted in the service. The department holds technically that Admiral Cottman did not die of disabilities contracted in the service, but the committee, after examining the reports of the medical officers and considering the character of his disease, closed their report in this way:

Your committee are of the opinion that the long and exceedingly valuable services of Rear Admiral Cottman—

And they point out that his services were—

and the widow's necessitous circumstances taken in connection with the fact that his death was most probably due to disease resulting from the service, justify the allowance to the widow of the pension of $50 per month proposed in the bill.

That is just in line with what the Senator mentioned about the list of widows getting $50 a month. I have here a list of pensions to commissioned officers, a document of the Sixty-fourth Congress, second session. Pages 16, 17, 18, and 19, contain a statement with reference to the widows of rear admirals, showing that quite a large number are getting $50 a month, as we have provided by special act. As the Senator said, we passed the House bill and the Senate committee reported it favorably. I have a copy of the report here. Under the circumstances it seems to me that the amendment ought to go on this bill in connection with the other items, so that if the rule adopted by the House is to be followed it will be applied to all. If not, then it should not be made to apply to any of these widows.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think there ought to be a little correction in the statement that the widow of an officer can not receive anything unless it be established that the death of the husband was due to some disease or injury of service origin. Under the law of 1890, which has been amended several times, the widow of a soldier or officer of the Civil War, of course, would receive a pension whether the death of her husband was the result of disease of service origin or otherwise. The amounts allowed, however, were no greater for the widow of an officer than for the widow of a private soldier, the law specifically declaring that when the pension was granted for service only there should be no distinction between the widows of officers and the widows of enlisted men.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that that is the proper view to take?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have always thought it was a very proper view to take, but the Senate itself by its own action has always made more or less of a distinction between not only what constitutes poverty on the part of the widow of an officer and the widow of a private soldier, but has allowed a greater amount to the widow of an officer than to the widow of a private soldier.

While I have always done all I could to prevent any distinction being made it nevertheless has been made, and made in so very many cases that it has almost become a precedent to guide the Senate and to guide the Committee on Pensions in allowing a little more to the widow of an officer than is allowed to the widow of a private soldier.

Mr. WALSH rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the junior Senator from Utah still insist on his point of order?

Mr. KING. I yield for a moment to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I am in a way pledged to expedite the passage of the bill which is the unfinished business and to give way if these bills lead to discussion. I hope the discussion will not be prolonged.

Mr. KING. I am sure the Senator having this bill in charge intended his admonitions for the speedy passage of the bill as a rebuke. I shall detain the Senate but a moment, because I am aware that no opposition to any bills carrying appropriations is of any avail. Any Senator who thinks he may save the Treasury from increasing demands is greatly in error, and he wastes his efforts and brings upon himself the wrath of those who benefit from appropriations.

It becomes disheartening to meet constand demands for money from the Treasury at this hour, when every effort should be made to conserve our resources for the prosecution of the war. I have repeatedly called attention to the enormous demands that are being made, and necessarily made, to meet legitimate war expenses. Instead of devoting all of our energies to the prosecution of the war and practicing the most rigid economy in every branch of the Government, we consider general legislation, legislation not connected with the war, and make, in my opinion, extravagant, unnecessary, and frequently improper and useless appropriations. We appropriated a day or two ago nearly sixteen billions of dollars in one day. That constitutes no inconsiderable part of the entire wealth of the Nation; and yet that amount did not include all of the appropriations for one year for the prosecution of the war. We have no budget; we outline no plans for our expenditures, but pass bills carrying millions and billions without any reference whatever to the sources of income or the method by which these stupendous appropriations can be met.

Apparently there is no effort to economize or to modify the demands which are made for Federal aid. Departments and bureaus submit figures for amounts that we can scarcely comprehend and we pass appropriation bills covering the figures submitted with undue haste and, as I think, with a disinclination to make that careful scrutiny and examination which prudence and duty demand. I sometimes think that we take no serious steps to stabilize conditions with a view to reducing the cost of the war as well as the expenses of the Government without in any manner destroying efficiency or jeopardizing the success so much desired. Prices are mounting to dizzy heights and our legislation encourages this movement. We support policies to increase the prices of the commodities required by the Government and the people, and this in turn requires an increase in wages, and the granted increase in wage becomes the basis for further increases in the prices of the products required by the Government.

But I arose only for the purpose of expressing my dissent from the method we are pursuing in dealing with the subject of pensions. We have passed two special pension bills to-day and we are now considering the third one. General pension laws have been passed; and only a few days ago a measure was passed, general in character, which greatly increased the pensions of those who were connected with the Civil War.

Notwithstanding broad and liberal general pension bills, we have been passing for years hundreds and thousands of special pension measures. I have seen hundreds of these special pension bills which sought to remove the charge of desertion from persons who had been in the Army and to place them upon the pension rolls. The bill now under consideration singles out individuals and gives them special pensions. We appropriated only a few days ago over $220,000,000 to meet the pensions for the current year, and that amount does not include the allowances and pensions that will be paid to those who are now in the military and naval service of our country. When the present war is over there may be millions of additional names placed upon the pension lists. Of course, those who are giving their lives to save this Nation and to save the civilization of the world will be entitled to the gratitude of our country, and there is no doubt but what they will be dealt with in a just and generous way.

But the matter to which I am calling attention is the very heavy burdens which we are placing upon the people. There seems to be no spirit of economy in dealing with the Public Treasury. Not only are we making increased demands for appropriations but we are embarking upon a course that will diminish the sources of revenue for the Government. While we are augmenting the appropriations we are striking down private enterprises, taking property from private individuals and corporate owners, and transferring the same to the control of the Government. We have taken the railroads away from the owners, and the demand is now being made that the Government shall take control of the telegraph lines and the telephone systems. In my opinion additional demands will be made, indeed, they are already being made, that other enterprises owned and successfully operated by private individuals shall be taken over by the Government.

Following these demands, we are asked to pension the employees of the Government. When all the railroads, telegraph and telephone properties are controlled and owned by the Government, and when the mines and smelters and other industries now owned and operated by private individuals shall be owned and controlled by the Government, as some people are insisting, and when there shall be millions of employees of the Government placed under civil service and provided with disability and old-age pensions, and when millions of those who have rendered military service to our country shall be paid hundreds of millions of dollars per annum by way of pensions and allowances in recognition of their services, and by way of pensions for injuries and disabilities received, it may be found that this country, great and powerful and rich as it was thought to be, may prove inadequate to bear the burdens placed upon it. We should pause and consider seriously when demands are made upon the Public Treasury. These special pension bills should not be passed—certainly, not at this time. Under the generous general pension laws substantially all who are entitled to consideration will receive it. I am opposed to this bill and shall vote against it. I have submitted a point of order, but withdraw it in order that the Senators may register their views in regard to the item challenegd by the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I have observed that a great many questions have been asked relative to the various pension laws in the consideration of these pension cases. Having recently had charge of some of these bills, I have very carefully gone through all of the pension laws of the country and have prepared a brief on the whole subject, which I should like to have inserted in the RECORD for the benefit of all Senators who may desire to know just what laws have been passed by Congress in reference to the granting of pensions. The various laws are arranged under separate headings, according to the date passed for the several wars of the country, as follows: Revolutionary War, War of 1812, War with Mexico, Indian Wars, and Civil War.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none.

The brief referred to is as follows:

REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

"The act of March 18, 1818, 35 years after the termination of the Revolutionary War, was the first general act passed granting a pension for service only. Its beneficiaries were required to be in indigent circumstances and in need of assistance.

"About 1820 Congress became alarmed at the large number of applicants for pensions under this act (there were about 8,000), and on May 1, 1820, passed what has been known as the 'alarm act,' which required all pensioners then on the roll to furnish a schedule of the amount of property then in their possession. Many of the pensioners whose schedules showed they possessed too much property were dropped from the rolls. Pensioners were dropped who owned as small an amount as $150 worth of property.

"On May 15, 1828, or 45 years after the war, service pension was granted to those who served to the end of the War of the Revolution.

"On June 7, 1832, or 49 years after the close of the war, a general law was enacted pensioning all survivors who served not less than six months in said war.

"On July 4, 1836, being 53 years after the termination of the war, an act was passed granting pension for five years to Revolutionary War widows, provided they were married to the soldier or sailor before the close of his last service and that his service was not less than six months.

"On July 7, 1838, or 55 years after the close of the war, the above act was amended so as to provide where the marriage took place before January 1, 1794.

"On July 29, 1848, or 65 years after the war, the above laws were amended to include those who were married prior to January 1, 1800.

"On February 3, 1853, or 70 years after the war, an act was passed striking out the limitation as to date of marriage."

WAR OF 1812.

"The first law granting pensions for service in the War of 1812 was passed February 14, 1871, 56 years after the close of the war. This act required 60 days' service, and widows were not entitled unless they were married to soldier or sailor prior to the treaty of peace, February 17, 1815.

"The act of March 9, 1878, 63 years after the close of the war, reduced the period of service to 14 days and made no limitation as to date of marriage in case of widows."

WAR WITH MEXICO.

"On January 29, 1887, 39 years after the close of the war, an act was passed providing for soldiers and sailors and their widows for service of 60 days if 62 years of age or disabled or dependent. The rate was fixed at $8 per month (24 Stat. L., 371).

"By act of January 5, 1893 (27 Stat. L., 413), the rate of pension of every survivor whose name was then on the rolls at $8 per month was increased to $12 per month if he was wholly disabled for manual labor and in such destitute circumstances that $8 per month was insufficient to provide him the necessaries of life.

"By an act passed April 23, 1900 (31 Stat. L., 137), the rates were increased to $12 per month to all survivors who had then become or who might thereafter become wholly disabled for manual labor and were in such destitute circumstances that $8 per month was insufficient to provide them the necessaries of life, irrespective of the date of the granting of said service pension.

"By act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat. L., 1228), the pensions of all Mexican War survivors then on the roll or who might thereafter be placed on the roll under the preceding acts were increased to $12 per month.

"On February 6, 1907 (34 Stat. L., 879), the rates of pension of Mexican War survivors were increased to $12 per month for those who had reached the age of 62 years, to $15 per month for those who had reached the age of 70 years, and to $20 per month for those who had reached the age of 75 years.

"On May 11, 1912, by act of that date (37 Stat. L., 112), the rates were increased to $30 per month.

"On April 19, 1908, by act of that date (35 Stat. L., 64), the rate of pension of widows was increased to $12 per month."

INDIAN WARS.

"On July 27, 1892, 50 years after the period included in the act, pension was provided for those who served 30 days in the Black Hawk, Creek, Cherokee, and Florida War with Seminole Indians from 1832 to 1842, and to their widows.

"On February 19, 1913, by act of that date (37 Stat. L., 679), the rate of pension for surviving soldiers of the various Indian wars was increased to $20 per month.

"On March 4, 1917, Congress passed an act (Public, No. 400, 64th Cong.) extending the provisions, limitations, and benefits of the preceding acts relating to Indian war services 'from the date of the passage of this act to the surviving officers and enlisted men of the Texas Volunteers who served in defense of the frontier of that State against Indian depredations from January 1, 1859, to January 1, 1861, inclusive, and from the year 1866 to the year 1867, inclusive, and to the surviving officers and enlisted men, including Militia and Volunteers of the military service of the United States, who have reached the age of 62 years, and who served for 30 days in the campaign in southern Oregon and Idaho and northern parts of California and Nevada from 1865 to 1868, inclusive; the campaign against the Sioux in Minnesota and the Dakotas in 1862 and 1863, and the campaigns against the Sioux in Wyoming in 1865 to 1868; to the following organizations of the First Regiment Nebraska Militia engaged in fighting Indians and guarding United States mails on the western frontier: Company A, First Regiment, First Brigade, Nebraska Militia, who served from August 30, 1864, to November 12, 1864; Company B, First Regiment Nebraska Militia, who served from August 13, 1864, to February 13, 1865; Company C, First Regiment, Second Brigade, Nebraska Militia, who served from August 24, 1864, to February 7, 1865; to Capt. Edward P. Child's artillery detachment, Nebraska Militia, who served from August 30, 1864, to November 12, 1864; and Company A, First Regiment, Second Brigade, Nebraska Militia, who served from August 12, 1864, to December 24, 1864; the campaign against the Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Kiowas, and Comanches in Kansas, Colorado, and Indian Territory from 1867 to 1869, inclusive; the Modoc war of 1872 and 1873; the campaign against the Apaches of Arizona and New Mexico, or either of them, in 1873; the campaign against the Kiowas, Comanches, and Cheyennes in Kansas, Colorado, Texas, Indian Territory, and New Mexico in 1874 and 1875; the campaign against the Northern Cheyennes and Sioux in 1876 and 1877; the Nez Perce war of 1877; the Bannock war of 1878; the campaign against the Northern Cheyennes in 1878 and 1879; the campaigns in the Black Hawk Indian war in Utah from 1865 to 1867, inclusive; the campaign against the Ute Indians in Colorado and Utah from September, 1879, to November, 1880, inclusive; the campaign against the Apache Indians in Arizona and New Mexico, or either of them, in 1885 and 1886; and the campaign against the Sioux Indians in South Dakota from November, 1890, to January, 1891, inclusive; and also to include the surviving widows of said officers and enlisted men who shall have married said survivor prior to the passage of this act: Provided, That such widows have not remarried: Provided further, That this act shall extend also to the surviving officers and enlisted men of the organization known as Tyler's Rangers, recruited at Black Hawk, Colo., 1864, for services against the Indians: Provided further, That if any certain one of the said campaigns did not cover a period of 30 days the provisions of this act shall apply to those who served during the entire period of said campaign.'

CIVIL WAR.

[Acts of July 14, 1862, and March 3, 1873. (Secs. 4692 and 4693, R. S., U. S.) Disability pension.]

"Any officer, soldier, sailor, or marine disabled by reason of wound received or disease contracted in the service of the United States and in the line of duty may be pensioned for such disability during its continuance.

"In case of his death from causes originating as above set forth his widow or his child or children under 16 years of age become entitled to pension. If he left no widow or child under 16, his dependent mother, father, or orphan sisters and brothers are entitled in the order named.

"The foregoing relates to service in the Civil War and all services performed since March 4, 1861, in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Volunteers in the War with Spain or during time of peace up to October 6, 1917.

"The rate of widow's pension is determined by the soldier's rank at the time the death cause originated. (Sec. 4702, R. S., U. S.) Originally the rate of pension for a widow of an enlisted man was $8 per month. It was increased to $12 per month on March 19, 1886, by an act of that date (24 Stat. L., 5), but that increase applied only to widows who were married to the deceased soldier or sailor prior to its passage and to those who might thereafter marry prior to or during the service of the soldier or sailor. The rate was further increased to $20 per month by the act of September 8, 1916 (39 Stat. L., 844), provided the pensioner was then 70 years of age or to commence when the pensioner reached that age, and on October 6, 1917, by an act of that date (40 Stat. L., —), the pensions for widows of officers or enlisted men of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States who served in the Civil War, the War with Spain, or the Philippine Insurrection was increased to $25 per month.

[Act of June 27, 1890 (26 Stat. L., 182) as amended by the act of May 9, 1900 (31 Stat. L., 170.)]

"Any officer, soldier, sailor, or marine who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late War of the Rebellion, who has been honorably discharged therefrom, and who is suffering from disability of a permanent character not the result of his own vicious habits which incapacitate him from the performance of manual labor in such a degree as to render him unable to earn a support is entitled to pension under this act of not less than $6 per month nor more than $12 per month.

"In case of the death of any person named above his widow becomes entitled to pension, provided she married him prior to June 27, 1890, and that she is without other means of support than her daily labor. If she remarries or dies, the child or children of such soldier or sailor under the age of 16 years become entitled.

"The act of May 9, 1900, which is an amendment of the act of June 27, 1890, provides that in determining inability to earn a support each and every infirmity shall be duly considered and the aggregate of the disabilities shown be rated.

That any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and received an honorable discharge, and who was wounded in battle or in line of duty and is now unfit for manual labor by reason thereof, or who from disease or other causes incurred in line of duty resulting in his disability is now unable to perform manual labor, shall be paid the maximum pension under this act, to wit, $30 per month without regard to length of service or age.

"On October 6, 1917, section 312 of the act relating to the War-Risk Bureau (40 Stat. L., —), it is provided that: 'The laws providing for gratuities or payments in the event of death in the service and existing pension laws shall not be applicable after the enactment of this amendment to persons now in or hereafter entering the military or naval service, or to their widows, children, or their dependents, except in so far as rights under any such law shall have heretofore accrued.'

"On June 10, 1918, by act of that date amending the act of May 11, 1912, the rate of pension for any person who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War, now on the roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll and entitled to receive a less rate than hereinafter provided, shall be $30 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 72 years and served six months, the rate shall be $32 per month; one year, $35 per month; one and a half years, $38 per month; two years or over, $40 per month."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House adheres to its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 61, and 83 to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 311) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the month of July, 1918, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12541) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate House joint resolution 311, which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 311) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the month of July, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. GRONNA. I have to object to that. I have a bill on the calendar, and I am obliged to be away for the afternoon. I am sure the consideration of the joint resolution will take the remainder of the day.

Mr. MARTIN. It will not take three minutes. It proposes to continue the current appropriations until three appropriation bills shall have been passed.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator from Virginia will agree to withdraw the joint resolution if it leads to discussion——

Mr. MARTIN. I do not insist on the consideration of the joint resolution. I agree to withdraw it now. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

INVESTIGATION OF LIGNITE COALS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3220) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make investigations, through the Bureau of Mines, of lignite coals, to determine the practicability of their utilization as a fuel and in producing commercial products.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is that of Mr. FLETCHER, on page 1, line 10, to strike out "$100,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$150,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to increase the appropriation from $100,000 to $150,000.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Henderson	New	Smith, S. C.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING], and will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness and of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] on official business.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. KENDRICK] and of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] because of official business, and also the absence of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], caused by personal illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

FRANK BARBER.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, out of order I ask leave to make a report from a committee. On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs I report the bill (S. 4790) for the relief of Frank Barber, with an amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think, if the motion of the Senator from New Jersey were agreed to, it would displace the unfinished business, would it not, unless it were accompanied with the request that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside? I do not want the unfinished business to be displaced.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I make the request that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. GRONNA. Reserving the right to object, I want to say to the Senator from New Jersey that I am anxious to see the bill which he has just reported passed, but if it leads to any discussion I hope the Senator will not insist on going on with the bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I shall yield to the Senator and give way if it takes any time.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, this bill provides for compensation for Lieut. Frank Barber, of the English Army, in the amount of $100 per month, the amount allotted under the war-risk insurance act for officers of similar rank in the United States Army.

Lieut. Barber was an English officer assigned to the United States for the purpose of giving artillery instruction at Camp Wheeler. While instructing officers of the American Army he lost the sight of both his eyes from an accident due to no fault of his. Lieut. Barber is a married man and is dependent upon his pay as an officer. I understand he has two children. Under the English act he will receive £70 a year, or $350. This bill has been suggested and approved by Gen. Gorgas, and also by the Secretary of War, who says:

> I am told that Lieut. Barber is a married man, dependent upon his pay as a soldier, and that his disability pay under the army regulations of Great Britain can not be large. I earnestly recommend the passage of this bill, not only as a graceful act of international courtesy but as an act of justice to this gallant officer, who has become disabled in our military service.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from New Jersey a question?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes.

Mr. KING. Will not the passage of this bill establish a precedent that will come home to plague us or to bless us as the days go by? I can conceive of many cases during the progress of the war where French or English officers may serve with American troops and may receive wounds or may be killed. Can the Senator from New Jersey state that this will not be a precedent which might require that we should make compensation in such cases?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The amendment which has been reported by the committee to the bill provides that this appropriation of $100 per month shall be in lieu of all demands or claims. I do not know whether the passage of the bill will establish a precedent or not, and I do not care. This English officer has lost the sight of both eyes in the service of this country. I know there will not be many English officers serving here. I think, as an act of grace, that it is our duty to pass this claim and to pay this officer for the loss that has been caused him while serving in this country.

Mr. KING. For how long will this sum be paid?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. For the officer's life.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of considering the bill which has been reported by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Frank Barber, a first lieutenant of the Dorset Regiment of Infantry of the British Army, who lost the sight of both eyes and became totally blind by reason of a premature explosion on February 14, 1918, while acting as an instructor of United States troops at Camp Wheeler, Ga., as compensation for disability resulting therefrom, such sums of money as by the act of Congress approved October 6, 1917, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes," is provided to be paid as compensation for disability to an injured person who has lost both eyes or become totally blind from causes occurring in the line of duty in the service of the United States; and such compensation shall be payable and be paid as of and from the 14th day of February, 1918, and under and according to the terms, conditions, and basis of computation in said act provided.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment reported by the committee.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following:

> And such sum shall be in full of all claims, legal or equitable, of the said Frank Barber, his heirs, representatives, or assigns.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey what compensation would be paid to American officers of like grade who received injuries of the same character as those from which this British officer suffers?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The same as is provided in this measure.

Mr. KING. Is there an existing law that gives them $100 per month for life?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; it is limited to a period of years; it is not for life, as I understand.

Mr. KING. The Senator means in the case of American officers?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. In the case of American officers, and in this bill the payment is limited to the same period as in the case of an American officer.

Mr. KING. I understood the Senator a moment ago, in answer to my interrogatory, to state that the payment was to be made for life.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I did; but I have been informed that it is limited to a period of about 20 years.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I ask what is the status of this bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent has been asked for temporarily laying aside the unfinished business for the purpose of considering this bill, and, no objection appearing, it was granted. Now the question is upon the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. When was the bill reported?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was reported a few moments ago.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I object to its consideration to-day.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I submit that after the bill has been taken up by unanimous consent objection can not be made to its consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The unanimous consent was to lay aside the unfinished business.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; and that was granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that it was granted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not really hear the request.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not think the Senator from Georgia was in the Chamber at the time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know that I would object to the bill at all if I could have an opportunity to examine it. I am a member of the Subcommittee of the Finance Committee especially charged with matters growing out of war-risk insurance legislation, and it is for that reason that I feel that we should give some careful attention to a bill of this character.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Georgia will withdraw his objection when he understands what this bill is. An English officer lost the sight of both of his eyes while instructing American officers at Camp Wheeler. He is a married man, with two children. Under the English law he receives £70 per year, or $350. This bill provides that he shall have an allowance of $100 per month for 20 years for the damages caused and the injuries suffered by him while in the American service.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is no legislation in the measure at all beyond that one provision?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There is no other legislation connected with it, except that it calls attention to the fact that the compensation shall be the same as that allowed under the war-risk insurance act for similar injuries suffered by American soldiers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Very well, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? I suggested a moment ago that before the war is over unquestionably there will be a large number of French and English officers employed in the training of our troops who will receive injuries, and perhaps some may be killed. Speaking for myself, I would feel that compensation should be paid them or their families. But it strikes me that the subject is so important as to call for a general and comprehensive bill. Instead of taking these cases up piecemeal as they are presented from time to time, it seems to me that there should be enacted a general measure under which the board that is administering the war-risk insurance act would be authorized to pay certain compensation to English or French officers receiving injuries under such conditions.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator does not think that over in France, on the battle line, American soldiers would be officered by English officers?

Mr. KING. Oh, no.

Mr. McCUMBER. Here is a case in which this Government, not having a sufficient number of officers to give technical instruction along certain lines necessary in France, requested that Great Britain furnish certain instructors. Great Britain furnished those instructors from among her best officers; and they therefore became practically volunteers in the American Army to give instruction. This officer was injured while he was serving the United States as an officer, although a British officer, and all the bill seeks to do is to give him just exactly what our law would give to an American officer under exactly the same circumstances.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment. When I recall that the people of the allied nations over there have been fighting our battles for four long years, and when I remember the enormous losses which they have suffered during that time and how they must bear the brunt of the battle for at least another year, I think we ought to be just as gracious as we can be in matters of this kind.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I shall join with him in praise of the heroism and valor of England and of the English soldier. Great Britain and France have been fighting the battles of all civilized nations. They have during the dark and sanguinary years since August, 1914, been fighting that freedom might survive and that this Republic might endure. We owe them a debt of gratitude. We are now repaying it and aiding the great contest which will end in the overwhelming defeat of Germanism and in a peace which will heal and bless the world. But I am suggesting a plan that will deal with the question presented by the bill under consideration in a general and comprehensive way. I would like to see a measure adopted that would take care of the officers who serve us as this officer did; a bill that would authorize immediate payment after injuries are sustained by the War Risk Board while teaching Americans. A special act for each case is not the way to deal with the question. I have learned that several officers loaned to us by England and Canada for service in training our aviators have been killed, and I have no doubt that others will be injured or killed. These unfortunate accidents may occur here or in our training camps in England and France. There should be some provision made to meet these cases when they arise. Personally I should like to see a general bill reported that will care for cases of that character, as well as for the case now before us, instead of having to legislate in each specific instance. I am not objecting to this bill. I am only pointing out the propriety of dealing with the question in a broad and proper manner.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I appreciate the fact that the Congress will be overwhelmed with pension legislation. That is an incident inherent in war, and it may also be added that the Congress is very likely at times to be swept off its feet by waves of sentiment and go further than it ought to go. I also recognize the fact that there will be many British and French officers injured when cooperating with our troops, and there will be likewise many American troops injured when cooperating with French and British troops, but I think this particular case is to be differentiated from the class of cases to which I have just referred. The cases last referred to have to do with the cooperation of the forces in the field where the chances of war are involved, and where each man takes those chances as a part of the war risk; but this case, if I understand it correctly—and if I do not I hope the Senator from New Jersey will correct me—is bottomed upon this state of facts, that this British officer came to the United States at the request of our authorities to assist in teaching our troops, so that they might be fitted to become soldiers upon the field of battle, and in the performance of that duty he was injured by a premature explosion which was caused by no fault of his. There can not be many cases of that particular kind. This officer was serving our people, assisting us in getting ready for war, and in that situation was injured, and injured through a fault that can not be laid at his feet. Under those circumstances I do not believe the case would be reached by a general law; neither do I think that we have yet sufficient information to pass a general law.

I am not sure that I have seen this man, but I did see, a few days ago, as fine a looking speciman of manhood as I ever saw being led around by a little woman. This man wore the uniform of a British officer, and both eyes were gone. With that picture before me, I can not vote against a bill of this kind.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a moment. In order that the record may be straight, there having been some conflict in the statements made, I desire to say that I have read the bill carefully, and I find that it really provides for the payment of the compensation now provided by law, as the bill says, in the case where a soldier has become totally blind. The war-risk insurance act provides:

> That for the loss of both feet or both hands or both eyes, or for being totally blind or helpless and permanently bedridden from causes occurring in the line of duty in the service of the United States the rate of compensation shall be $100 per month.

Now, this compensation is not to continue for 20 years only; it is to continue as long as the man lives, as the war-risk insurance act provides, and I think he is entitled to it as long as he lives. I think that the bill ought to be passed immediately.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Question!

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to say that at the time I inquired what was the nature of this bill I had not heard it read, and I did not know at all the subject. I did so because I was not sure that it involved no amendment of our war-risk insurance legislation. As has been said, it simply extends our war-risk insurance to this officer who lost his eyes while in the line of duty in our service. Unless they receive as full compensation from their own countries as our compensation law gives, it seems to me that we might well amend the war-risk insurance law so as to extend it to those so engaged in our country, teaching our troops here, and serving us here.

I certainly shall interpose no objection to this bill, and shall vote for it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that the Senate knows that I am conservative, if not ultra-conservative, upon the subject of pensions. If this officer came to the United States upon the invitation of our Government, I think that a case is made out. I think that our obligation is established, and that it ought to be redeemed, and generously redeemed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 311)——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the month of July, 1918, and for other purposes——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And it will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I was addressing the Chair before that announcement was made. I should like to know if I am recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I desire to interpose an objection to the second reading of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was simply referring it to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GORE. I understand, Mr. President; but it can not be referred until it has been read twice, and under Rule XIV, paragraph 3, it must be read on two different days. I object to the second reading of the joint resolution on this calendar day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the subdivision of the rule to which the Senator refers?

Mr. GORE. Paragraph 3 of Rule XIV, which provides that bills and joint resolutions coming over from the House and bills introduced by leave can not be read twice on the same day if there be objection.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is an objection, the bill goes to the committee.

Mr. GORE. No; it will be read once to-day, and it will be read the second time to-morrow. Then, after the second reading to-morrow, it can be referred, to which I do not object at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point is sustained.

INVESTIGATION OF LIGNITE COALS.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the unfinished business may be again laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3220) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make investigations, through the Bureau of Mines, of lignite coals, to determine the practicability of their utilizatton as a fuel and in producing commercial products.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 10, it is proposed to strike out "$100,000" and to insert "$150,000."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I dislike to be obliged to delay the passage of this measure, for I presume that is what my objection will amount to in substance. I dislike also to oppose a measure in which my friend from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] evidently has such a deep interest. He doubtless believes that it is essential to the welfare of an industry in his State, or one of its resources, and that some Government investigation regarding the character of this resource is indispensable to its proper development and utilization, else he would not have introduced the bill, and it would not have been reported. But, Mr. President, I am unable to perceive any good reason whatever for the addition of $100,000 to our annual expenditure through the enactment of this measure. The sum is a small one, I know, and the usual argument may be made that because it is a small one it will not make any appreciable difference in the amount of our expenditure; but that suggestion, though nearly always successful, is nothing but a suggestion and can not be an argument.

Let us see what this bill is designed to accomplish. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to make experiments and investigations, through the Bureau of Mines, of lignite coals, to determine the commercial and economic practicability of their utilization in producing fuel oil, gasoline substitutes, ammonia, tar, solid fuels, gas for power and other purposes; and there is appropriated, out of the funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, to conduct such experiments and investigations, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and including supplies, equipment, expenses of traveling and subsistence, and for every other expense incident to this work. Mr. President, the establishment in the District of Columbia of an agency involving personal services and involving also equipment and supplies means the establishment of another bureau in the District of Columbia, and the repetition of this or greater appropriations every year from now on.

We have seldom begun to appropriate money for the investigation of material things and lived to see the end of those investigations. Once Congress is induced to begin that work with regard to any subject, it continues it as long as the United States has a dollar or can tax its people for a dollar to put into the Treasury. The more these things are investigated, the more abstruse and mysterious they become, and the more difficult and expensive, therefore, is it to continue the investigation; but they are continued, nevertheless, and the bureaus which continue them wax fat and strong. Their employees join the employees' unions and demand the right to work less than seven hours a day and are able to secure a presidential veto in the event Congress thinks otherwise. Therefore, Mr. President, apart from the merits of the bill, I dislike to see the institution of any more commissions or bureaus or agencies in the District of Columbia than we have at present unless they are absolutely indispensable; and I think this is not an indispensable measure.

Mr. President, the bill is designed to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to determine the practicability of the utilization of lignite coals in producing the very things which past investigations have shown those coals to be susceptible of producing—the things which they contain; that is to say, fuel oil, gasoline substitutes, ammonia, tar, solid fuels, and gas for power and other purposes. The report which has been filed here in the report on the bill among other things assumes to give the number of short tons of lignite in the United States. The amount is prodigious and is confined in this report to three States, with the additional statement that there are lignite fields in Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Montana.

There are in my State, Mr. President, literally hundreds of millions of tons of lignite coal. The northeastern part of the State is practically underlain with vast quantities of lignite, and this lignite has been a source of our fuel supply even before that section of the United States was organized as a territory. It is one of the big commercial enterprises of the State now, and has been for a long time. The school of mines of that State is one of the institutions which has tested that and all other coals, analyzed them, ascertained their constituent elements, which of them are valuable and which are of no value; and if there is anything with regard to the qualities of lignite coal which the school of mines has not developed the fact can be easily ascertained by resorting to the agencies already in existence in the city of Washington for that purpose.

I do not know, of course, to what extent these other States are equipped with the facilities of local investigation, but I am sure that they are not in any degree behind my own State. There is a school of agriculture in every State, largely supported by governmental beneficence, and presumably capable of teaching all of the exact sciences, and particularly those which relate to the welfare of the Commonwealth. The great States of North Dakota, South Dakota, and Texas possess these facilities; and I doubt not that they, too, have been called into requisition, and have determined that these components or constituents—to wit, fuel oil, gasoline substitutes, ammonia, tar, solid fuels, and gas for power and other purposes—can be obtained from these lignite coals. If not, the Bureau of Mines is equipped for this work, and endowed by Congress with appropriations, to say nothing of the Bureau of Standards, which is perhaps the best institution of the sort in the world, without going to the expense of making a special appropriation and creating a special agency for the purpose.

Mr. President, this report indicates that all these things have been done, else the report itself is based upon hearsay or upon speculation; and certainly I can not conclude that such is the case. The report says, among other things, that—

A small experiment station was started by the College of Mining Engineering of the University of North Dakota, at Hebron, under the direction of Prof. E. J. Babcock, and a cooperation was effected on a very small scale with the Federal Bureau of Mines in order that the results might be published and thus be of benefit in the study and utilization of the lignites on the Government lands. At this experimental station, a description of which is given in Bulletin 89 of the Bureau of Mines, entitled "Economic Methods of Utilizing Western Lignites," briquets have been made which have withstood handling and weathering for six months or more in the open air. This was made from lignite which would begin weathering and disintegrating in a few days. They have also been dried and burned in a type of furnace and tried on local railroad locomotives. It is reported that 1 ton of briquets was equal to 1 ton of raw coal in keeping up steam.

The analysis of the briquets was also a part of the work of this college, because it is stated that they are—not unlike that of the Pocahontas coals, except for slightly higher ash. The briquets are almost smokeless. The briquets which have been made have employed tar for a binder, the tar being brought from the East—

And so forth.

We come now to by-products:

In the carbonization of lignites, as demonstrated by Prof. Babcock at Hebron, N. Dak., very important by-products are produced in the carbonization of the lignites. These products vary widely with the lignite and with the degree to which carbonization is carried. The yield of gas is large for the partly dried lignite, reaching 10,000 to 12,000 cubic feet per ton, according to Prof. Babcock, which is about the same as that from a high-grade bituminous coal. Further, the evolution of gas is much more rapid. The residues may be briqueted. The gas has been tried in gas engines and tests made in comparison with standard city gas and it was found that the lignite gas was especially satisfactory. It is believed that there is a large field for the production of power through the establishment of large by-product plants.

Mr. President, if these experiments have been made and if it has been demonstrated by them that this coal is excellent for its gas-producing qualities, why should the United States Government spend $100,000 more for the purpose of determining that identical thing? Certainly, it can not be said that this experiment was made by incapable men. That would be a reflection upon the College of North Dakota and upon the Bureau of Mines. The men employed by both of these institutions are, or should be, experts in the business. They have assumed to be such, and they have produced results, and the very results which they have produced constitute some of the things for which it is said this added $100,000 is needed.

But these gentlemen do not stop with their report upon gas. They go on to say that—

Ammonia and tar are also produced in the carbonization of the coal. According to Prof. Babcock, approximately 50 pounds of tar can be recovered from 1 ton of partly dried lignite. This tar is very high in paraffin ingredients. Prof. Babcock estimates that there is produced from a ton of dried lignite coal at different temperatures 5 to 6 gallons of crude lignite oils—

Is it expected that this special commission will make that 6 to 7 gallons? Possibly their results may be disappointing, and reduce instead of increase the quantity—

2 gallons of crude benzol, 2 to 3 gallons of hard tar, 50 to 60 pounds of ammonia sulphate, and 20 pounds of tar acids. Benzol is one of the compounds used in the manufacture of dyestuffs and explosives. Prof. Babcock has produced oil which has been found to be unusually well suited in the concentration of ore by the flotation process.

Mr. President, it is because these developments have been made that this appropriation is desired, because the report declares that these investigations present—a field for investigation which promises very much for the development of those parts of the country hitherto retarded by the lack of fuel in its various forms, and also offers the greatest possibilities through the enormous amounts of lignite in substitution for petroleum, which is intrinsically too valuable to the country to permit its use as a fuel.

Mr. President, some of the products of petroleum have been extractable from lignite coals for the past 10 or 15 years. The fact that lignite contains a very high percentage of benzol has been known for more than one-third of a century. Resort has not been had to this source for benzol because of the fact that coal tar as a by-product furnished a cheaper source of exploitation. I know a man who has experimented with lignite coal and with other coals, and who has produced not only the things mentioned here, but a material which looks very much like paint, which feels very much like paint to the touch, and which has been used in small degree and in an experimental way for paint. He has not tried to commercialize his process for the same reason—that paints can be obtained or could be obtained up to the time of the outbreak of the war more cheaply in other directions. If the owners of this coal need the formula of this gentleman, I think it can be secured.

I may say right here, Mr. President, lest I forget it, that perhaps the most extensive investigators of the qualities of coal in the United States are the Fuller Engineering Co., of Allentown, Pa. They have recently, in connection with Mr. Lindon W. Bates, solved the hitherto insolvable problem of mixing coal and oil and producing a colloidal fuel that is perhaps better than either. It is done by pulverizing coal—it makes no difference whether it be lignite or bituminous or any other kind of coal—and by mixing it, in proportions of about two-thirds to one-third, with petroleum, and by the addition of 1 per cent of the particular agency which constitutes the discovery. I consider it one of the most fundamental discoveries or inventions—and perhaps it partakes of the nature of both—that so far have been evolved by the war, because its economy in fluid fuels is almost incalculable, or will be when this process—which has been brought to the attention of the Government, but which, up to this time, it has not seen fit to accept—becomes generally used. Now, is there any necessity for expending $100,000 of our money in order to ascertain whether ignite can be used in making this colloidal fuel when the fact has already been ascertained and worked out by private enterprise?

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The proposition is $150,000, as I understand the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. These things generally grow overnight. I thought myself that the amount was so ridiculously small that something would happen to it before I had a chance to say something about it. The chances are that by to-morrow it will be $200,000.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I agree with the Senator from Colorado in what he has said to the effect that the scientists have been able to discover different ingredients in lignite coal, because I know that the Senator knows so much more about lignite coal than I do. I am not a lignite-coal expert.

Mr. THOMAS. I know very little about it.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that I do not know anything about it; but is it not reasonable to suppose that it would not be profitable for anybody to experiment with lignite coal simply for the purpose of getting these oils and these tars? The proposition is not a single one. The idea is, in connection with extracting these valuable oils and ammonia and tar, to carbonize coal. That is the idea—to experiment with it—and it is not a commercial proposition. It is purely an experimental proposition, and the knowledge will be diffused not only to the State of North Dakota but to the entire country.

I am sure that the Senator knows of the splendid work that has been done by Director Manning in the investigation of gases. Had it not been for the work that has been done by that great man what would we have to combat the Germans with to-day on the battle field? Why, the American soldiers are just pouring those gases into the Germans. I am sure there are so many things connected with this matter that it will be valuable; and I can say that this man, Mr. Manning, who has given his testimony, is not only a scientific man, a theoretical man, but he is a practical man.

Of course, I have the greatest regard for the Senator's judgment. I know that we are extravagant in many ways; but I say to the Senator that I do not believe there is any measure pending before the Senate that is of as great importance as this one is. I am probably trespassing on the Senator's time——

Mr. THOMAS. I was about to wonder when the Senator's question was going to be completed. I am not complaining, however.

Mr. GRONNA. No; the Senator is very kind. I was going to call the Senator's attention, if he would permit me, to the great saving that this will bring about simply in transportation. It is estimated that we are using annually in the western country about 50,000 cars in the transportation of coal. The average haul has been estimated at about 1,000 miles, and that can be reduced to at least 400 miles. As I say, that will release the use of at least 30,000 cars. Why, Mr. President, what is a hundred thousand dollars if this matter can be brought about? It is a mere bagatelle; it is not a drop in the bucket, if you will pardon that language; so I hope the Senator from Colorado will see his way clear to support this measure and not oppose it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I know, of course, the Senator is perfectly sincere in his advocacy of this bill and in his confidence that it will produce the marvelous and far-extending benefits to which he refers. Of course, if the Government by expending $100,000 can save the transportation of 30,000 or 40,000 cars of material it will make money by doing so. But I am unable, Mr. President, to conceive or to admit that the results will be as hoped for and as confidently expected by the Senator from North Dakota. We have spent a great deal of money since I have been a Member of the Senate in bills that have all been of the utmost importance, and many of them promised many, many returns. A great many of them have been called revolving funds, I suppose because they do not revolve and never did revolve and probably never will revolve. Others have been straight appropriations. These enormous benefits, although they may come sometime, have not yet appeared very distinct above the horizon of the future.

Mr. President, I say candidly to the Senator if this were the only source of an investigation of the merits of lignite coals, or if these investigations had not been made and made very extensively, I should hesitate about opposing the measure.

The Senator referred to Mr. Manning, and I cheerfully subscribe to the tribute which the Senator has paid to that very capable official. But, Mr. President, Mr. Manning has absolute power now, and if he has not got enough money it is not because he has failed to ask for it to carry any further investigation of this subject that may be necessary. If he has not, then the local institutions, schools of mines, and the agricultural colleges of the States in conjunction with Mr. Manning do possess that power. I am very glad to see that Mr. Manning has solved the gas problem for the allies. I hope that is true. But, Mr. President, because he has done so is no reason why we should establish some agency now at the expense of $100,000 to investigate what has already been investigated and what will continue to be investigated by private sources.

The Senator refers to the great value of lignite as fuel, provided, of course, these experiments shall be as successful as he hopes them to be. Lignite is valuable as a fuel now. Mixed with oil it is as valuable as any fuel that can well be imagined. If there be any other quality, any other ingredient or element, in lignite coal which investigations up to date have not disclosed, then those which are constantly being made will disclose them.

I referred just now to the great engineering firm of Fuller & Co., or the Fuller Co., at Allentown, Pa. Those gentlemen are experimenting with coal constantly. They have a magnificent organization and equipment of the best scientists and chemists in the world for that purpose, and they are looking for coal. It is their business. They have made their money out of it. It is their pursuit to investigate and contrast and compare the fuel qualities of the various coals of the country. I am satisfied that they have experimented and will continue their experiments upon lignite; but even if that were not so, specimens may be brought here, small ones or large ones, or both, and we have ample equipment in the city of Washington for the purpose of determining that now. Consequently why make them, at this time especially, Mr. President, when we are obliged to pass an $8,000,000,000 tax bill and float a fourth liberty loan, why should we continue to be making appropriations for matters which are not indispensably necessary and for matters which up to this time have been pretty well handled by existing agencies and by private enterprises?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. I simply want to ask the Senator if he has read the recommendations from the Bureau of Mines?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes.

Mr. GRONNA. And also the report of Secretary Lane?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I have read both.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator asked why we should make the appropriation. This is an appropriation to carry on the work, I will say to the Senator, in cooperation with the very men whom he has mentioned. It is not an appropriation for any specific place. It is intended to experiment and to cooperate with these coal operators, and, of course, the knowledge will be diffused all over the country.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if I have said anything which indicates that this is a matter peculiar to North Dakota, I must apologize to the Senator. If any benefits are to result from this investigation, it will benefit my State quite as much as the Senator's; it will benefit the whole country. I freely conceed that the only thing local about it consists in the fact that perhaps the largest deposits of lignite in the United States, if not in the world, are in the State of North Dakota. Of course, that, however, is merely a fortunate thing for that State, and does not in any manner localize the operation of the act. Yes, Mr. President, I have read the report and the recommendation. I have the highest respect for Secretary Lane and for his able assistant, Mr. Manning. I know them all. I know them well. I know them intimately. But, Mr. President, anything that smacks of an investigation carrying with it an appropriation is very likely to be favorably recommended by the Interior Department or some of its bureaus. I recall some time ago the application for an appropriation to experiment with radium—a beautiful thing, a necessary thing—but I thought, and I still think, that the equipment of the Interior Department is all sufficient for that purpose, as I think it is all sufficient for this purpose.

Mr. President, the time is coming, especially if this war shall continue much longer, when the valuable contents of lignite coal will become commercially profitable, because of the increase of the demand for those elements and because of the diminution or dwindling of the sources of supply in other directions. The gasoline which lignite contains, and which it is not necessary for a further investigation to demonstrate, is not now or has not until very recently been commercially available. The same is true of its tar and its ammonia. But, as I said, the demand for these things, the dwindling in some directions of the sources of supply, and the vast dormant elements in these immense deposits of lignite, necessarily will attract the attention not only of the Government but of private agencies. There is enough known about lignite to-day, Mr. President, to make the whole thing merely a question of profitable production, and there is enough capital in the United States and enough enterprising men behind it to utilize that capital whenever there is profit in the enterprise. I think it is coming very soon.

Now, Mr. President, my attention has been called to an amendment to this bill, which I think was offered by the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and which is designed to include peat in the investigation by the addition of $25,000 to $50,000. I think what I have said about lignite coal is more applicable to peat. Peat has been a fuel from the time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. There may be some difference between Florida peat and Irish peat, between peat that is used across the sea and peat that flourishes here; but if there is, the people who use it will find it out, and those who believe it will be commercially profitable will utilize it.

This also, Mr. President, has been the subject of considerable private investigation, if we are to judge from a letter addressed to Mr. George F. Miles and signed by Mr. L. A. Riley, 2d, who seems to be ready to go into the question of producing peat.

Peat is a substance which also falls under the dominion of the Bureau of Mines. Peat is a substance which may be submitted for test to the Bureau of Standards. Peat is an element which I have no question but the agricultural college of the great State of Florida has investigated or will investigate. We know that it will burn if it possesses sufficient carbon and oxygen. We know that smoke will rise from it if it is too damp or too green, and we know that less smoke will result from combustion if it is dry and therefore more readily combustible. Perhaps we do not know what its chemical qualities may be, but, as I said, there are plenty of opportunities for finding them out, plenty of agencies for discovering them, without at this time appropriating $150,000 for the purpose.

Now, this gentleman, Mr. Riley, assures Mr. Miles that "our gas-producing plant"—he uses the word "our"—"is entirely capable, when working on Florida peat, of being considered solely as a plant for the manufacture of ammonium sulphates." He finds three other very favorable sources of profit from the investigation.

One is "the gas from the plant, which under the first-mentioned conditions is not considered of any value."

The second is "the tar, which under the first conditions is allowed only its value as a raw fuel. It is well known abroad, and possibly also to you, that the peat tars have some extremely rich constituents in the line of acetic acids and creosote group disinfectants, phenol and toluol and also paraffin."

There has been a very considerable investigation.

Third, "the peat ash, which in some locations in Florida contains between 1 and 2 per cent of potash."

This letter was written on the 5th day of March, 1918. It refers to some other matters, particularly some financial matters in connection with the development of the Crescent Lake property.

> I take this opportunity to confirm your verbal offer to us to the effect that the Crescent Lake property, including all physical equipment thereon, is offered to us at a price of $50,000. I understand that it consists of 1,800 acres of peat bog, together with certain other acreage, extent not stated, some of which also undoubtedly contains valuable peat.

If there is anything about that proposition or about that property which makes it questionable to the would-be purchaser, whether it is worth $50,000, I ask if it is fair for the United States to spend $50,000 in making appropriations for the purpose of satisfying, among others, this would-be purchaser and this would-be seller. They have made their own investigation and seem to be satisfied.

I may say here, Mr. President, that when any State in the Union possesses any element of sufficient value to attract capital and bring profit it will be investigated, and the Government will not have to do it. It will be investigated by the men who are of a practical turn of mind and who want to make something out of it, and that element in our American development has constituted our chief source of wealth and prosperity. Lord Goschen once said that the confidence of the individual in himself and the respect of the State for national liberty lie at the foundation of the greatness and the wealth of nations and of people. It is true. The time was not so many years ago, since I became gray, when all through this country men and communities were prone to depend upon themselves for their development. The time was when the Government said to the citizen "Go out on the public domain and search it for the deposit of valuable material and locate and patent it when you find it." Prospectors did not come to the Government of the United States then and ask for an appropriation of $100,000 to buy picks for them and grub and ponies and to build roads.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. In just a moment. They went of their own volition, spurred by the impulses of gain. They went in droves. They discovered and developed the natural wealth of this continent and blazed the way for those subsequent streams of population which anchored upon those lands and in those Territories and developed them into the magnificent States that they have since become. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. I should not have risen to interrupt the Senator, but the idea that he should even suggest that it was the purpose of the Government or any of its bureaus to arm a brigade or one man with a pick and shovel for actual use in prospecting or discovering lignite or any other mineral, whether metalliferous or nonmetalliferous, was so extraordinary that I could not keep my seat.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will yield, apropos of his suggestion. He is right. Not many years ago such a thing not only would have been regarded as preposterous but as utterly useless and beyond the power of Congress to do. I have often wondered what would have been the condition of the great West, that magnificent region lying beyond the Missouri River, the land of the mountains and the plains, blessed with a rich abundance of nature's bestowing, yet for many years regarded as a desert and an inaccessible land totally unfit for Anglo-Saxon habitation—it has been sometimes a matter of speculation to me what the condition of that country would be to-day if this modern spirit of paternalism existed plus the conservation of Mr. Gifford Pinchot and his disciples. Instead of furnishing millions of dollars in money, vast quantities of munitions, and an army of magnificent soldiers it would in all probability have more resembled our neighboring Republic of Mexico.

You can not, Mr. President, develop a new country by running to Washington to get help for everything that you think may be needed. We are doing it now. If a man's family develops a new type of stomachache or backache, and if it should become in the slightest degree contagious or threaten to become contagious, Congress is invoked to come at once to the relief of that man's family. If a citizen discovers a peculiar deposit of any sort, even upon his own premises, he, of course, seeks its proper analysis; and if there be something of potential value disclosed, he at once petitions the Department of Agriculture or the Department of the Interior or the Department of Commerce, or all of them combined, to come out and look at it, to analyze it, to precipitate it, to dissolve it, to coddle it with appropriations, all for the benefit of the common country. If our climate seems to be a little bit unusual and there be too much or too little precipitation for the immediate occasion, we wonder what peculiar conditions affect the temperature, and we hasten for relief always by the good old appropriation road.

I might mention, Mr. President, by way of illustration, many other incidents showing this universal tendency, but every one of them leads straight to the doors of the Federal Treasury, and every one of them to that extent deprives individuals and communities of that initiative without which self-government is practically impossible.

Mr. President, when some of us are fortunate enough in our section of the country to discover something in these days upon the public domain which seems to possess an actual or potential value and reports the same to Washington, he can rest assured that whatever may result the Government will see that he gets none of it.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will yield, apropos of his suggestion a moment ago about the disposition to come to the Federal Treasury for money with which to develop matters which are purely within the province of the individual, there are now in this city a number of gentlemen from the West who are perfectly willing to go ahead and make experiments for the purpose of obtaining potash and other minerals and metals necessary for our needs to-day, but understanding that the plan now was for the Government to spread its beneficent wing over everybody and over every enterprise instead of going ahead and organizing a company as they intended, spending their own money and their own energies, they have come down and are knocking at the doors of the various governmental agencies for money to aid in the enterprise.

Mr. THOMAS. Why should they not? What are we here for if it is not to appropriate money? That is the only thing I have done or tried to oppose since I have been here that amounts to anything. Why do we tax the people if it is not to make these appropriations?

Mr. President, a bill was introduced some time ago and referred to the committee of which the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] is chairman, providing for an appropriation of a considerable amount for the development and encouragement of our mining industry. Since that time I have been requested to offer the Government more property, containing more elements of a metallic nature, more minerals and in greater quantity, than I supposed existed anywhere on the face of the earth. Some time ago I heard from a friend of mine whom I had not seen since 1876. His attention had been called to that bill and he hastened to inform me, writing from a distant land, that in 1875 he had discovered a splendid deposit of platinum in the northwestern section of my State. He had been unable to work it, notwithstanding the fact that it is the most valuable metal of them all and to-day perhaps in greater demand than any other because of its limited quantity. He had allowed this knowledge to remain dormant for 45 long years, but now that Uncle Sam proposed to encourage and develop the mining industry he wanted me to call the attention of the proper authorities to the existence of this platinum deposit, the existence and locality of which he would willingly disclose for 50 per cent of the amount which the Government might determine to invest in that particular property. This gentleman desired to do something for his country. He wanted to do his bit in helping to win the war and to hit the Hun, and therefore he would content himself with only 50 per cent of what otherwise would be exacted from this great paternal Government of ours.

Mr. President, that is not surprising. That is human nature. The very moment the Government enters into the particular work of development, whether it be platinum in Colorado or lignite in the Dakotas or peat in Florida, or anything else, it has taken a great big job upon its hands and always discovers that its small appropriations must necessarily be followed by larger and larger ones, the experiment ceasing to be an experiment because finally resolving itself into a permanent governmental institution. So, Mr. President, I think this bill should not be passed. I know—I am morally certain—that everything which could be acquired or done under it has either been done heretofore or can be done through well-equipped existing agencies.

I know, Mr. President, as I said before, that only $150,000 is involved, and what is $150,000 in these days when hundreds of millions and billions of dollars are being appropriated by the American Congress? What is $150,000 for a purpose like this, when only last week in one day we enacted two measures carrying appropriations of nearly $16,000,000,000? Mr. President, the amount is so insignificant that, perhaps, I ought to apologize to the Senate for taking up its time at $1,000 an hour in discussing the subject. Nevertheless, Mr. President, I have been told that we should begin to economize somewhere. I am still trying to find a point where we can begin. No microscope has yet been found sufficiently powerful to locate it. Let us hope that in the matter of $150,000 for lignite and peat we can find a certain, although perhaps a slender, anchor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has seen fit to compare this appropriation of $150,000 with the aggregate appropriations of $16,000,000,000, which passed through the Senate in one day, and has thereby drawn a further inference that this appropriation of $150,000 is a matter of very little importance. As there does not seem to be anything else to be discussed before the Senate, perhaps the Senate will listen to me while I discuss it.

I shall have to confess that I know very little about lignite. I know, of course, that it burns and that the smoke goes up the chimney just the same. I know it has been used for a great many years as fuel, and I assume that it will be used for many years to come, and that its use will be developed and extended.

The thing about which I am concerned is the orgy of investigations on which the Government has already embarked and on which the Government apparently intends to continue to embark in ever-increasing degrees as time goes on, and particularly so long as the war lasts and some excuse may be offered for further investigation as a war measure.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has given us some very interesting facts as to the use of lignite and its by-products. I could not enlarge upon that recital were I to try, because I know so little about the matter; but it seems to me that the Senate might well take into consideration some of the investigations which have been made in the past and some of those that are now proposed to be made in the immediate future. Some of those proposals, I may say, are contained in a bill which has been reported to the Senate by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

I confess to a degree of discouragement when I found that some committee of the Senate other than the Committee on Agriculture had joined the cry for further investigation. I have labored under the impression, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture, that that committee had thought of every conceivable thing to investigate and had suggested such investigations.

I remember very well, Mr. President, a discussion last year about the shortage of potash in the United States and the insistent demand that was made by scientists, upon the Government pay roll, that the supply of potash should be immediately increased through an appropriation by Congress to be placed in their hands; that a seaweed which floats off the Pacific coast, which is known as kelp, was to be corralled under Government control and plants erected or leased or purchased by the Government, under the appropriations made, for the purpose of extracting potash from this remarkable kelp.

It is strange, Mr. President, how soon such investigations are forgotten and how, in the majority of instances, we never hear of the result. There is one thing, of course, we can always be certain of—that the money will be entirely expended; and the probabilities are that when it is expended they will come back to Congress and ask for more, in order, as the scientists in the department say, "to widen the scope of the investigation." Of course, I can not contend that the scientists will say that we should widen the scope of the kelp investigation, as that has for its outside limits the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. I might suggest that if the supply of kelp is exhausted we have on the western plains what is known as rabbit brush, that, it is said, will produce 135 pounds of potash to every ton of ash. Nothing will eat this rabbit brush; no grass will grow where it grows; jack rabbits nibble off the ends of it. We might experiment, when the kelp is exhausted, with this rabbit brush, which, as I understand, produces almost as much potash per ton of ash as does the kelp seaweed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I congratulate the Senator from New Mexico upon his suggestion, in that it is a new one, and has not been thought of prior to this time, apparently, by the officials of the department or been suggested to the Committee on Agriculture. The suggestion is interesting. I myself have seen the rabbit brush in all its glory and all its luxuriance, and I have no doubt that were enough of it gathered together and burned to make a ton of ashes, and if those ashes could be confined in a space protected from the winds of the Southwest for a sufficient length of time, 135 pounds of potash might be extracted from it. I have no doubt we shall hear about that sooner or later, and probably sooner. [Laughter.]

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I recollect some years ago we had in the Northwest a remarkable case involving the activities of scientists. There was found there, as I presume there was found in the State of New York, a weed called the tumbleweed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it knocks down fences.

Mr. NELSON. It is a weed that floats around with the wind. All at once some of the scientists christened it the "Russian thistle."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; the Russian thistle.

Mr. FALL. May I suggest that that is the weed which is known by the vulgar name of tumbleweed, I think.

Mr. NELSON. Tumbleweed; that is it. Well, bulletins were prepared and published, and we were told how the Russian thistle came into the country, but we were never given any remedy for it. Somehow or other the tumbleweed gradually disappeared, and that is the last we heard of the Russian thistle.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, it disappeared from the Northwest, I presume, but it is now infesting the plains of New Mexico, Arizona, and the Southwest generally.

Mr. NELSON. Does the Senator expect an appropriation will be asked to eradicate it?

Mr. FALL. I should like to have an amendment to this bill to try to remedy it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can I yield even for a discussion of the tumbleweed, Mr. President? [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, if there is no objection, presumably the Senator can yield for that purpose.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to correct the error, if anyone should think that the tumbleweed and the Russian thistle are the same thing. As a matter of fact, we in the Dakotas know something about the Russian thistle. We also fully understand about the tumbleweed, that we used to have down in Minnesota. The one is a weed that is perfectly harmless, though it would go dancing over the prairie, while the other is a real thistle in one respect; that is, it is covered with burs. When we have a good, wet season, it will not manifest itself, but whenever the season is dry, then it will get the start of the grain and it becomes a real menace. I agree, however, that nothing has been found that can eradicate it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I can not allow any reflection on my agricultural knowledge to go unchallenged. I insist that the tumbleweed in the Southwest is the genuine Russian thistle in all of its pristine glory. [Laughter.] It has all the spikes and all the stickers, I think you call them, ordinarily that are ever carried by any of the varieties of thistles, and it does tumble over the prairies at the same time.

Mr. STERLING. That is just as much as to say, if the Senator from New York will excuse me——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think that in good faith I should proceed.

Mr. STERLING. It is just as much as to say that the Russian thistle is a weed that tumbles like the tumbleweed, but it is a different species of weed altogether.

Mr. FALL. And the tumbleweed of the Southwest is a weed that thistles just like any other thistle. [Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, now that the question of tumbleweed has been settled, and there being no further demand that a remedy is necessary in order to eradicate it immediately, I beg leave of the Senate to proceed with some of my observations in connection with the orgy of investigations.

I remember that a year ago there was a great hue and cry about the grinding of wheat into flour. Apparently it had occurred to a good many people that that was a new art. To be sure, sir, I myself have secured a handful of wheat taken from the tomb of an ancient Egyptian, who was buried fifteen hundred years before Christ, and the wheat now is something like 3,900 or 4,000 years old. In the tomb there were instruments for the grinding of wheat into flour. So it is safe to say that while we last year were appropriating money to authorize the Department of Agriculture to erect experimental flour mills and to devise new and strange methods of grinding flour more efficiently than it had been done 5,000 years ago——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I know the Senator from New York wants to be accurate, and I desire to state that the appropriation for the establishment of an experimental mill for making baking tests, was not to teach anybody how to grind flour, but it was for the purpose, I will say to the Senator, of making tests, so as to enable the Agricultural Department to fix grades based upon those tests. Of course, that is quite a different thing from going into the science of milling and the grinding of flour. The Senator from New York will agree with me on that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Perhaps I was inaccurate to this extent: I should have added that the ancient Egyptians baked this ground wheat just as we attempt to bake it to-day, and I do not say that the art has reached its maximum of efficiency; but it is strange that, when some emergency overtakes the country, such as this great war, nearly everybody upon the Government pay roll or in the departments—and particularly in the Department of Agriculture—thinks of something by which the country can spend more money investigating. [Laughter.] It has been a repetition of one suggestion after another, one investigation after another, and, in the great majority of cases, the investigations are to be directed toward arts and sciences which have long been known to the human race.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not wish to disturb the Senator from New York, but I do not think anyone has hammered the Department of Agriculture any more than have I in the short time I have been here. I desire, however, to say to the Senator that I assume responsibility for the appropriation for these flouring mills. It was not because of the department asking for it; in fact, I had to plead with them for a year or two before I got them to consent to it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, the Senator from North Dakota cites a remarkable exception; and if those experiments shall be finished within 10 years, I shall congratulate the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from New York that the law has not yet been enacted, but the provision is in the Agricultural appropriation bill, which is still slumbering in the conference committee.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I dislike very much to interrupt the Senator, but if it is entirely agreeable to him, I should like very much to have him yield for a matter which I think will take but a few moments. I desire to report from the Committee on Appropriations the general deficiency appropriation bill. There are but few amendments, and I think its consideration will take but five minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am very glad to yield to the Senator for that purpose.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN. I report from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments House bill 12600 (S. Rept. 542) being the general deficiency appropriation bill, and asking unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the unfinished business should be laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FLETCHER. That should be done without displacing the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is displaced until the appropriation bill shall have been disposed of. The Chair does not know how long that will be.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12600) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Executive," subhead "Housing for war needs," on page 2, after line 2, to strike out:

The authorization fixed by section 8 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs," approved May 16, 1918, is increased from $60,000,000 to $110,000,000, and there is appropriated for the purposes thereof, including rental of offices in the District of Columbia, contingent and miscellaneous expenses, printing and binding, and personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $50,000,000, to be expended in accordance with the authority and under the conditions prescribed in the said act as amended by the deficiency appropriation act approved June 4, 1918, and to continue available during the fiscal year 1919.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "War Department," subhead "National Cemeteries," at the top of page 15, to insert:

Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa.: For seawall along the Delaware River at Frankford Arsenal, $25,000: Provided, That the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $36,000 for a seawall along the Delaware River at Frankford Arsenal contained in the urgent deficiency act approved October 6, 1917, be made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. There is a slight correction that should be made on page 15. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, at the top of the page, it is proposed to insert the center head "Armories and Arsenals."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head "Military Establishment," on page 26, after line 15, to insert:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

For Medical and Hospital Department, for meeting obligations incurred and to be incurred by authority of the deficiency appropriation act approved June 4, 1918, $33,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, to come in on page 32, after line 4.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following item:

Geological Survey: For discovering, developing, protecting, and rendering more accessible springs, streams, and water holes on arid public lands of the United States, for erecting and maintaining suitable and durable monuments and signboards, and for providing convenient and ready means, apparatus, and appliances by which water may be brought to the earth's surface, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Legislative," page 37, after line 3, to insert:

SENATE.

For 16 pages for the Senate Chamber at the rate of $2.50 per day each from and including July 1, 1918, until the close of the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, so much as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 8, to insert:

For maintaining, exchanging, and equipping motor vehicles for carrying the mails, and for official use of the offices of the Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, for the fiscal year 1918, $250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 12, to insert:

To enable the Postmaster of the Senate to keep a constant supply of postage stamps for sale to Senators, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 14, to insert:

To pay Dennis M. Kerr for extra and expert services rendered to the Committee on Pensions during the first and second sessions of the Sixty-fifth Congress as assistant clerk to said committee by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 19, to insert:

To reimburse the Official Reporters of the proceedings and debates of the Senate for clerical expenses actually and necessarily incurred from September 1, 1917, to June 30, 1918, $4,851.67.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I send to the desk an amendment, to come in on page 38, lines 8 and 9.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to strike out "Committee on Elections No. 1" and to insert in lieu thereof "Committees on Elections Nos. 1 and 3," and after line 9 to insert:

Mark R. Bacon, $2,000.
Samuel W. Beakes, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Government Printing Office," on page 39, after line 19, to insert:

From and after the passage of this act the compensation of all printer-linotype operators, printer-monotype-keyboard operators, makers-up, proof readers, and pressmen employed in the Government Printing Office shall be at the rate of 65 cents per hour for the time actually employed, and that the pay of all compositors, bookbinders, and bookbinder-machine operators employed in the Government Printing Office shall be at the rate of 60 cents per hour for the time actually employed: Provided, That employees of the Government Printing Office whose wages are increased by the provisions of this act shall be paid at the rates provided for herein during the period of the present war and for six months after the proclamation of peace, when the wages paid such employees shall thereafter be at the rates paid at the time of the passage of this act, unless otherwise provided by law.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if the subcommittee went into this matter pretty carefully and considered the suggestions of those who are interested and came to the conclusion that this provision met the situation fairly and justly?

Mr. MARTIN. The chairman of the subcommittee is present and will explain it further, if desired, but that is exactly what we did do. We thought the amendment fairly met conditions at the Printing Office. That was the judgment of the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in that connection may I ask if the committee considered the proposed amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the Committee on Printing not only considered the amendment that was offered by the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], but the original amendment, which was offered by the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. We held hearings and had the members of the different organizations before the committee, and the provision in the bill is in the identical wording agreed to by the Committee on Printing in a bill now on the calendar. Instead, however, of having it passed as a separate bill, which would have to go to the House and be passed there, we thought that it was absolutely necessary to put this provision upon this bill in order to have it pass before the contemplated recess. I repeat that this is, word for word, the bill that is now on the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. It provides for what was agreed upon by the Committee on Printing as a proper compensation?

Mr. SMOOT. The committee thinks it is proper compensation.

Mr. FLETCHER. It conforms to the bill as reported by the Committee on Printing?

Mr. SMOOT. Word for word.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The subcommittee had both propositions before it, but the Committee on Printing, after considering the whole question, concluded that this would meet the situation, and the Appropriations Committee adopted the view of the committee that had the matter in charge.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was under the head of "Judgments, Courts of Claims," on page 41, line 16, after the number "1182," to insert "and Senate Document No. 250"; in line 19, after the words "War Department," to strike out "$48,636.36" and insert "$59,804.54"; in line 20, after the words "Navy Department," to strike out "$16,073.50" and insert "$53,196.12"; in line 21, after the words "Post Office Department," to strike out "$1,677.80" and insert "$2,409.11"; in line 23, after the words "Interior Department," to strike out "$2,269.19" and insert "$17,820.09"; and on page 42, line 2, after the words "in all," to strike out "$95,025.05" and insert "$159,598.06"; so as to make the clause read:

For the payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, reported to Congress during the present session in House Document No. 1182 and Senate Document No. 250, namely:
Under the Treasury Department, $21,297.79;
Under the War Department, $59,804.54;
Under the Navy Department, $53,196.12;
Under the Post Office Department, $2,409.11;
Under the Interior Department, $17,820.09;
Under the Department of Justice, $1,691.75;
Under the Department of Commerce, $3,378.66;
In all, $159,598.06.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I send to the desk an amendment to come in on page 42, after line 6.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 42, after line 6, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the general deficiency appropriation act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 664), so far as the said act provides for the payment of the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905, in favor of the Cherokee Nation, with interest (Fortieth Court of Claims Reports, p. 252), be, and the same hereby is, so amended as to allow additional interest to be paid upon items 1 and 4 of said judgment, and upon the funds arising from said items 1 and 4, respectively, as follows, to wit: On the amount of the fund which arose from item 1 of said judgment as such amount was determined and paid to the Secretary of the Interior on July 2, 1906, to be by him credited to the principal of the Cherokee school fund, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to and including May 26, 1910; on the amount of the fund which arose from item 4 of said judgment, as such amount was determined and paid to the Secretary of the Interior on July 2, 1906, to be by him credited to the principal of the Cherokee national fund, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to and including May 26, 1910; on the original principal sum of item 4 of said judgment, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1893, to July 1, 1903, and on the amount of the interest thus accruing interest at 4 per cent per annum from December 29, 1905, to May 14, 1906; and on the aggregate of the sums of the interest for the last two periods herein above mentioned, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to the date of the passage of this act; and the sum of $27,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the interest above allowed, is hereby appropriated and authorized to be paid to the Cherokee Nation: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the amount arising from item 4 of said judgment, with interest thereon as herein above provided for, to the agent appointed by the Cherokee Nation acting through its principal chief to receive the same, said payment to be made immediately upon the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 55, after line 19, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to further amendment.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, on page 2 of the bill I notice that the committee has stricken out the House provision increasing the appropriation for housing for war needs. When this subject was heretofore under discussion, after several days' consideration, an appropriation of $60,000,000 for this purpose was made, and previous to that appropriation $50,000,000 was provided, to be expended by the Shipping Board, totaling $110,000,000. At the time this matter was under discussion I stated in the Senate that I had been informed by a man connected with the department for which this money is asked that before the war was over Congress would be required to appropriate for housing its workmen at least a billion dollars. The House provision in this bill looks like the beginning of an effort to get the billion. Perhaps it may be true that this additional $50,000,000 is needed, but before it is allowed this whole matter should be subjected to the most careful scrutiny at the hands of the Senate Committee on Appropriations. I am glad, therefore, that the item has been stricken from the bill, and I trust that it will not be reinserted in conference unless the Senate conferees are convinced that it is absolutely necessary.

I know, Mr. President, that in many parts of this country where large manufacturing plants are engaged in Government work the plants themselves are providing housing facilities for their workmen, and I really believe that in practically all cases these institutions making vast profits will provide the necessary homes for their men if the Government will only insist upon it. The other day in passing through a village near Wilmington, Del., I saw a great plant—I think it was called the American Chemical Works—and I happened to meet on the road a gentleman from New York who is a builder, who told me that he was constructing for this concern 400 houses at their own expense for taking care of their own workmen.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I will state for the Senator's information they are spending over $5,000,000 of their own funds for that purpose without asking any favor of the Government.

Mr. CALDER. I am glad to have the Senator from Pennsylvania corroborate my statement in that regard. I believe, Mr. President, that there are some people engaged in this very business who believe that they can induce the Government to go into the wholesale building of homes to carry out some notion of theirs relative to housing matters. I know that the chairman of the committee is deeply concerned over this question, and it is one which should be carefully considered before we permit the commission having these matters in charge to go too far in this very important service, for I am convinced that unless we are exceedingly careful vast sums of the people's money will be wasted.

It is one thing for the Government on its own account to go into the business of building homes for its workmen and an entirely different thing for us to lend, where necessary, the money needed to those responsible to provide the houses for their own employees; the latter method is a legitimate undertaking, where the Government takes little unnecessary risk; while the former, in my opinion, unless carefully safeguarded, is sure to lead to great extravagance and waste.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I submit a conference report in regard to the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not present that now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has a right to do so under the rule.

Mr. GRONNA. I understand that, Mr. President; but I have made the announcement that I shall have to leave the Senate Chamber before 6 o'clock, and I had hoped the Senator would let us have the time that is left in which to pass this lignite bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate, Nos. 1, 61, and 83, to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

JOHN WALTER SMITH,
JOE T. ROBINSON,
J. H. GALLINGER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

T. U. SISSON,
JAS. MCANDREWS,
C. R. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives adhering to its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, Nos. 1, 61, and 83, to the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I think it desirable that the Senate should express itself upon these items in disagreement. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum, so that we may get an expression of the sentiment of the Senate in regard to this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Smoot
Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Sterling
Calder	Kellogg	Penrose	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Phelan	Swanson
Dillingham	Kenyon	Pittman	Thomas
Fall	Lewis	Poindexter	Trammell
Fernald	Lodge	Pomerene	Underwood
Fletcher	McCumber	Ransdell	Vardaman
France	McKellar	Reed	Wadsworth
Gallinger	McNeary	Shafroth	Warren
Gerry	Martin	Sheppard	Weeks
Gronna	Myers	Simmons	Williams
Henderson	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Hollis	New	Smith, Md.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day. I wish also to announce the unavoidable absence, on official business, of the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, the object of this roll call is to obtain a quorum. The conferees on the part of the Senate in regard to the District of Columbia appropriation bill desire to have a record vote as to how far they are sustained in their disagreement. The House seems to have had a vote, and there seem to be some rumors going around that they do not know how the Senate stands upon this disagreement on the half-and-half question, and I desire to take a vote of the Senate upon that proposition.

I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments, and I ask for a yea-and-nay vote to show to what extent the Senate approves of that insistence.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Maryland a question?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would explain just exactly what the amendments are that are in dispute. I think there are quite a number of Senators who have not been able to give any attention to the conference report and do not know what the amendments are.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. There are three amendments in disagreement. One is with regard to the half-and-half principle. That is amendment numbered 1. Another is the application to that principle in regard to whether the District alone shall pay for the playgrounds or whether they shall be paid for on the half-and-half plan. The other is an amendment of $3,860 with regard to Thomas Keller and wife. I will suggest that probably it would be more agreeable if we should separate the amendments for the purpose of a vote.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator permit me to suggest that he take up the first two amendments, at least—the other one seems to relate to another matter—and tell us what proposition the House has instead of the half-and-half plan that the Senate amendment provides for, and then explain also which side the Senate conferees take of the question of paying for playgrounds so that we may have a definite understanding of what the dispute is?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. In order to comply with the request of the Senator from Nebraska, I suggest that we vote first on amendments numbered 1 and 83. One is the principle itself and the other is the application of the principle. The amendment numbered 83 is the application of the principle whether the District of Columbia shall pay for these playgrounds alone or whether they shall be paid for out of the general fund on the half-and-half basis. We will vote first on those two amendments, which I consider one and the same.

Mr. NORRIS. Which side of that question do the Senate conferees take?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We are in favor of the half-and-half plan. If there ever was a time when that plan should prevail, it is now, when the Government is controlling and running and has charge of all the various functions. This is no time to make any change, and in my judgment the plan is right all the time.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator did not understand my question. I wanted the Senator to state, on the question of playgrounds, which side the Senate conferees take.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We take the ground that they ought to be paid for out of the general fund on the half-and-half basis.

Mr. NORRIS. And the House conferees disagree to that?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. They do.

Mr. NORRIS. They claim that they should be paid for entirely from the District taxes?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Entirely out of the funds of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the chairman of the committee will permit me, the playground proposition is the only exception that the House insists upon if the half-and-half principle prevails. In the case of no other item in the bill is it insisted by the House that the entire amount of money shall come from the treasury of the District of Columbia. It differentiates that item from all others.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That one item is differentiated from all others.

Mr. GALLINGER. And we feel that there is no reason for it in justice.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That was the judgment of the committee and the judgment of the conferees.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator another question. What system of taxation do the House conferees suggest in place of the half-and-half system—the same one that they had before? I think the Senator ought to explain what the House proposes instead of the half-and-half system.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The House proposes to take whatever money the District raises by taxation, the balance to be paid by the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland offers a resolution, which will be stated.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate further insists upon its amendments numbered 1 and 83 to the bill (H. R. 11692) entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes," requests a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We are voting now simply on the question of the extent to which the Senate will sustain its conferees with regard to their action as to the various amendments in disagreement.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to occupy just one minute. As I understand, the question of the half-and-half principle is involved in the vote we are about to take, is it not?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That is the question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to make an observation that will occupy only a minute or two.

The Senator from Maryland has very properly said that this seems an inopportune time to change the system. I need not do more than call the attention of Senators to the fact that the Government has greatly increased its holdings in the District of Columbia during the last year, and there is a very prevalent belief that the Government to-day controls and owns more than half of the property in the District of Columbia. Now, the proposition on the part of the other House is that the money taken from the people of this District by taxation, which is to-day more than one-half the expense of running the District, shall be taken by the Government, shall go into the Treasury, and the Government shall pay whatever balance is necessary, so that in the very nature of things the District of Columbia would be paying more than one-half of the expenses of the Government.

That is all there is to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland requests the yeas and nays on the resolution offered by him. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR. I again announce the unavoidable absence, owing to illness, of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and the unavoidable absence, upon official business, of the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. WATSON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote "yea."

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. A moment ago I voted without announcing the transfer. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. If the junior Senator from Kansas were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GUION] are detained on official business.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The result was announced—yeas 59, nays 4, as follows:

So the resolution of Mr. SMITH of Maryland was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I now offer a similar resolution with reference to amendment numbered 61, which authorizes the payment of Mr. Thomas W. Keller and wife for property that was taken from him, and for which he was paid nothing; and not only was he paid nothing but he was taxed to pay the owners of the property adjoining his the amount of $6,000. He got nothing for his property, but was taxed to pay for another man's property similarly taken.

I ask for a record vote on the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland offers a resolution, which will be stated.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate further insists upon its amendment numbered 61 to the bill (H. R. 11692) entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I offered this amendment with reference to the Keller claim, and I will delay the Senate just a moment to state the facts in the case.

There were two tracts of land laid out in the northwest. The older tract was the tract in which the Keller property lies. Immediately adjoining his property the new tract began. On the new tract there was a broader street. The houses were put back to the parking on the broad street, but when they came up to the Keller tract they wanted to open the right of way and make the street broader all the length. There were only three lots. Two of them belonged to Mr. Keller and one to a gentleman on the corner. The two lots had about the same number of square feet in them. In the condemnation proceedings the findings in the case of the corner lot were that the owner was damaged to the extent of $6,000, and no benefits were taxed against him. There was a frame house on the property, assessed at $600, that had to be removed. The testimony showed that it was not worth more than a thousand dollars at the outside. So that the adjoining lot owner was paid $5,000 damages net, while the Keller property was not only assessed the benefits, but was not given any damages—that is, it was allowed a certain amount of damages—but the assessment of benefits far exceeded the damages; so they took Mr. Keller's property away from him without paying him for it.

I think it is a just claim. I always have thought so. Mr. Keller has a letter from the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia at that time, in which he stated that he thought this claim was really just; and I think it ought to be insisted upon.

I ask for a record vote on the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama asks for the yeas and nays on the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I announce the same transfer of my pair as on the last roll call and vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I make the same transfer as on the previous roll call and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR. I again announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness, and will state that if he were present he would vote "yea." I also announce the unavoidable absence on official business of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY].

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to announce again the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and his pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], and to say that if the Senator from Kansas were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). Announcing the same transfer of my pair as on the previous roll call, I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Making the same transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 61, nays 0, as follows:

So the resolution of Mr. SMITH of Maryland was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and request a further conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and Mr. CURTIS managers at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

INVESTIGATION OF LIGNITE COALS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3220) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make investigations, through the Bureau of Mines, of lignite coals, to determine the practicability of their utilization as a fuel and in producing commercial products.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has the floor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, when interrupted by more important business I was discussing the pending bill. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill, or any other Senator interested in the proceedings this afternoon or to-morrow, whether it is the intention to hold the Senate in session this afternoon until a vote is reached on this measure? If an understanding may be reached that it will go over until to-morrow and a vote be had then, I would not think of holding the Senate in session this afternoon while I continued my remarks.

Mr. HENDERSON. We could not hear on this side what the Senator said.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I simply wanted to ask whether it is the intention of the Senator in charge of the bill which was under discussion before the conference reports were brought in to continue the session this afternoon or to let it go over until to-morrow and have the vote taken on it to-morrow? When the conference reports were brought in I yielded the floor with the intention of resuming it, but at this rather late hour I do not care to hold the Senate in session to listen to my remarks unless it is the purpose of the Senate to continue this afternoon the discussion of the bill and to reach a vote upon it.

Mr. HENDERSON. If it is agreeable to the Senator from Florida and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], I have no objection whatever to the bill going over until to-morrow.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is only a little after 5, and it seems to me that it is too early to take a recess.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I for the moment refrain from addressing the Senate in the hope that the Senate may escape the further continuation of my remarks this afternoon.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am perfectly willing to follow whatever course the Senator from Florida wishes to pursue in the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to submit a conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for that purpose.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 256).

Mr. FLETCHER. I submit a conference report and ask that it may lie on the table and be printed.

The conference report was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 7, 8, and 9.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3 and 4, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the language in the proposed amendment; also strike out the period at the end of line 20, page 18, and insert in lieu thereof a colon, and add the following words: "Provided, That in estimating the cost of doing the work by Government plant, including the cost of labor and materials, there shall also be taken into account proper charges for depreciation of plant and all supervising and overhead expenses and interest on the capital invested in the Government plant, but the rate of interest shall not exceed the maximum prevailing rate being paid by the United States on current issues of bonds or other evidences of indebtedness"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment change the number of the section from 9 to 8, and strike out the word "be," at the beginning of the twentieth line, and insert in lieu thereof the word "being"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change the number of the section from 10 to 9; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 3, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 2, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Jehovah, who hast spoken into existence all the beauty, grandeur, and glory round about us, and hast created us, Thy children, after Thine image and likeness, and hast filled our souls with longings, hopes, and aspirations which will not be stayed, lead Thou us on that we may be heroes, victors in the great battle of life, and receive at last from Thine own hand a crown of glory.

Hear us, O Lord, when we pray for poor suffering humanity. Thousands are dead. Thousands are dying. Other thousands are wounded and bleeding. Hearts are rent and torn asunder with grief.

Stay the hands, we beseech Thee, of the assassins, and crown our arms and those of our allies with victory, that the bloodthirsty fiends may be brought to their knees in supplication; and glory and honor be Thine through Christ Jesus the Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

Mr. GORDON. House joint resolution 309.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent, by authority of the Committee on Military Affairs, to rerefer the joint resolution 309 from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CORRECTION OF ERROR, ENROLLMENT OF A BILL.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GARD. On behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, to offer the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. What is it the gentleman desires?

Mr. GARD. I have sent to the Clerk's desk a privileged resolution from the Committee on the Judiciary seeking to correct a bill which was passed, I think, yesterday or the day before, changing the word "persons" to "person" in the bill passed for the protection of uniforms of the Army and Navy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 47.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill H. R. 11247, and entitled "An act to provide for the protection of the uniform of friendly nations, and for other purposes," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the word "persons," in line 3, page 1, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "person."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The question was taken, and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

REPORT FROM COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 11247.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WALSH. I think that act should not be laid before the House until the correction has been made in pursuance to the concurrent resolution just passed.

EXEMPTIONS FROM MILITARY DUTY, DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has a communication here from the Secretary of State. He does not know what to do with it, except to lay it before the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, July 1, 1918.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Mr. Gordon Auchincloss informs me that by some clerical error in the department, over which he had no control, his name was not submitted in the list of persons in the service of the Department of State who were, on June 5, 1917, between the ages of 21 and 31, for whom requests for exemption from military duty or deferred classification have been asked by the department, which was forwarded to Congress through the President on June 13. The name of Mr. G. Howland Shaw was also inadvertently omitted from this list, the request for deferred classification having been made while he was a clerk in the department. Subsequent to the filing of the request, however, Mr. Shaw was appointed a secretary in the Diplomatic Service and his appointment was confirmed by the Senate on May 3, so that at the time the list was made up Mr. Shaw was within that class of persons who are exempted by law.

Inasmuch as the President's communication above mentioned was not referred to a committee but was merely published in the RECORD, I am doubtful as to what steps I should take to correct the error so that the names of Mr. Auchincloss and Mr. Shaw may be included among those for whom the department has asked deferred classification.

I am, my dear Mr. Speaker,
Sincerely, yours, ROBERT LANSING.

The Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed in the RECORD and to lie on the table with these other communications of the same kind. It is simply supplementary to the others.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12541) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution 47.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 11247) entitled "An act providing for the protection of the uniform of friendly nations, and for other purposes," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the word "persons," in line 3, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the word "person."

JOINT RESOLUTION CONTINUING CERTAIN APPROPRIATION BILLS (H. DOC. NO. 1231).

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 311) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the month of July, 1918, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask my colleague whether or not if this resolution is agreed to it would not continue the half-and-half provision for a year?

Mr. SHERLEY. It would not. It only applies to the month of July, and would not apply that long if the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia should be passed and become a law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Do I correctly understand my colleague to state this applies to the District of Columbia for one month only?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If there is no other legislation before the beginning of next month, then what happens?

Mr. SHERLEY. There will have to be another joint resolution, or there will be no authority of law for continuing the District of Columbia government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, let the resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 311) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the month of July, 1918, and for other purposes.

Resolved, etc., That the necessary operations of the Government, so far as they relate to the support of the Army and the Department of Agriculture, including food production operations heretofore provided for by law, and of the District of Columbia, as they were being carried on at the close of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918, are hereby authorized to be continued notwithstanding that appropriations therefor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, or any part of such fiscal year, have not been made by law, and there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount sufficient to carry on such necessary operations during the month of July, 1918, as the same were carried on during the fiscal year 1918, and including also those operations now authorized by law and not carried on prior to July 1, 1918: Provided, That expenditures for the District of Columbia shall be paid one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That no greater amount shall be expended during July, 1918, than an amount equal to one-twelfth of the amount of any appropriations available for the fiscal year 1918, excepting that the rate of expenditure for the month of July, 1917, or for the month of June, 1918, if either be greater than such one-twelfth, may be continued during the month of July, 1918, and where necessary operations have been or may be authorized by law without having been carried on prior to the 1st day of July, 1918, there may be expended during the month of July, 1918, only so much as may be necessary adequately to carry on the operations so authorized: And provided also, That the appropriation made by this resolution for any necessary operation shall not be available beyond the date when other appropriations hereafter are made therefor and the amount which may be expended hereunder shall be in lieu of an equal amount of an appropriation for the same purposes, if there be one hereafter made, it being the purpose of this resolution that an appropriation hereafter made, for any operation for the current fiscal year, shall not be in addition to the appropriation herein made but shall be considered as the sole appropriation, so that any amount expended hereunder shall be treated as an expenditure under such appropriation for the current fiscal year.

This joint resolution shall be construed as authorizing salaries and compensation for officers, clerks, and other employees holding offices or employment for which specific salaries or compensation were appropriated for the fiscal year 1918, to continue during July, 1918, to be paid at the same rate while lawfully holding such offices or employment until the appropriations therefor have been made for the fiscal year 1919, and thereafter to be paid only at the rate provided in said appropriations.

Appropriations for the service of the fiscal year 1919 made in Acts approved since June 30, 1918, shall be available for all purposes therein provided for from and including the 1st day of July, 1918, and all obligations incurred pursuant to the terms of said acts as approved are ratified and confirmed from and including the said 1st day of July.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object—or would the gentleman prefer to have the consent first?

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to have the consent, and then I am prepared to make a statement to the House touching what the resolution is, and will state now that it was drawn after very careful consultation with the Comptroller of the Treasury and I believe accurately meets the situation that now confronts the Government.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I did not propose to object, of course, and so I will not even reserve the right at this time, but direct some inquiries I desire to make to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the resolution may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, there remains of the annual supply bills unsigned, but passed by Congress, the pension bill, the Post Office appropriation bill, and the legislative, executive, and judicial bill. I believe those bills will receive the signature of the President to-day, though I have no right authoritatively to make that statement. There have not been passed by the Congress the Army bill, the two Agricultural appropriation bills, the District of Columbia bill, and the fortifications bill, though I understand that a complete agreement has been reached touching the fortifications bill and that it will be passed by the two Houses before the day is finished. The Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, the Indian appropriation bill, the Military Academy appropriation bill, the Navy appropriation bill, and the sundry civil appropriation bill are now laws. As I stated yesterday, the situation that confronts the Government this year is different from that which has confronted it in years gone by when at the end of the fiscal year there has been a failure of some of the supply bills. And that situation grows out of the fact that there has been a tremendous expansion of the Government activities both in character and in amount. So that an appropriation that would simply carry an amount equal to one-twelfth of the annual appropriation bill of the year before would neither be sufficient in many instances as to amount nor would it be sufficient as to activities that are going on and that must continue.

Realizing the difficulty of the situation and the need of accurately meeting it by legislation, I requested the Comptroller of the Treasury to come to the Committee on Appropriations yesterday, and he spent quite a number of hours in the drafting of the resolution which I referred to yesterday. After the House had adjourned, in order to make assurance double sure, I spent some two hours further with him and the clerk of the committee in checking the resolution over, so that I believe every precaution that could be taken in advance has been taken to present a resolution in proper form.

Now, the resolution undertakes to do this: It undertakes to make provision for the necessary operations in relation to the support of the Army, the Department of Agriculture, including food-production operations heretofore provided for by law, and of the District of Columbia for a month. And it provides that one-twelfth of the amount carried in such annual appropriation bills for the last year may be used for such purposes during the month of July. But it also provides that where in June, 1918, the expenditures have been at a rate in excess of one-twelfth, or July of 1917, that the amount so expended in either June, 1918, or July, 1917, may be expended in lieu of the one-twelfth. Now, the reason for that was this: As to July, 1917, it was put in on account of the District of Columbia, because their expenditures are very heavy at the beginning of a new fiscal year and are very light at the end of a fiscal year, and the one-twelfth might not meet the situation. Particularly is that true as to expenditures in connection with roads and streets and repairs, and things of that sort. As to June, 1918, it was put in in order that expenditures for the support of the Army might continue at the same rate they have continued during the month of June just passed. And in that way we take care of the situation of which I spoke, due to the increase in the expenditures of the Government. But more than that is done. There have been certain activities authorized by law which have not heretofore been activities of the Government. For instance, we have authorized the District of Columbia to take over the collection and disposition of garbage as a municipal activity, instead of it being done, as heretofore, by contract. Now, if no provision was made for such a situation the District without any contract would be in a position where it could not lawfully undertake this work, and there would be no one else to undertake it. And so gentlemen will find that this language is intended to cover that:

And including also those operations now authorized by law and not carried on prior to July 1, 1918.

Then provision is made in the joint resolution for the payment of salaries at the same rate that they were paid heretofore, in the fiscal year that is past, rather than undertake to change the salary payment. Now, that might result, and will result, touching the Post Office Department, for instance, in clerks who get increases under the new appropriation bill, in receiving their old salary for the one or two or three days that may expire before the new law goes into effect; but the result of that is very greatly to simplify the bookkeeping and the work of the department in auditing these matters.

Then it is provided that, as to appropriations which shall be made in bills that became law since the 30th of June, 1918, which would apply to the pension bill, the Post Office bill, the legislative bill, and will subsequently apply to these other bills that have not now passed the Congress, the appropriations and authorizations therein shall be considered as applying as of the 1st of July, including that date, which is the curative provision of the joint resolution.

I appreciate that the House can not in the statement made by me follow these details; but I beg to assure the House again that the resolution has been the result of a very careful study by the comptroller. He is the legal officer of the Government, and his decision is final as to whether or not appropriations made are authorized under law or not. The resolution, I believe, accurately takes care of the situation and protects the Government in every way that it is possible to now protect it. And having had his assistance and his full concurrence in the form of the resolution, I feel warranted in asking the House to pass it without amendment.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. As to warrant for continuing appropriations, is there any warrant of law for the exception made in the provision for the payment of deficiencies?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know that I understand the gentleman.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. You undertake here to continue the last year's appropriation to meet the expenses of the municipal government for the ensuing month, and not only undertake to provide for them but you also undertake to provide for the payment of additional expenditures that, as has been explained, are incident to activities here, and by the addition of the war program, and so forth.

The point I make is this: Is there any warrant of law that authorizes the Congress in a resolution of this character to anticipate a deficiency or to provide for the payment of that deficiency in addition to the appropriation provided under the last bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know that I catch yet just what the gentleman's question implies. But this is true, if he is speaking of deficiencies as such, which occurred in 1918: They are taken care of by the deficiency bill which passed the House yesterday, and which will pass the Senate, I hope, to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the point I am trying to make. It is evident that an appropriation made last year, or the same amount of appropriation of last year, would not meet the expense of this year, or that one month's appropriation or one-twelfth of the appropriation of last year, would not pay the expense of one month for this coming fiscal year; so that the continuation of the appropriation of last year will not meet this expense.

Mr. SHERLEY. That was remedied by providing that wherever the expenditures for the month of June, 1918, or of July, 1917, was in excess of a twelfth of the expenditure of last year an equal amount to either the June, 1918, or July, 1917, expenditure could be expended during the month of July, 1918.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the point. Is there any warrant of law authorizing that character of provision?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is warrant of law in this resolution, which when it passes will have all the effect of law. A joint resolution differs in no particular from a bill, and it has to be signed by the President.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. My understanding of the resolution—and I would like, of course, for the record to show that this construction is the correct one—is that whatever salaries are being paid now in the District of Columbia under the law on June 30 will be continued by this resolution.

Mr. SHERLEY. They will be continued for the month of July unless during the month of July there shall be an annual appropriation bill passed. Then, if that should happen, from the date of that passage there would be a change—whatever change might be carried in the law.

Mr. SISSON. In other words, no present activities of the District government would be affected if this resolution passed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well I think not, so far as it is possible to provide for it. But this is true: There are certain street improvements where the law of the past fiscal year provided for the improvement of those named streets, and where the new law will provide for the improvement of other streets. This resolution would not enable those streets that will be specifically named to be improved, and of course if the others have been there is no need for that.

Mr. SISSON. I understand. Now, the item that is absolutely essential at this time is a new item, for the purchase of this reduction-sewerage plant by the District Commissioners. That was authorized by law, and the terms of this resolution are broad enough to permit the District Commissioners to pay for that plant?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the language reads that there may be expended during the month of July, 1918, only so much as may be necessary adequately to carry on the operations so authorized. That is, new operations authorized by law.

Mr. SISSON. My understanding, from the auditor of the District and the auditor of the Government, is that the language would permit them to take over that plant.

Mr. SHERLEY. As I stated, I believe, so far as it is possible by joint resolution to anticipate the needs of the Government for the month of July, we have done so in this resolution.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. LONDON. This does not dispense with the necessity of passing these appropriation bills immediately?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not. We ought to pass them as soon as we can pass them.

Mr. LONDON. During the month of July?

Mr. SHERLEY. Not only during the month of July but during the first week of July. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman has concluded, I understand?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have concluded.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I am in accord with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], the chairman of the committee, on this resolution. We all appreciate, of course, that it is unfortunate to have to pass these temporary resolutions, because it is both expensive and annoying for the departments. In bookkeeping it makes a material and expensive difficulty, and it also makes uncertain the appropriations. But, of course, it must be done, and this is the only way of doing it.

But it seems to me that it was also peculiarly unfortunate that the pension bill, which went to the President last week, was not signed before July 1, and I believe it has not yet been signed; that the Post Office appropriation bill, which went to the President Saturday, was not signed before July 1, and I believe is not yet signed, and that the legislative bill, which went to the President the middle of last week, was not vetoed until yesterday. Then it went back to the President yesterday with the objectionable feature eliminated, but I understand has not yet been signed.

The result of that was, of course, that on yesterday all the clerks here in Washington were employed without warrant of law, and really in defiance of law, because the law expressly provides that they shall not be employed unless appropriations have been made for them. Therefore yesterday none were legally employed. If the bill had been acted upon by the President earlier, this embarrassing and illegal condition could have been avoided. I do not think this House could have avoided it. You heard what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] said yesterday, that he expected there would be, and there ought to have been, a session Sunday, and I entirely agree with him in that. Then this could have been remedied, or it even probably could have been remedied yesterday, if the Senate had not so early adjourned before this resolution was introduced.

It is well for us to know where the blame belongs. But at the same time we must recognize that it is a misfortune that it should so have happened. It is a serious matter that our Government, which stands for law, should, because of carelessness, be obliged to perform all its functions even for a day or two in defiance of its own law. The Senate, I believe, or some individual Senators, have some ingenious plan in their minds by which this illegality can be set right. I confess I can not understand how it can be done. I do not see why it was not necessary that this resolution should have been passed yesterday at the latest in order that there should have been any warrant of law at all for the continuation of the Government activities yesterday. But, of course, I do not criticize the departments for continuing their work and for breaking the law. Inter arma silent leges, and when Congress has not made appropriations the departments must go on and anticipate that we will make good, as we are doing by this resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee rose.

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire me to yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will it interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. GILLETT. No.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman happen to know what that ingenious plan is to which he referred?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know. I have simply been told that the Senate thinks that haste about this resolution is not necessary. My ingenuity has not been sufficient to invent any scheme which would take the place of this resolution, or which would overcome the illegality of all the executive work of yesterday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It has just been suggested to me to inquire if, because of the fact that they run their business sometimes by unanimous consent, they think the Government can be run by unanimous consent.

Mr. GILLETT. Apparently they think that the law can be set aside and ignored.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is a most unfortunate situation. I called attention to it on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. GILLETT. I think the Members of the House in general appreciate that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, coming to the resolution itself, I have only seen it since the House met. I do not mean by that to criticize the chairman at all. I know there was no intention not to consult the members of the committee, but the stress prevented it.

This resolution is drawn quite differently from ordinary resolutions of the kind; but of course the operations of the Government are extraordinary at present. It does certainly seem extraordinary that we should pass a provision—

That the necessary operations of the Government * * * are hereby authorized to be continued.

But although that seems rather vague language, I can not think of anything that is better, and I do appreciate also that this has been drawn with the greatest care, and that for anyone to attempt offhand to amend it or improve it would probably injure it, so I do not think we ought to tamper with it here.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me right there, in connection with his suggestion——

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will note that the words—

Necessary operations of the Government—are qualified by the language that immediately follows—

so far as they relate to the support of the Army and the Department of Agriculture, including food-production operations heretofore provided for by law, and of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. It only applies to the three bills that are not passed.

Mr. SHERLEY. I took the liberty of suggesting to the auditor that that language ought to be written into the resolution, so as to narrow its effect.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. That improved it. Then the very last section of the bill strikes me as singular. It seems to me as if we are appropriating double. We first appropriate originally by this act and then we also provide that payments may be made out of the other act.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will find that language is expressly used in the resolution, which says that when moneys are paid as a result of the resolution they shall not be considered in addition to the sums that shall be subsequently carried in the regular supply bills, and that that is the purpose of it. We were so careful about that that we not only provided it, but we then put an interpretation into the act, and the purpose of the last paragraph is simply to make each act retroactive, as of the 1st of July, instead of becoming a law as of the date that it is signed by the President, but not to increase the appropriations.

Mr. GILLETT. I was wondering how they would be able, in their bookkeeping, to check up and appropriate first out of this act and then when the others become laws appropriate out of them.

Mr. SHERLEY. Any moneys paid out by virtue of this joint resolution are subsequently charged to the amounts that are carried in the appropriation law, and to that extent the sums in the appropriation act are reduced.

Mr. GILLETT. That would seem to clarify it. As I said, I did not expect to offer any amendment, or imagine that I could improve the resolution. I think the appropriation meets the emergency, but I thought I ought to suggest the unfortunate predicament we are in, which might easily have been prevented, but for which this House, it seems to me, is not responsible.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the passage of the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield before that?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. In the copy of the resolution which I got at the desk, in line 6, there is written in pencil the word "now" after the word "operations."

Mr. SHERLEY. That is true, and it was so read, and will, therefore, be passed as a part of the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. I did not notice that it was so read.

Mr. SHERLEY. It was so read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is it a complete report?

Mr. SISSON. It is not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has this report been presented to the House heretofore for consideration?

Mr. SISSON. This is the first time this report has been presented.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to present the report and for its immediate consideration?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report, the rule about first printing in the RECORD to the contrary notwithstanding. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 61, and 83 to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

T. U. SISSON,
JAS. MCANDREWS,
C. R. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN WALTER SMITH,
JOE T. ROBINSON,
J. H. GALLINGER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, these are the same amendments which have been in disagreement. Your conferees were unable really to confer with the Senate conferees, because they declined to discuss the matter.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I understood the gentleman's report to state—

After a full and free conference.

Mr. SISSON. That happens to be the form on which all conference reports are prepared by the clerks, and the blank has been simply filled in. I do not see that anything could be accomplished by the conferees going on any further with the conference. For that reason I move that the House adhere to its disagreement with the Senate on the three amendments Nos. 1, 61, and 83.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House adhere to its disagreement to these three Senate amendments—Nos. 1, 61, and 83.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. CRISP. Is not the parliamentary effect of the motion that the House adhere notice to the Senate that the House will not further consider the matter with them, and that unless the Senate yields there will be no further conference between the two Houses on the amendments?

Mr. SISSON. That is my understanding of the situation.

Mr. CRISP. That was my understanding, and I made the inquiry for the purpose of bringing the facts fully before the House, so that the House would know the effect of the motion before it votes.

Mr. SISSON. I wish to discuss the matter further.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to suggest to the gentleman that we ought to consider these amendments separately, because the House might want to insist upon its position as to some of them and not as to the others.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, page 1, lines 3 to 9, inclusive, and on page 2 strike out lines 1 to 5, inclusive, which read as follows:

"That the following sums are appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that they are sufficient therefor and the remainder out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, but the amount to be paid from the Treasury of the United States shall in no event be as much as one-half of said expenses, in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, except amounts to pay the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt of said District, of which amounts one half is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, namely"—

And insert the following:

"That one half of the following sums, respectively, is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, namely."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that the House adhere to its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. RAKER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Is a motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. RAKER. I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] makes a preferential motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I want to state briefly the position of the conferees. When the enabling act was passed many years ago the District of Columbia was in debt something like $40,000,000. There was in round numbers about 80,000 population in the District. The bonds of the District of Columbia were very much below par. Great street areas had been opened up upon which there were no houses. There was a great deal of discussion at the time about moving the Capital from the District of Columbia. The government of the District of Columbia was then in the hands of the people of the District. The result of the controversy was that a settlement was finally arrived at. Senator Blackburn, of Kentucky, introduced the original act which was passed and as a gratuity under that act the Federal Government assumed to guarantee the payment of the bonds in the District of Columbia, and they were refunded and are now called the 3.65 bonds.

The Federal Government from that day to this, under that agreement, has been paying one-half of the bonds for which the Federal Government was in no way liable until that act. The District of Columbia now seeks and contends that that gratuity given the District of Columbia at that time because it was a stench in the nostrils of all people throughout the country, that the District was in that condition—so the Republicans and Democrats, without its being a partisan measure, finally hit upon the half-and-half arrangement, and upon that arrangement the District of Columbia gave up its municipal government entirely, and from that day to this it has been run by Congress.

That as you will see was a temporary matter. Go back and read the RECORD at the time and you will see that it was only to cure that fearful condition in which the District found itself. Notwithstanding that, the business organizations of the District of Columbia are contending that the people of the District of Columbia should get one-half of the money to pay the expenses of the District out of the Federal Treasury.

What is the condition now? The auditor of the District, the auditor of the Government, states that at this time the amount of money to the credit of the District of Columbia on the books will be by next year about $8,000,000. In other words, the District of Columbia has grown from 80,000 population to a 400,000 city. We have repeatedly passed through this House by an overwhelming vote an amendment to abolish the half-and-half system.

When by an overwhelming vote we passed it twice, when Mr. Page, of North Carolina, had charge of this bill, it was then for the first time that this matter was briefly discussed by two Senators on the floor of the Senate. Even with that short consideration they were confronted with such a number of votes against the half-and-half that it looked dangerous. The gentleman from Alabama, then a Member of this House, Mr. UNDERWOOD, the majority leader, made a motion that a joint commission be appointed consisting of three Members of this House and three Members of the Senate. The three Members of the House were the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GARD, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. RAINEY, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. COOPER. All three of these gentlemen had consistently voted for the half-and-half, and the three Senators had consistently voted for the half-and-half.

In accordance with the resolution they met in the summer, had weeks of hearings, heard the people of the District of Columbia and their attorneys, the real estate people, and all had an opportunity to be heard. Notwithstanding that, the commission could not find a single reason for retaining the half-and-half and they made a unanimous report that there was no reason for the half-and-half. That report was made by three Senators and three Members of the House, by the men who were appointed to investigate the fiscal relations between the two governments, and they unanimously said that the thing to do was to have the money collected by a reasonable assessment upon the property owners of the District of Columbia, a reasonable rate of taxation fixed, and that that should be paid into the Treasury, and that that should end the obligation of the people of the District of Columbia. Then if the Federal Government or Congress wanted to spend any amount of money the amount paid by the people of the District was at an end and the settlement was complete.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Is it not true that in 1878 when the half-and-half plan was adopted the District of Columbia was largely in debt, and that now since the special committee, of which the gentleman has spoken, has made its report to do away with the half-and-half the District of Columbia is not only out of debt but has a surplus?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; a moment ago I said there were $6,000,000 surplus.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I wanted to contrast the time when the half-and-half was established and the time when the committee reported.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Will the elimination of the half-and-half plan eliminate appropriations from the Federal Treasury to the amount of some $6,000,000?

Mr. SISSON. It would the first of the year. At this particular time it would be tantamount to writing off a charge against the Federal Government in favor of the District of Columbia of something like $6,000,000. In other words, the bill now carries something less than $15,000,000. Now, at this particular time when the Government of the United States is needing money, at a time when the United States Treasury is bleeding at every pore, it is a time when the District of Columbia should be willing to have this money written off the books, because when the District of Columbia was overwhelmed with debt the Federal Treasury came to its relief.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. CANNON. I want to see if I understand the situation. The half-and-half principle is the law.

Mr. SISSON. That is the law now.

Mr. CANNON. This House provision which is stricken out by the Senate, the Senate restoring the half-and-half provision, as provided by law, repeals the half-and-half provision.

Mr. SISSON. It repeals the half-and-half principle.

Mr. CANNON. And it is, therefore, legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the gentleman further, if the rule that has always been in force between the House and the Senate is not, where either body puts a rider upon an appropriation bill changing the law, for the House proposing the rider to recede in case of disagreement.

Mr. SISSON. That has usually been the custom, but it has not been a universal one, and there are many exceptions to it. Too many evils hide behind the rule. We must not recede here, because we are right.

Mr. CANNON. This money that my colleague says is for the credit of the District of Columbia, some $6,000,000——

Mr. SISSON. I am giving the round figures.

Mr. CANNON. Six million dollars in round numbers, it is anticipated, will at the end of the coming fiscal year amount to $8,000,000; but that is all in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And it can not be taken out of the Treasury of the United States until it is appropriated by Congress. The District of Columbia is powerless to get one dollar of it.

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. Without legislation by Congress. Is not that so?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. That being the case, it is subject to use, I apprehend, in the payment of any of the obligations of the Government. In other words, it is like all other money in the Treasury.

Mr. SISSON. That is true. It has gone into the Treasury like any other tax, except that there is a charge upon the Treasury books against the Government for that amount in favor of the District.

Mr. CANNON. But that is mere bookkeeping.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; but it is an indebtedness of the Federal Government, according to the contention—which I do not admit—of the attorneys of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well; after all, that is the contention of the attorneys of the District, but no one but Congress can get one dollar of that money out of the Treasury.

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. Is it not true that the House has already passed a joint resolution this morning, in which presumably the Senate will concur, which extends the appropriations during July unless they be otherwise provided for?

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. So that this bill might fail in the event the Senate agrees to the joint resolution and still the half-and-half principle that my friend criticizes after July would prevail.

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. That being the case, it is unthinkable that an irresistible force and an immovable body should meet on the 1st day of August and have another appropriation made extending or otherwise, so that if my friend will permit, the rule being that the body which proposes legislation on a general appropriation bill shall give way rather than not have the expenses of the Government paid according to existing law, does not my friend think, while it will not cost one dollar, whether the half-and-half principle is repealed at this time or not, so far as the taking of the money of the Treasury is concerned——

Mr. SISSON. Of course, I yielded to my friend for a question, not a statement.

Mr. CANNON. Does not my friend think it is the part of wisdom to agree to the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not think so. I decline to yield further.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. In a moment. I want to say to my friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the statement which he makes in reference to the July appropriation is exactly the truth, but is not true as to the amount carried in this bill. Of course, we propose that the District government shall be conducted, but the new activities provided for in the bill, the new increases of salary provided for in the bill, are matters which we have put into the bill, and which were put in because we felt, of course, that at this time those salaries were justified, will not be paid at all. If these benefits are denied the District the Senate will be to blame. We offer them a good bill—two-platoon system for our firemen; increase for our policemen in numbers and in salary; increase for schools and increase in their salaries; in fact, if the Senate does not want the bill which we send over to them, the District will fail to get the benefit of several millions of dollars.

Every man who has served upon this committee will bear me testimony that every time an item is suggested it is demanded, whether it is needed or not, by the District of Columbia to the full extent of the half which they pay. What is the result? The District Commissioners in making up the appropriation bill make it up, as the District Commissioners themselves testify, so as to come within a few hundred dollars of twice as much as was raised by taxation in the District of Columbia, thus encouraging all sorts of extravagance. It is not a question of whether it is fair; it is a question of whether half has been taken away; and they claim that the Federal Treasury should respond in like amount, and that is the lobby which is continuously going on; that is the atmosphere that surrounds every Congressman in every hotel around the entire District of Columbia. There is not a single member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations that would deny the District every dollar to which it is entitled. I believe that every member of the committee is as sincere as men can be in appropriating every dollar they need.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. In a moment. I want to say that the Senate of the United States ought to at least discuss it, so that the Members of the Senate might understand the principle involved. They ought to discuss it as we have discussed it. They ought to discuss it freely and openly. When we first began to discuss this in the House there were not many Members of the House who understood it. Now, the Membership of the House understands it, and on every occasion, by overwhelming votes, we have voted to abolish the half-and-half principle.

The custom is to wait until the last moment of the last days and the last hour before the matter comes to a vote, and we are then confronted with the proposition that the District of Columbia appropriation bill will fail unless the House shall recede. The House has yielded too often already. Now, we all hope that the Senate will not let this bill fail, but that the Senate will yield and give the District of Columbia the best bill they have ever had.

I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. I understood the gentleman from Mississippi to state, and I thoroughly agree to the statement, that at the end of the next fiscal year there would be to the credit of the District of Columbia in the Treasury about $8,000,000.

Mr. SISSON. That is the statement of the auditor.

Mr. CRISP. The District appropriation bill usually carries anywhere from $14,000,000 to $15,000,000?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. If $8,000,000 is to the credit of the District, is it not possible, and in fact is it not the logical conclusion of the half-and-half act, that in one year, or the next succeeding fiscal year, there could be appropriated under the half-and-half——

Mr. SISSON. Sixteen million dollars.

Mr. CRISP. Sixteen million dollars for the District of Columbia without levying 1 cent of taxes upon any property within the District of Columbia?

Mr. SISSON. That is true. If the Congress should at any time consider this fund, which is gradually piling up on account of the richness of the District of Columbia now as compared to it 30 years ago, if the Congress should ever concede that their contention was a correct one, then in one year the people of the District of Columbia would go without paying any taxes. Now, I decline to yield for the moment. In my judgment to further confer would be useless. We have for three times tried to discuss these differences, but our conference has amounted to nothing. The Senate of the United States ought to recede in fairness and in justice. I want to say this: You will not get a Senator to put in the RECORD a statement of facts on which he is willing to go before the country and say that for this reason he wants the half-and-half maintained. Your commission appointed on the part of the House could not find a reason why it should be maintained, although they had always voted for it, and so had the three Senate Members. Now, feeling that after so many votes in the House, and when our Senators and friends on the other side decline to discuss it, the House has but one thing to do, and that is adhere.

I want to state to the House I am your servant, I am representing your views as they have been expressed here on repeated roll calls and repeated votes, and therefore I have not felt it to be my duty to recede, but I felt it has been my duty not to recede, and felt it was my duty to take this course and ask your judgment and instruction. It will do no good to go back into conference. It ought to be settled at this time, it ought not to be permitted to continue on and on until millions shall have been piled up in the Treasury, and then they can come and make demands on the Federal Government for it. Surely the Senate will not let this bill die, but will pass it with these amendments left off.

Mr. SISSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield me some time?

Mr. SISSON. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. GILLETT. Three minutes.

Mr. SISSON. I will yield that time to the gentleman.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, after having listened to the impressive eloquence of the gentleman from Mississippi I am exceedingly surprised at his charge that the Senate conferees refused to listen and discuss with him this very old question. This is not a question, I believe, that can be enlightened here by anybody's discussion. In the House and Senate everybody knows what is the issue and have formed their opinion. Personally I am disposed to agree that the time has passed for the half-and-half system as equitable, but I do not think that this money that is piling up in the Treasury belongs necessarily all to the District. Congress can do with it as it pleases. But the issue is simply this: Shall we carry on this appropriation as it always has been carried on by the half-and-half system until some other system is adopted by the Government, or shall we have no District appropriation bill? The Senate says they will agree to no other District appropriation bill, and therefor the two bodies are up against each other, and if the gentleman's motion to adhere is adopted, why that means that the bill fails unless the Senate gives way. Now, the Senate will make the argument as they have year after year, that such a change as this is a change of law and should be made by a separate bill and not on an appropriation bill, and that is what has always been agreed to by both Houses. It comes up every year, and the House, which puts on an addition changing the law, is the House that has to yield, and so consequently this year the Senate, it seems to me, is standing on their rights, so that the House has got to yield. I do not think the House ought to adhere, and irrespective of the merits, and although I believe that the time has come to abandon the half-and-half, still it ought to be done on a separate bill rather than an appropriation bill, and we ought to yield on this issue. It seems to me that the Senate is within their rights in refusing to listen to a discussion of the matter with the gentleman from Mississippi, and they are within their rights in refusing to agree. Irrespective of the merits of this one proposition the only way that we can have a District appropriation bill is for the House to recede as it always has in the past, and I think it is the part of wisdom now for the House to recede if we want to wind up this bill, as it ought to have been wound up last week.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], a member of the committee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, assuming that all the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] says concerning the half-and-half proposition to be true, I am still of the opinion that the House should not insist upon its position. It is perfectly clear that the rider placed upon the original bill was made for the purpose of changing the taxing system of the District of Columbia. In all my experience, and I dare say in all the experience of the gentlemen present, never have we seen before, unless it be in this body, a scheme whereby an attempt is made to attach a plan for raising money to a bill for spending money. Suppose that each one of the appropriation bills introduced into this House also carried a rider providing the manner whereby the money to meet the appropriations should be raised. It would be just as logical for a rider to be attached to the fortification bill providing a scheme of taxation whereby the money to be appropriated should be raised as it is to take and append a rider upon this bill providing the manner in which the money shall be raised. The taxing plan is a proposition that should be considered entirely alone.

I admit, and have admitted every time this question has been up here for discussion, that the half-and-half plan possibly should be remedied; but it should be remedied when it can be considered upon its merits, and at no other time. It has no place upon this appropriation bill. And for that, and that alone, have I contended.

Now, we have had before us this morning and have passed a resolution extending the old appropriation for the period of one month. I say that that resolution, if it were tested to its uttermost, would be absolutely unconstitutional, for the reason that it does not only carry with it the appropriation of last year to meet the current expenses for this coming month, or one-twelfth of the appropriations, but it takes and provides that an additional sum may be expended, or provides for additional expenditures that were not carried in the last bill at all, and they do not make the amount that may be expended for this exigency certain at all. And there is a rule of law, absolutely incontrovertible, that appropriations must be certain, or that there must be language carried in reference to them that will make them certain.

Nobody can tell by this resolution how much money in addition to the appropriation of last year will have to be expended to meet the exigencies provided for in that resolution. It can not be made certain now. No one will test it. But suppose we fail to pass this District appropriation bill during this present month, a new resolution of this purport must come in to meet the emergency and continue throughout the whole year, perhaps.

What is the situation? We are contending here for a quibble, in my mind, and by so doing we are going to bring a very great injustice upon the District of Columbia. It is absolutely essential for some provision to be made to take care of the housing of the school children in the city of Washington. We need many school buildings here for that purpose. They could not be provided for, for various reasons suggested in the hearings, and collapsible buildings were provided in their stead, in order to meet the emergency. That is but one of the things that can not be provided for, if you please, unless this bill becomes a law in some shape or other. I point this out merely as a single example, to show the hardship that is going to be worked upon the District of Columbia, and the only excuse for it will be that we are holding here for a contention that has been of long standing. Admitting that it is right, it should be thrashed out upon its merits and not appended here. It simply looks to me that we are holding up the District of Columbia bill for the purpose of making the Senate knuckle to the demands of this House. I am in favor of standing by the proposition if it is a proposition of merit—and I dare say that it is—when it is brought before this House upon its merits, but I do not think that the House can afford to append a rider of this character to this bill when its only immediate result will bring so much of disorder and so much of injustice to the people of the District of Columbia. Therefore, I think it is proper for this House to recede from the attitude that the conferees are now taking, and that we concur in the report made by the Senate; and that the gentlemen, or some one of them, some one of this committee who had this thing in charge and made this investigation, and who were convinced, if you please, that this scheme is archaic and that some other scheme of taxation should be had, should introduce an independent measure here, so that it may become a law, and then they could not raise the objection on the Senate side that it was new law and ask us to recede because of the practice that the body that proposes new law to an appropriation bill of this character, when the other side does not consent, must recede. It will obviate a repetition of this thing in the future. It will not only save time and much wrangling, but it will settle this thing once and for all, and it will not be up here as a bone of contention with each appropriation bill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the tendency had been for a few years preceding the war for a half-and-half system to cure inequity, is it not a fact that since the beginning of the war private building has fallen off and public buildings have been put up in large numbers, and that the Government's holdings have increased largely since the war began?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is true; and that is one of the reasons why this change should not be had at this time.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And has it not grown more equitable since the war began?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is very true.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, it has just been stated that the House proposition relative to the half-and-half would change or affect the tax system in the District of Columbia. I can not very well see how that statement can be made. There is nothing in the proposition at all that changes or in any wise affects the tax system or even the tax rate.

Then it has been suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, who just spoke, that this money is in the Treasury and belongs to the United States. The history of the question is this: Back in the seventies a lot of public moneys in the District of Columbia were misappropriated. Congress undertook to have an accounting made, and provided in the act that nobody residing in the District of Columbia should be one of those accountants. It did not believe it could get a fair accounting without so providing, and at that time the District of Columbia had a treasurer. Congress by deliberate act did away with the treasurer of the District of Columbia, and provided that thereafter all District money should be deposited in the Treasury of the United States. So District moneys gathered by taxation are deposited in the Treasury of the United States for safekeeping. I do not believe when the time comes to take this $6,000,000 or $8,000,000—whichever it may be—and appropriate it to the United States that it will be done. Then it will be contended that that money was taken from the local people by taxation; that it is their money; and that it ought to be theirs. But to permit the old law to stand, one that was enacted when the District of Columbia was heels over head in debt, should continue when the District of Columbia has a surplus in hand, is to me totally untenable.

The surplus that is in the Treasury of the United States for safekeeping is there as a trust fund for the District of Columbia. Simply because Congress in its wisdom years ago did away with the treasurer for the District of Columbia is the only reason why it is there. To say that the United States should continue to match dollar for dollar with tax money collected in the District of Columbia, when the District of Columbia has no need for it, and because of that it is building up a surplus, is preposterous. Why the United States should continue to contribute more than is needed for the support of the District of Columbia I can not understand.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important measure, and the arguments on it, I think, ought to be heard, and this question ought to be settled here to-day. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present, and the gentleman from Mississippi moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this vote 288 Members, a quorum, have answered to their names.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, the present status of the matter now under consideration is that the chairman of the committee having in charge this appropriation bill has asked that the House adhere to the House provision in effect abolishing the application of the half-and-half contribution. To that a motion has been made to recede from the House provision and concur in the Senate amendment.

I rise to oppose the recession and to advocate the adherence to the House provision.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I think that the position taken by the conferees of the House is a necessary position for the thorough understanding of the question at issue. There has come from no one who has taken part in the debate on this question to-day or in the days past an assertion that the half-and-half contribution is necessary. The minority leader [Mr. GILLETT] just a few moments ago said that he is prepared to say that the half-and-half contribution is no longer necessary in the District of Columbia. Nobody contends that it is necessary in the District of Columbia. It is not necessary. It is entirely unnecessary, and simply results in the accumulation of a lot of money which is credited on paper to the District of Columbia and against the Government of the United States.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Is it any more than fair—inasmuch as the gentleman quoted me in saying that, carrying the impression that I was in favor of the Senate amendment—that the gentleman should say that I am in favor of the Senate amendment and in favor of receding from the position of the House on this question? Of course I said that, but I said at the same time that I thought we ought to recede and concur.

Mr. GARD. Of course, I understand the position that the gentleman has taken. I merely stated that the minority leader and everyone who has had this matter under consideration joins in the statement that the half-and-half principle is no longer necessary to be applied in the matter of revenues for the District of Columbia and its care through the General Government. Since I have been in Congress Mr. Fitzgerald, Mr. Page, Mr. SISSON, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. SHERLEY have all joined in the expression that the half-and-half principle is no longer necessary and that the plan proposed in the amendment is the proper one.

Now, the criticism is made that it abolishes a system of taxation. It does not abolish a system of taxation. If the provision which the House has adopted and for which the House conferees contend is to be adhered to, it means that not a single extra penny of taxation will be levied upon any property in the District of Columbia. It means that identically the same system of taxation that we are now operating under with respect to the government of the District will be maintained, and nothing added. It simply means that instead of the appropriation providing that it shall be paid one-half from the District revenues and one-half from the revenues of the General Government, the common-sense rule in the application of all taxes shall be made, and that is that the taxes raised in the District of Columbia shall be applied for the government of the District of Columbia, and that everything necessary for proper government over and above the amount raised by taxation in the District of Columbia shall be added by the General Government. Now, I submit that there is no one here present or in any other body present who can argue that this is not a proper scheme of taxation, because it is the scheme applied in all our homes, and this general plan will operate for every proper benefit to the District of Columbia and its residents. So when we are considering the reasons why this amendment should be adhered to, I say that it is agreed to by everybody upon both sides of this floor who has spoken that it is no longer necessary as a political or economical measure; secondly, that there is no increase in taxation; third, that there is no change in the system of taxation, because the same system of taxation under which the District of Columbia is now working will be continued.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I had not intended to say anything on this motion. My very distinguished friend [Mr. CANNON], the ex-Speaker, stated that it is customary when legislation is put on an appropriation bill for the House proposing the legislation to recede if the two Houses can not agree. That is true, as a rule, but every rule has its exceptions, and there have been exceptions to this rule.

This is not a new matter before this House. It is not a rushed matter. The parties interested have had a full hearing before a joint commission appointed for that purpose, and that commission has reported unanimously against this system. Three times the House has passed a provision of law abrogating the half-and-half principle, on the idea that it was no longer necessary, and the other legislative body, acting purely within its right, has seen fit to refuse to concur in that action. I have no criticism whatever to make of the Senate. Now, the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi brings the matter to a head. It means no disrespect to the other legislative body. It is simply notice to the other coordinate body that this House has considered and weighed this proposition carefully, has passed it three times, and is determined to stand by its action or let the bill fail.

The only argument I have heard proposed by anyone who is opposing the abrogation of the half-and-half principle is that it leaves the District of Columbia without any plan of taxation to take the place of the half-and-half. Gentlemen, that position is untenable. If this amendment passes, it in no wise leaves the District without a taxable plan. It in no wise adds one cent of tax burden to the people of the District. They will pay exactly the same taxes if this amendment prevails that they pay to-day, and there is no city of approximately the same size anywhere in the United States that pays as low a rate of taxation. There is a tax rate here of $1.50 per $100 on real estate assessed at two-thirds of its value, which means a tax rate of $1 a hundred on the value of real estate. You recognize that there is no county or State tax here, but this one tax alone prevails. Now, on intangible personal property there is a low tax rate of three-tenths of 1 per cent, and everyone is given an exemption in the neighborhood of $1,000 on household and kitchen furniture. I have no complaint to make because the tax rate is low. If we can conduct the affairs of the government of the District and give its citizens a low tax rate, I am in favor of it; and if this amendment prevails, it will in no wise increase the tax burden of the people of the District. It will simply mean that they will continue to pay the same taxes that they are now paying, that these taxes will be expended for the District, and Congress will yearly appropriate out of the Federal Treasury whatever money beyond that is necessary. That is the whole case. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I think I have three or four minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes.

Mr. SISSON. I should like to accommodate the gentleman from Illinois. I yield him three minutes of my remaining time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I think that is time enough. This is perfectly plain and simple. It is a proposition to legislate on an appropriation bill. In order to legislate the two Houses must agree. Now, this is a proposal to let this bill fail unless the Senate agree to the legislation. Gentlemen discuss about the merits of it. I am not discussing the merits. If we set this precedent, perchance the Senate will send a bill back to us and say, "This bill will fail unless you agree to the rider changing the law." The best way is to observe the customs between the two Houses. I might feel differently about it, and I presume the Senate might feel differently about it, if this was a plain legislative proposition without appropriations, but this is an appropriation bill.

Gentlemen say taxation can not be changed. It can be changed. We have plenary power to double or treble the taxation in the District of Columbia, provided the Senate and the House pass the bill and the President approves it.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Of course I agree readily that Congress can change the tax rate. I simply contended that if you adopt this amendment it does not change the tax rate within the District.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely not. Nor if you adopt this amendment does it take away from Congress the power to let this money remain in the Treasury. It takes legislation to take it out, and the District gets nothing by it. It is there.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the District receive any income from this fund?

Mr. CANNON. Not a cent.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Then it is a mere matter of bookkeeping?

Mr. CANNON. It is a mere matter of bookkeeping; and I would not have opened my mouth about it if the motion had not been made to adhere and let the bill fail in the event that the Senate did not agree to the legislation proposed by the House; but I do not want to set a precedent, so that the Senate could plead this in justification if they should put on an appropriation bill some legislation changing existing law, and then say, "If you do not agree to it, we will stop the wheels of Government in whole or in part." [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Illinois use his three minutes?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman used all the time he had.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, in the two minutes remaining I want to say that the District of Columbia will not suffer, because in addition to the streets provided for in the deficiency bill there was appropriated last year $315,000. This is carried in the concurrent resolution. Now, the reason they did not spend the money during the last year or the last months was because they could not spend it; they could not get the material, they could not get the labor. So much for that. Shall we continue from year to year to be thus thwarted in that which is just, in that which is right, in that which is fair, a proposition which this House has many times passed by overwhelming votes and a matter which has never been voted on in the Senate but once, and that after a short discussion; and then when they found they were likely to be defeated they came back to the House and asked that this commission be appointed. Mr. UNDERWOOD made the motion to appoint the commission. The Speaker appointed the commission, men who, every one of them, voted for the half and half, and the Senate did the same thing. That commission reported that the provision in this bill was fair and just and ought to be carried. I do not believe that the Senate is going to let this bill fail. It is one of the best bills that was ever passed, so far as this District is concerned. I do not believe that they are going to let the bill fail if the House will stand for that which is just, for that which is right, and for that which is fair. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The vote will be taken on the preferential motion made by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 1 and concur in the same.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAKER) there were—ayes 64, noes 84.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California makes the point of no quorum. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 128, nays 167, answered "present" 2, not voting 133, as follows:

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. TALBOTT. I voted "aye." I withdraw that vote and answer "present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

CORRECTION.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have a correction made in the RECORD and in the Journal. Yesterday on roll call No. 198, the vote upon the so-called Borland amendment, I am recorded, as appears in the RECORD, as having voted "yea" to pass the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the objection of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding. As a matter of fact, I was not present at the time that vote was taken. I was at the navy yard, but if I had been present I would have voted nay, as I have already twice voted against the so-called Borland amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made in the Journal and in the RECORD in accordance with the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

There was no objection.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I take it the question now is upon my motion to adhere.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would think that a motion to recede and concur having been voted down would make a vote upon the gentleman's motion unnecessary.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will indulge me for a moment, I think undoubtedly the voting down of the motion to concur is tantamount to insistance, but it is not tantamount to the gentleman's motion to adhere.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Georgia is correct, upon reflection. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to adhere to the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment No. 1.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, there are two other amendments, but I suppose there will be no controversy about those. I ask that the vote be taken upon those two amendments.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman make?

Mr. SISSON. I move to adhere as to the other two amendments—61 and 83.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask if it is not in order to amend the motion of the gentleman to adhere by moving as a substitute therefor that the House further insist upon the two amendments; and if so, I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is in order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to those other two matters going back into conference, but the Keller matter is one which I am sure not a single Member of the House will agree to. No Member of the House has ever agreed to it. In the Keller matter the courts in a condemnation proceeding in a perfectly regular way condemned some of Mr. Keller's property for street purposes. He went into court and contested the first award, and the courts decided the issue against him. Mr. Keller then paid the award and did not appeal. He does not come now and ask that he be given back the amount of money, six or seven hundred dollars, but he is asking now for an appropriation of, I think, $3,800, and the House has not for one moment offered to entertain the idea of paying him, because if we do it opens up at least a thousand cases, so I am informed by District officials, that are on all fours with this, and they do not know just where the thing would end. The other amendment is an amendment where the Senate seeks to repeal the law in reference to the playgrounds in the District of Columbia. When the playgrounds were created in the District it was provided that all of the expenses of the playground association should be paid out of the District treasury, and your conferees have insisted that that money should be paid, as heretofore paid, wholly out of the District funds. Those are the two items.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my motion to further insist.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws his motion, and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to adhere to the disagreement of the House to Senate amendments numbered 61 and 83.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SISSON, motions to reconsider the votes by which the House agreed to adhere on the disagreement of the House to Senate amendments numbered 1, 61, and 83 were laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. LONERGAN for the balance of the week, on account of important business.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF TELEGRAPH COMPANIES, ETC.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, by authority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I move to reconsider the action of the House in the rereference of House joint resolution 309, to insure the continuous operation of the electrical communicating systems, to guard the secrecy of war dispatches, and to prevent communications between public enemies, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the motion.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to make a statement before any action is taken.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. SIMS. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to have coupled with that a request that I may proceed also for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio hitches onto that proposition that he shall have five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, it is understood, of course, that the point of order against the motion is pending while this debate is going on.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Why not dispose of the point of order now?

The SPEAKER. That is correct. If the point of order is going to be made, it better be made now.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that, under clause 2, Rule XVIII, this motion is not in order. Clause 2 of Rule XVIII provides:

No bill, petition, memorial, or resolution referred to a committee or reported therefrom for printing and recommitment shall be brought back into the House on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. SIMS. This is a motion for a rereference.

The SPEAKER. Unless the gentleman wants to be heard, the Chair is ready to rule and overrules the point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Has the question of unanimous consent for five minutes on a side been acted upon?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that this is not privileged.

Mr. SIMS. Nobody said it was——

The SPEAKER. Of course, it is privileged; he has a right to file at any time within two days.

Mr. GILLETT. But the Chair I am sure would not rule that a Member can get up at any time, at any hour of the day, and take it up at any time during the day.

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair would not rule anything of the sort. If there is something else of higher privilege, that would be taken up.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me the time to take it up is immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will hear me on the question raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I wish to direct the attention of the Chair to the precedents. Under Rule XVIII, clause 1, which relates to reconsiderations and the order in which they may be considered, I find this note:

When it—

Referring to the motion to reconsider—relates to a bill belonging to a particular class of business, consideration of the motion is in order only when that class of business is in order. (Citing Vol. V, Precedents, 5677-5681.)

Of course, Mr. Speaker, this is not the proper time, under the order of business of the House, to consider the rereference of bills. I do not question but what to-morrow the gentleman could be recognized to enter a motion to reconsider; but the business on the Speaker's table having been taken up and considered, we are not now in the position to consider even a motion to reconsider under the precedents to which I have just called attention.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I did not catch clearly the reading of the precedent, there was so much confusion about me; but what the gentleman from Tennessee is proposing to do now, as I understand, is to enter a motion to reconsider.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the very question, whether it can be entered at this time. It could undoubtedly have been entered immediately following the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio, but as intervening business has taken place, that under the rules of the House and order of business, the business on the Speaker's table, such as conference reports, disposition of conference reports, and so forth, has taken place, the gentleman is not at present privileged to enter a motion to reconsider. After he enters it, then it is his privilege to take it up at any time; but he has not under this precedent the privilege of even entering it at this moment. He can not rise at this time, because it is not the regular order of business——

Mr. SIMS. I have been recognized.

The SPEAKER. In the very nature of things a motion to reconsider is not made part of the order of business. If the House was not in a hurry, the Chair would be glad to hear gentlemen on both sides of this question, but he has his mind made up and might as well make the decision:

When a motion has been made and carried or lost, it shall be in order for any Member of the majority, on the same or succeeding day, to move for the reconsideration thereof, and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions except the consideration of a conference report or a motion to adjourn, and shall not be withdrawn after the said succeeding day without the consent of the House, and thereafter any Member may call it up for consideration—

And so forth.

That is Rule XVIII in reference to reconsideration, and while it may not be in these precedents—I do not know whether it is or not—the Chair remembers very distinctly that Mr. Speaker CANNON ruled the same way as the Chair is going to rule, that this is in order, on a motion made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] here once.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand it is the privilege of the gentleman not only to enter a motion at the present time but to have it considered at the present time?

The SPEAKER. If there is no conference report, if there is no gentleman who wishes to offer a conference report ready here, the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to direct the attention of the Chair to paragraph 5677, Hinds' Precedents, which is as follows:

When a motion to reconsider relates to a bill belonging to a particular class of business—

And I assume this applies to a class of business which is only in order immediately following the Journal—the consideration of the motion is in order only when that class of business is in order.

The SPEAKER. Why, this rule I read here is clear as crystal.

Mr. STAFFORD. These precedents are interpreting that rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows, but the rule has precedence and importance over any judgment of any Speaker or anybody else.

Mr. SIMS. Has unanimous consent been granted for five minutes on a side?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to giving the gentleman from Tennessee five minutes and the gentleman from Ohio five minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, on the 27th this resolution——

Mr. MADDEN. Of what?

Mr. SIMS. Twenty-seventh of June, this resolution was introduced and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, but I as chairman did not see it until on the morning of the 28th. I saw it was an important resolution. I knew that a recess was contemplated and that there was a great deal of important business to be transacted before the 1st of July with reference to appropriation bills and conference reports. Therefore I sent a copy of the resolution with a letter to the Secretary of War, to the Secretary of the Navy, the Postmaster General, and the President of the United States, and asked each of them specifically to make comment as to its desirability of passage or any opposition that either might have to the passage of the resolution. I immediately received letters from all of them indorsing the resolution and immediate action in respect to its passage.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for one question? Now, if this was so important why did not the President of the United States indicate that fact to the Congress——

Mr. SIMS. He did; I am part of it as chairman of the committee.

Mr. MADDEN (continuing). Without anybody asking it?

Mr. SIMS. I referred the resolution for information and got it. I then called the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce together, and we considered the resolution on Saturday very fully, and upon order of the committee a hearing was set for to-day at 10.30, and I was directed by a resolution of the committee to ask said Secretaries to come or send some one to represent them.

They all came. The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Postmaster General have testified before the committee to-day. We were in session at the very moment this unanimous-consent request was made, and not a member of the committee was on the floor of the House. We are ready to act, as the hearings are closed. It was a proper reference in the first place. It is a question touching the interstate commercial facilities of this country as to the telegraph and telephone service. The object of the proposed taking over is due to war conditions, but its operation will not be exclusively military. The resolution is not to take over, but simply authorizes the President to exercise such power if he shall determine the necessity exists. The committee has done its duty. I have no reflection to make upon the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] or on his committee. Now, in order to get prompt action on this resolution, it ought not to be referred to any other committee, as we have considered it and are ready to act on it. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], who is a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Two minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

Mr. ESCH. The matters relating to telegraph and telephone and wireless and cable systems have always been in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The war emergency should not change that jurisdiction. There is no more reason why the Committee on Military Affairs should take jurisdiction of this bill, which relates also to the Post Office and to the Navy Departments, than that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and on Naval Affairs should take jurisdiction. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce should have and retain jurisdiction of a measure that relates to communication by telegraph, telephone, cable, wireless, or by any other means. We have already assumed that jurisdiction. We have had hearings thereon. We are perhaps about ready to report. There is no reason why there should be a change of reference. The motion would not have prevailed, I believe, in this House had a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce been present when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] made his motion for reference. Because we were in committee engaged in hearings on this very resolution, we were not able to protect the rights of our committee.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I wish to say that the act regulating radio communication was from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and if this bill relates to that subject should it not go to that committee?

Mr. ESCH. The radio communication is so inconsequential a part of the total amount of communication covered by this resolution that I think the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce should retain jurisdiction over it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Under the radio act the Government has already exercised complete power over radio telegraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, all that has been said upon this subject is interesting, but it is not important. It has no relevancy to the question before the House. Here is a proposition that is most sweeping—to take over in time of war private property. Now, a bill authorizing the taking over of the telegraph and telephones has been pending in the Committee on Military Affairs since June 4, introduced by a member of that committee, referred without objection to that committee, and we are now awaiting a report in writing from the Secretary of War.

Private property can not be seized, even in time of war, except as a war measure. This joint resolution that has been rushed through here and rushed into this Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce proposes to take these properties without first providing for compensation. And it is not a matter that pertains to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at all. It pertains to our committee. The original bill was drawn by a member of our committee, introduced into this House, as I have said, and referred to our committee without objection, where it is now pending. Our committee has been very busily engaged——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit one question?

Mr. GORDON. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman says they are proposing to take this property without compensation. Does not the resolution specifically provide that it shall be taken upon the same terms practically on which the Government took the railroad systems?

Mr. GORDON. And, of course, that bill to take the railroads came from our committee, as a matter of fact and history. The Committee on Military Affairs on the 29th of August——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just on the question of compensation.

Mr. GORDON. That is not in either of these bills.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman touched on it a little while ago.

Mr. GORDON. I decline to yield.

This rests exactly upon the same legal proposition and basis that the railroads do. The authority under which the President took over the railroads is contained in a bill reported to this House by the Committee on Military Affairs and which was signed by the President on August 29, 1916. Now, when you come to providing for pay for the railroads, their compensation and for their use and occupation, very properly a bill providing for that and providing facilities for the civil population, was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. And when we get ready to pay for the use of these telephone and telegraph lines and to provide for their uses and their accommodation to the public, that bill will also be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, just exactly as the railroad bill was. But the authority to take these properties, to seize them, and to take them by the Government, is purely and distinctly a war measure. Nobody pretends that you have a right to go around here indiscriminately and take property without compensation. You must first make compensation before you can take private property, under the fifth amendment to the Constitution, except under the great exigency of war, which now exists, and it is absolutely and entirely because of that great exigency that it is proposed to confer this great power.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under that reasoning, why should not the shipping bill and the espionage act have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. GORDON. That is not the question at all. Those bills did not propose to seize private property.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the shipping act it was done.

Mr. GORDON. Certainly not.

Mr. DECKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes; what do you want?

Mr. DECKER. Does the gentleman contend that this contemplates the seizure of property that is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Military Committee?

Mr. GORDON. Not necessarily. But I say this resolution is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, just exactly as that conferring authority to take over the railroads was in the exclusive jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was not that a rider to the Army appropriation bill and put on as a matter of precaution? If originally a bill had been introduced to take over the railroads that would have gone to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce instead of to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GORDON. Not unless it had been previously provided for by law. Nobody ever attempted to authorize the Commander in Chief to go and seize private property except through authority of law reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. That is the exclusive committee in this House that is authorized to report pure and simple war legislation of that character.

Mr. BARKLEY. We did that in the case of the alien-property act, which authorizes the seizure of property. That bill was reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, instead of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GORDON. That was merely for a trusteeship for property of alien enemies. It did not propose to appropriate the property or the use of it. This bill is simply to appropriate the use of telegraph and telephone systems for the period of the war. This resolution applies to matters within the sole jurisdiction of our committee. The motion to reconsider should be voted down.

Mr. DECKER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. DECKER. To ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is going to get consent to speak, I will insist that people on this side shall have the right to speak?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] on that side be given five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I object to the gentleman designating the person on this side who is to speak.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] to reconsider the vote whereby House joint resolution No. 309 was taken from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DYER. I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DENISON. If the yeas and nays are not demanded now, can they be demanded after a standing vote is had?

The SPEAKER. Of course. Eight gentlemen have risen in favor of taking the vote by yeas and nays, not a sufficient number. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BARKLEY. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 83.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. GORDON. The Chair just did count.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no. That is not a count to see if there is a quorum. Half of them may not have stood up. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-one gentlemen are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of reconsideration will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 187, nays 107, answered "present" 1, not voting 135, as follows:

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The House determines to reconsider. The question is on the motion to take this resolution away from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and rerefer it to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I understood that the motion was to take this resolution from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced it the way he heard it.

Mr. SIMS. I demand a division.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The motion to reconsider having prevailed, the question is now, I respectfully submit, on the original motion made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is to take it from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. That is precisely the way the Chair announced it. The question is on the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio to take this joint resolution, 309, away from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and rerefer it to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The question being taken, Mr. GORDON demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 96.

Accordingly the motion of Mr. GORDON was rejected.

FORTIFICATIONS.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on H. R. 12541, the fortifications appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 12541) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report, the rule about printing to the contrary notwithstanding. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement of the House conferees are as follows:

WM. P. BORLAND,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, this conference report represents a complete agreement of the conferees. In fact, there was no amendment of the Senate to any of the major items of the bill. The House will observe that the amendments of the Senate, with the exception of an addition to the proving-ground facilities, relate entirely to our insular possessions.

I do not think there are any items in the statement that require explanation, but I do want to make a brief statement in regard to the so-called Bannerman guns.

When the bill was under debate before the House I made the statement that Mr. Bannerman, of New York, had offered to the Government, or had undertaken to sell to the Government at a price of $15,000 per gun, some thirty 6-inch naval guns of an obsolete pattern; that these guns had cost originally the manufacturer about $6,000 apiece; that similar guns had been offered to the Army by the Navy at $5,000 apiece; and that Mr. Bannerman had acquired the guns, some of them for about $78 apiece and others at a price a little less than $200 apiece; and I denounced that offer of Mr. Bannerman's as an instance of profiteering. Since that time Mr. Bannerman's counsel, a gentleman by the name of Richards, has called upon me, and he insists that Mr. Bannerman made no such offer to the Government. I want to do Mr. Bannerman the full justice of stating to the House exactly what he has brought to my knowledge since then. Mr. Bannerman contends through his representative that he at no time made any specific offer of these guns prior to the hearings before the Committee on Fortifications. The statement is that on April 26, 1917, soon after the declaration of war, Mr. Bannerman, being a dealer in naval and military supplies and having a large quantity of such supplies on hand, including some rifles, cartridges, naval guns, and other material, sent his catalogue to the War Department with the request that they select what material they chose to purchase, and they did select some knapsacks and other material, but not these guns. He further contends that his catalogue listed these guns at $5,000 apiece for certain of the guns that were unmounted, and $7,500 apiece for certain of the guns that were mounted, and that that was the only offer he made at any time to the Government prior to the hearings before our committee; but that since the hearings before our committee an offer has been made to him by the officers of the Government of $5,000 apiece for his guns. He also contends that he had an offer from the Republic of Cuba of $5,000 for a part of the guns and of $7,500 for certain other of the guns, and that that offer could not be accepted on account of the war regulations of our own Government. Now, I want to do Mr. Bannerman the justice to place before the House his declaration that he made no offer of $15,000 apiece, and I want to go further and in the interest of fairness to say that there was no testimony before our committee as to whether he did or did not make any such offer, except the fact that an estimate was put in for $15,000 apiece for these guns. That an estimate was put in at that price for these identical guns is not denied. I am still at a loss to understand how that estimate could have originated except under an offer from the owner of the guns. But inasmuch as Mr. Bannerman shows by record correspondence that his offer was confined to the price in his catalogue, I am very glad indeed to give him the credit of this public statement.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX. That leaves the matter in my mind very much in doubt yet. If Mr. Bannerman did not make this offer to the Government to sell these guns at $15,000 apiece, then what man in the War Department made that estimate of $15,000 apiece for these guns?

Mr. BORLAND. There is absolutely no evidence yet as to who make that estimate and no explanation of it. As I understand the functions of the Appropriations Committee, we are not an investigating committee. It is not our province to hold investigations into all the various interesting side lines that come before the committee. We are a committee that deals with live topics and must decide on appropriations of public money. If the evidence does not justify us as to the wisdom and propriety of the appropriations, it is our duty to deny them without pursuing endless investigations. I am firmly of the opinion that in this case evidence ought to be introduced as to where the estimates came from and who is responsible before we make appropriations for these guns.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman taken up, by witnesses or correspondence, the matter of finding out who it was that made the estimates?

Mr. BORLAND. Only to this extent: The gentleman in charge of this department is Col. Hughes. He told me that the matter did not originate with him, but with a younger officer who he said had afterwards been ordered into active duty.

Mr. COX. Who was this younger officer?

Mr. BORLAND. He did not give me the name, and I did not inquire. Col. Hughes is the responsible head of the department. He has been informed that the committee will not authorize the purchase of these guns unless there is a proposition which meets the views of the committee.

Mr. COX. If no one else does it I propose to introduce a resolution to find out who it was that made up the estimates.

Mr. BORLAND. I think the gentleman will be within his rights.

Mr. COX. Undoubtedly; it looks as if there had been an attempt at profiteering between the officer and Mr. Bannerman. It looks as if there was something shrouded in mystery.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. On page 315 of the hearings it is stated that these guns, including those that came from the Navy to the Army, were worth $15,000 apiece, but he put in an estimate for the whole lot, not only Mr. Bannerman's guns but all the rest. It looks as if the Navy was trying to get $15,000 for its guns, and in order to make good they put Mr. Bannerman's guns in with them.

Mr. BORLAND. I stated that the estimates included 77 guns, and they were listed at $15,000 each in the estimates. It appeared in the hearings that 47 guns were turned over from the Navy and 30 guns from Mr. Bannerman, all being listed at $15,000. When the Chief of the Ordnance of the Navy was called before the committee he stated that he had estimated the 47 guns he was furnishing at $5,000, and on my calling his attention to the discrepancy he said that the estimate of $15,000 for 47 naval guns had not originated with him and he had made no estimate of $15,000, but an estimate of $5,000 only. Mr. Bannerman says that he made no estimate of $15,000, and that his only estimate was $5,000. At the instance of my good friend from New York I will do Mr. Bannerman the credit of saying that his statement is borne out by the record correspondence that he made and the offer by catalogue of $5,000.

Mr. PLATT. I think the statement of the gentleman from Missouri is fair and just. Gen. Dickson estimated them all at $15,000, although the naval ordnance officer says they were $5,000.

Mr. BORLAND. Some one in the Ordnance Department made a gross error.

Mr. PLATT. It might have been a clerical error.

Mr. BORLAND. I hardly think it was a clerical error, because the amount checked up 77 guns at $15,000 each.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Has the Government acquired the guns?

Mr. BORLAND. The Government has acquired the guns. As soon as I discovered the discrepancy in price I took steps to see that the Government got the guns, because it was important that the Government should have them. They are available for land purposes, although they might be obsolete for use at sea. There was a controversy about the price. We wanted the guns then if we wanted them at all. I took steps to see that the Army got the guns. We took them, and they are under possession of the United States at The Bronx. They have not been removed from Mr. Bannerman's place. The proper notification was sent to the export board that no export license be issued for the guns. So they can not be sold. The only question in controversy is the question of price, which will be adjusted, I have no doubt.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I read a newspaper account of this transaction with reference to Mr. Bannerman's guns. Had the guns been discarded by the Government some time previously and sold to Mr. Bannerman; and if so, what profit did Mr. Bannerman make on the transaction?

Mr. BORLAND. The guns were taken off certain cruisers known as the Newark type. They are 6-inch guns, 30-caliber length, short range, and no longer available for use in the American Navy, because they are too short range. They were discarded as obsolete guns and were sold as scrap steel to Mr. Bannerman in 1913, a year and a half before the outbreak of the war in Europe. Eighteen guns were sold to Mr. Bannerman and the remaining 12 guns to Lewis Bros., Pittsburgh. These guns were sold at scrap-steel prices or perhaps a little better. Undoubtedly Mr. Bannerman bought them for purposes of selling them to some Latin-American country, or some country, whichever paid the best price for them. How long he would have to hold them would be problematical. He claims that in April, 1917, when war broke out, he had on hand those guns, a large number of cartridges, muskets, and other military stores at his place in New York. There was some doubt as to whether he ought to have this material, as a temptation to evilly disposed persons who might want to seize them. Finally they were taken in charge by officers of the Navy, and since this controversy the officers of the Navy have turned them over to the officers of the Army, and they are now under control of certain guards.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would like to ask one more question. What is the difference in the price received by the Government and the price paid by the Government for the guns?

Mr. BORLAND. For 18 of them he paid a little less than $1,500 and for the other 12 a little over $2,400.

Mr. KNUTSON. What did we pay?

Mr. BORLAND. That makes approximately $3,900 that the Government received for the 30 guns, and it appeared to the committee like he was asking $450,000. That was the estimate put on them before us.

Mr. KNUTSON. He wants to make 1,000 per cent.

Mr. BORLAND. That is what it appears, but he denied that. He says he wanted only $150,000.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It appears that these guns were at one time sold because they were useless. Is the gentleman's committee satisfied that we have got guns now that are going to be effective in this war, or have we purchased the guns again that are practically obsolete and inefficient for this war?

Mr. BORLAND. The evidence was conclusive before us that these guns, while obsolete for naval purposes on account of their short range, were not useless guns, were not worn-out guns, but were serviceable guns. The only objection to them was the shortness of range, which made them unavailable for naval purposes, but they were said to be extremely available for use on land, because the short-range guns would be just as useful in throwing a high-explosive shell on land as a longer-range gun.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Are these 6-inch guns similar to those that we have mounted on improvised mounts at Newport News ready for shipment?

Mr. BORLAND. I could not say.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I want to ask this question, why these guns were ever disposed of as junk? It appears they were all the while suitable for field purposes in the Army, though not suitable for the Navy. That being so, why did not the Navy turn them over to the Army instead of disposing of them as junk?

Mr. BORLAND. I am not an expert, but it seems to me that the gentleman's inquiry opens up a question of policy that is legislative in its character, not belonging to the Appropriation Committee, but a very broad one. Undoubtedly those guns, although short-range guns, would have been available for coast-defense purposes to repel landing parties at short range. They might also have been available for other purposes in connection with the Army, and just exactly why we have permitted these guns to be condemned and disposed of as obsolete simply because they do not happen to fit into a particular policy of the Navy at the moment is perhaps a question that we ought to answer; but that is a legislative question, I take it, for this House to dispose of. We seem to have permitted it to be done right along.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman from Missouri has repeatedly made the statement that these guns were short-range guns and therefore obsolete in the Navy. That statement, perhaps, is true, and a correct statement when speaking of naval guns, but it is not a correct statement to make when thinking of field guns for the Army, for these would be long-range guns in the Army and would shoot much farther than our 3-inch guns or many of the guns that we use in the field. For the Army they would be long-range guns.

Mr. BORLAND. I think the gentleman's statement is pertinent. That is the reason why the guns are being acquired at this time; but the gentleman is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs and, I take it, could have brought in the necessary legislation and I hope will do so.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. The gentleman says we have taken these guns over. At what price?

Mr. BORLAND. No price has been agreed upon. It seems that an attempt was made by some officer to agree upon a price, but having no authority the matter went over. No appropriation has been made. We are waiting for an offer from Mr. Bannerman. If no satisfactory offer is made the guns will be commandeered.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield some time to me?

Mr. BORLAND. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. GOOD. Five or eight minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, in another body, which the rules of the House forbid me to name, the statement was made a couple of days ago by a very distinguished gentleman that the correspondence in the matter of the sale by the Navy and the purchase by Mr. Bannerman of thirty 6-inch guns was a mixture of tragedy and comedy. I admit that the correspondence shows a tragedy, but where the comedy comes in I am at a loss to know. It may be a comedy to some for the United States Navy to sell thirty 6-inch guns for $3,902.94 to an individual and for that individual to sell them back to the Government for $450,000, but it is not a comedy to the taxpayers and the purchasers of Government bonds. To them such action is a real tragedy. What are the facts with regard to these guns? I am aware of the fact a statement is made here that Mr. Bannerman has been greatly injured by disclosures in Congress. That he is greatly wrought up because he has been denounced as a profiteer I presume is true, but I want to make inquiry right now as to how much profit a man can make on things that he buys from the Government and sells back to the Government and still escape the charge of profiteering. In this case the record shows that the Navy sold these thirty 6-inch guns for $3,902.94. Mr. Bannerman purchased 18 directly from the Government and 12 from Luria Bros. So it is safe to assume that the 30 guns cost Mr. Bannerman something in excess of $3,902.94. Mr. Bannerman says that he offered to sell the guns back to the Government that were mounted at $7,500 each, and those that were not mounted at $5,000. Suppose they were all mounted, then he wanted $225,000 for guns which the United States Navy sold for less than $4,000. Suppose none of them were mounted, then he asks the Government $150,000 for guns that the Government had sold for $3,902.94. But in this connection it is fair to say that Mr. Bannerman made at the outset a very liberal and patriotic offer to the Government, an offer which should have been accepted by the Secretary of War. I quote the following from Mr. Bannerman's letter:

Upon the entrance of the United States into the war I was prepared to give the Government the benefit of anything that I had that could be of any service in the war. I saw Col. Mitcham, commanding officer of the New York Arsenal, and told him that the Government was welcome to anything I had on any terms that they saw fit to make. He said that he was not in a position to tell me what was needed, but advised me to send lists of my stock to the various Government departments. I thereupon prepared lists as suggested and sent them to the various Government departments. The lists included the 30 cannon now in question. In a letter to the Quartermaster General of April 11, 1917, I said: "If your department can use any of these items, the prices will be arranged to your satisfaction." The replies which I received from these departments were to the effect that they were not interested in any of my stock, with the exception of certain haversacks.

Just think of it! The Secretary of War was offered these guns by Mr. Bannerman at the time we entered the war at the Government's price. He wrote:

If your department can use any of these items, the prices will be arranged to your satisfaction.

I trust Mr. Bannerman will still stand by his original proposition to the Government and will not insist on the position assumed by him as stated in the concluding paragraphs of the letter as found on page 8495 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. That he has a legal right to take that position no one can deny, but if he takes that position I submit he lays himself liable to the charge of profiteering. His record is too clean and his patriotism too lofty to now make his action amenable to such a charge.

Now, what are the real facts regarding the sale by the Navy and the attempted purchase by the War Department of these guns? I read from the testimony of Admiral Earle, Chief of Ordnance of the Navy, with regard to these guns. This is the note on page 431 of the hearing.

NOTE.—On March 28, 1913, Francis Bannerman, of New York, purchased eighteen 6-inch 30-caliber guns. The price paid for these guns was based on weight of steel and ranged from 53 cents to 71 cents a hundred pounds, and in the case of 11 of the guns from $12.66 a gross ton to $13.02 a gross ton. The total weight of the guns sold to Mr. Bannerman, including the foregoing, as well as two 8-inch guns, was 246,914 pounds. In other words, the price paid by Mr. Bannerman for 6-inch 30-caliber guns was in the neighborhood of $78.67. This was bought by him as scrap value only.

The Luria Bros., of Reading, Pa., on May 14, 1914, purchased 12 other obsolete 6-inch guns at a total price of $2,386.88. It is quite probable that Mr. Bannerman did purchase these guns from the Luria Bros., although the department has no record as to such a transaction. The guns in the latter case were purchased for less than $200 apiece.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not rise so much to criticize Mr. Bannerman for this transaction as I rise to criticize the officers of the Navy and of the Army in this disgraceful transaction. [Applause.] They, not Mr. Bannerman, are responsible. Mr. Bannerman, it is true, may be criticized for striking a good bargain and for selling guns for $5,000 that he only paid $78.68 apiece for. Criticism may be made against that kind of a transaction in this time of war, but, mind you, Mr. Bannerman had a legal right to make such a contract. What was the condition of these guns when the Navy sold them? They were not obsolete guns. The sights had never been taken out of the boxes from the time they were placed in there and shipped to the Navy of the United States when the Secretary of the Navy ordered these guns—new guns.

Here is Mr. Bannerman's description of the guns:

The guns are all in excellent condition and very little used. The 12 mounted guns had been altered up to the model of 1912 at the Washington Gun Factory, and had accompanying them breech blocks and sights still in their original boxes.

Think of it! Just before selling these guns as junk the Secretary of the Navy had altered them into 1912 models. Comedy or tragedy, I call it inefficiency, and I would write the word in capitals. Talk about the guns being obsolete! They are now to be used as field guns and will have a range of something like 7 or 8 miles. They were valuable for the Army, and yet they were sold as scrap immediately after having been altered at Government yards, and there is not a word of testimony here as to why the Government sold them, why the Navy sold them, except the statement of Admiral Earle that some of these guns were obsolete. Yet they had just been altered into 1912 model and their sights had not been taken out of the boxes in which they were packed when manufactured. Either the Secretary of the Navy made a great mistake in buying those guns for $6,000 apiece or he made a very great mistake in selling them for $78.68 apiece. Why equip them with 1912 model just before he sold them for junk? You can not escape the conclusion——

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Is the gentleman informed as to when the guns were purchased?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know whether that is stated in the testimony or not. They certainly could not have been purchased very long before, because Mr. Bannerman says that the sights had not been taken out of the boxes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Is it a fact the sale was at public auction to the highest bidder or were they sold privately——

Mr. GOOD. Well——

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will state to the gentleman it was to the highest bidder.

Mr. GOOD. I know they were advertised as junk by the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Navy ought to have been on speaking terms with the Secretary of War with regard to those guns to have found out whether or not in an emergency they might be a useful piece for the Army of the United States.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman will permit, in reply to the gentleman from Alabama, the testimony of Admiral Earle was that those guns had been forged in 1892 or 1893. Whether they were used or not for the Navy——

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The testimony showed at the time they were sold they were not the pattern in use for the Navy at that time.

Mr. BORLAND. In 1892 or 1893, at the time they were forged, they were the pattern in use in the Navy.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. At the time they were sold?

Mr. BORLAND. At the time they were sold, in 1913, they were not the pattern used by the Navy, but whether they were ever used by the Navy in the meantime I have no knowledge.

Mr. GOOD. When they were sold as junk they had been altered at the navy yards and were the 1912 model. Now, Mr. Speaker, the testimony in this matter before the subcommittee took place about the 1st of June, 1918, and a representative of the War Department who knows about these things appeared before the subcommittee on fortification. I quote from the testimony, and in order not to give any information to the enemy, as to the number of these guns, where required, and so forth, the number of the guns was left blank in the hearing. I quote.

Mr. BORLAND. That Bannerman item is not here?

Gen. DICKSON. It is included in it. They are naval guns. There are ——— from Bannerman and ——— from the Navy, making a total of ——— 6-inch guns in this lot. We had previously gotton ——— 6-inch guns from the Navy.

Mr. BORLAND. Are the Bannerman guns 6-inch guns?

Gen. DICKSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORLAND. What are they worth?

Gen. DICKSON. We are estimating $15,000 on them. So if you make the Navy give us those guns do not forget to give us ——— times $15,000, so that we can get the Bannerman guns.

Mr. BORLAND. ——— worth of guns——

Gen. DICKSON (interposing). From Bannerman only.

It was thirty times $15,000, or $450,000, that the Secretary of War was estimating for. Thereunder the Speaker had sent to the House under the provisions of law an estimate to this Congress for $450,000 to buy guns that the Secretary of the Navy had sold in 1913 and 1914 for $3,900.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman stated the sights of these guns had never been unboxed?

Mr. GOOD. In some of them.

Mr. KNUTSON. The inference one would draw from that is that they had never been fired.

Mr. GOOD. I think all the guns had been fired, because we test all guns we accept from the manufacturer or navy yard, and they must be fired in testing guns, but it is not necessary to put the sights on when the guns are tested. They were practically new guns; some of them were new and some modernized to 1912 model.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are the cold facts? First. Between March 28, 1913, and May 14, 1914, the Secretary of the Navy sold as junk thirty 6-inch guns for $3,902.94. Second. Mr. Bannerman, having acquired these guns, offered them to the War Department when we entered the war at any price the Government might think was just, and subsequently offered to sell the mounted guns at $7,500 each and the unmounted ones at $5,000. This is the highest price ever placed on the guns by Mr. Bannerman. Third. The Secretary of War, acting in accordance with the mandates of law, sent his estimates to Congress, and in those estimates he included an item of $450,000 for the 30 Bannerman 6-inch guns.

Mr. Speaker, in acting on these enormous estimates we must rely on some one. I do not know whether our system of making appropriations is right or wrong. There are two sides to that question, but I do know that when Congress says to an executive officer of the United States that he must make true estimates of his requirements and send them to Congress on the 1st day of December that Congress has a right to rely implicitly upon the soundness and correctness of those estimates, and at all times to assume that the estimates are free from fraud. Here is an estimate for $450,000 for 30 guns which were necessary, according to the statement of the Secretary of War; $15,000 apiece to buy them from Mr. Bannerman, and Mr. Bannerman said he never asked any such price. He says he never asked half of that amount for those guns. He asked $5,000 for the guns, which were not mounted, and only $7,500 apiece for the guns mounted.

When this Congress errs in a matter of this kind, the Members admit their error, but if we make mistakes, relying upon estimates from the Secretary of War, what can we do but refer the error right back to the author. We must go back to the very fountainhead from which the estimates come. I am not willing to throw the responsibility for this gross inefficiency on some poor bureau chief or some subordinate officer. I will place the responsibility now where it belongs, where Congress placed it in enacting the law. First, the Secretary of the Navy had no business to sell those guns for this ridiculous price. If he was intending to sell them for junk in 1913 and 1914, it was not necessary for him to equip them with the modern 1912 model. He should not have sold those guns at all.

Second, the Secretary of War either did not know what he was doing when he made the estimates for $450,000 for guns that the Navy had recently sold for $3,902, and the law placed upon him the obligation of knowing all about it before he made that estimate, or he attempted to mislead the Congress of the United States in having them appropriate $450,000 for items that could be purchased for somewhere between $150,000 or $225,000, if we paid the price which Mr. Bannerman asked.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Whether the Appropriation Committee should have turned itself into a ferreting or investigating committee or not, I am of the opinion the subcommittee ought to have gone further into this matter and found out, if it could, who the real responsible party was in the War Department. From my viewpoint this thing smacks of much more than profiteering. It smacks of fraud pure and simple; if not fraud, a case of barefaced, inexplainable carelessness on the part of some one in the War Department. Is it possible that behind this scene is collusion and fraud on the part of some one in the War Department. With Bannerman, I would hate to think so, yet the facts are peculiar. They are surrounded and shrouded in mystery. The estimates are made up by various Cabinet officers, and by them transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, who transmits them to the Congress. In the very nature of things it is hardly possible for the Secretary of War to scan each and every item as put up to him by some subordinate in the department. But under him there is a responsible person, that ought to know what is contained in each item in the estimate.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. COX. For a question.

Mr. GOOD. This estimate was involved in an estimate for all 6-inch guns, totaling three million seven hundred thousand and odd dollars. Does the gentleman mean to say to this House that the Secretary of War ought not to scrutinize even to the minutest detail?

Mr. COX. No; I do not mean to say that. He ought to scrutinize. He should thoroughly analyze it before he approves it and sends it to the Secretary of the Treasury to be by him transmitted to the Congress. There seems to be a "nigger in the woodpile" somewhere. Mr. Hughes apparently knew a little about it—not much—but the man that knew something about it was "shunted" to France; and who is this man that was so suddenly sent to France? I mean the man that made the estimate on the Bannerman guns for $15,000 and which Bannerman had bought from the Navy Department for less than $100 per gun. Nobody seems to know him. His name seems to be a profound secret. Hence the mystery. Who is the responsible party that made up this doubtful estimate? Is it the Secretary of War? If it is, he owes it to the country to come out in a public statement and make it plain that he knew or did not know about the estimate. If it is an inferior or subordinate officer, the Secretary of War owes it to Congress and to the people of the country to come out and place the responsibility where it belongs. For one, if the House will pass a resolution, I intend to find out, because I intend to introduce a resolution calling for the name of the person and his occupation, together with his connection with the War Department, and find out who made the estimate of $15,000 per gun from a man who had bought these guns from the Government at scrap-iron prices. This dirt shall not be covered up here if there is dirt in it, and the country shall know, if the facts are obtainable at all from the Secretary of War, about this Bannerman gun affair. The time has come when these things can not go unnoticed. I care not where the responsibility is. I care not if it hits the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy. Let it hit them. If it hits some little fellow, let it hit him; but let us find out whether or not there is fraud, corruption, something covered up here, and whether or not the man who has been sent to France is in this deal and has gotten a part of the swag if there was any swag in it.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Bannerman is a very interesting, a thoroughly honest, a very generous, and a very patriotic man. He takes this controversy very seriously, and considers the charges of profiteering, and so forth, a serious reflection on him. Now, the whole matter presents to me an irresistibly serio-comic aspect. Anybody who has read the letter that Mr. Bannerman wrote to me, and which was inserted in the RECORD by Senator WADSWORTH, because the matter had passed out of the hands of the House, will be struck by the humorous situation. Mr. Bannerman has done absolutely nothing wrong and has sought to be of service, and has, in fact, been of much service. Mr. Bannerman went to an auction. He was sent advertisements describing certain articles the Navy Department wanted to sell in 1913 and 1914, and he bid on and got some of them; and other things he did not get. Among the articles on which his bids were highest were some cannon. They were good guns, though out of date for the Navy. He tells us he protested against their sale, but the Navy thought it knew what it was doing, told him the guns were no good except for junk, and so he got them and paid for them. He disagreed with the Secretary of the Navy as to the value of the guns, went to considerable expense to keep them in order and to transport them, and built a heavy concrete dock at his arsenal on the Hudson River to hold them. By his foresight he saved those thirty 6-inch guns from destruction, so that now the Government can obtain them for Army use at a critical time, instead of waiting until new guns can be made at a much higher cost. Why he should not get a fair price for them I do not see.

He had them listed in his catalogue at $5,000, and sent the catalogue to the Government. With that catalogue before them, how the Ordnance officers of the Army came to make an estimate for those guns and ask an appropriation three times greater than Mr. Bannerman's price, his catalogue price, I am sure I can not understand. If that is the way the War Department generally does business it needs an overhauling from the Secretary down. Where the $15,000 estimate came from I have not yet found out. Perhaps it was just a blunder, due to confusing them with the cost of new guns.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. It was evidently a mistake to estimate the guns that were coming from the Navy at $15,000, as Gen. Dixon did, when Admiral Knight says they were to be turned over to the Army at $5,000. The thing seems to be on all fours all the way through. Gen. Dixon asked for $15,000 each for the 47 guns to be obtained directly from the Navy as well as for the 30 to be obtained from Mr. Bannerman, three times what they were valued at in each case. No; I do not think there was any graft about it, but what a commentary on government operation. It is really laughable.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think it is a serio-comic matter to have the Navy advertise things at auction that sell for $78.68 apiece and then have the Army buy those same things at $5,000 or $10,000 apiece? Is that serio-comic?

Mr. PLATT. Oh, yes. It shows the incompetency and the inefficiency of Government officers as compared with private business. One of the branches of the Government does not know what the other branches are doing, and does not make any effort to find out. Each officer has his own little business to look after and does not look further. All bureaucracies work in the same way, whether it is in Russia or in the United States; whether an Emperor or a Czar or a President is at the head of them. When the Navy advertises guns for sale the Army does not go to the auction. Why did they not go to the auction and bid the guns in? They ought to know that such guns, even if obsolete in the Navy, can be used by the Army. Doubtless they did know, but they were not paying attention. They had "something else to do." They have nothing to do with the Navy. That is the size of it.

In the letter Senator WADSWORTH put in the RECORD you will find that the Navy sent an expedition some months up the Hudson River to capture Mr. Bannerman's arsenal, and really acted outrageously, treating Mr. Bannerman as an enemy, when they might just as well have had his full cooperation and been decent about it. The Navy then seemed a little ashamed of its exploit and turned the island and the arsenal over to the Army, which is now maintaining a guard there costing $75 to $100 a day. What for? It was under guard first by deputy sheriffs of Dutchess County. Mr. Bannerman had long before asked for a Federal guard, and he was turned down. Then he appealed to Gov. Whitman, of New York, for a State guard, and Gov. Whitman would not give it to him. Then some of his men were made deputy sheriffs of the county to guard the property. He was willing to do anything reasonable. He had sent the Government a list of his goods, but reasonable action seems to have been tabooed. So the American Navy, in a submarine chaser, was sent up the Hudson to capture the island. It was a great and glorious event. [Laughter.] Mr. Bannerman's arsenal is now absolutely under the guard of the Army, but just why nobody seems to know. The theory seems to be that enemy aliens might capture it, and, having armed themselves with its obsolete arms, might march upon and capture New York or perhaps Washington.

Now, just a word as to the charge that Mr. Bannerman was "profiteering"—a very much overworked word. If the ordnance officers of the Army did not like his catalogue prices, why did not they ask a reduction or a discount instead of placing a value on the guns three times higher than Mr. Bannerman's catalogue price? Is not the whole thing serio-comic—or just plain comic?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a brief reply to two statements that have been made concerning this matter. One is that these guns ought to have been transferred from the Navy to the Army. That is a proposition that is necessarily brought forward in this House. This committee after considering that question has taken upon itself to put this provision in the bill:

> Such naval ordnance and ordnance material as the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may determine necessary is authorized to be transferred from the Navy Department to the War Department: Provided, That if such ordnance and ordnance material is obsolete for naval purposes the transfer shall be made without reimbursement and payment to the Navy for other ordnance and ordnance material transferred hereunder shall be made only after estimates shall have been submitted to Congress and a specific appropriation for such payment shall have been made.

In other words, we provide that if there is any material in the hands of the Navy that the Army wants—material that is obsolete for naval purposes—it shall be transferred to the Ordnance Department of the Army without expense. But if the Navy will transfer to the Army Ordnance Department material that is new and that is taken out of its reserve stock—a thing which is being done in some cases—then we will reappropriate to the Navy so much as will make good their original reserve stock.

We have two classes of guns. For those that the Navy is taking out of their reserve stock for current use, simply because they have a surplus supply and can furnish the guns without the delay of manufacture, they are to be reimbursed. But where the Navy condemns the guns as obsolete they are to transfer those guns without expense to the Army. That is the policy that has been adopted under the leadership of this committee.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Can the gentleman tell whether there is a provision in this bill authorizing this to be done with respect to all of the $5,000,000,000 worth of property provided for in this bill? Is any provision made for Army officers to dispose of every part of the material covered by this bill?

Mr. BORLAND. No.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That language is in the Army bill, but is it not in your bill?

Mr. BORLAND. It is not. That provision is in the Army bill giving the Army the right to dispose of material, but——

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I opposed it in my committee for the reason that I was afraid that what occurred on that subject in your committee would occur in ours.

Mr. BORLAND. There is no provision giving the Ordnance Bureau the right to dispose of armament belonging to the United States. So far as the investigation referred to by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] is concerned, I do not regard that as one of the proper functions of the Committee on Appropriations. That committee has to decide on live problems, and to appropriate money to carry on the war now in progress.

It can not engage in the investigation of every line of inquiry that might suggest itself. It is the function of this House to do that, and this committee is not usurping any functions which do not belong to it. I have no reason in the world to fail in seconding in any way the suggestion of my colleague from Indiana to prosecute any investigation which he sees fit to suggest. It is not our intention to do that, but it is only fair that any question raised by any committee should be fully investigated by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

USELESS PAPERS IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. TALBOTT, from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, submitted a report (H. Rept. 739) on a letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce (H. Doc. 921, 65th Cong., 2d sess.), transmitting a list of executive papers not needed or useful in the transaction of current business of the Department of Commerce and having no permanent or historic interest.

The report, with the accompanying document, was ordered to be printed.

MEDICAL SOCIETY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct the attention of the Chair to the reference of the bill (S. 2653) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia." This is a measure to grant articles of incorporation to a medical society, the activities of which apparently are not confined to the District of Columbia. I understand, under the rules of the House——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will let that matter stand over until morning and will furnish a copy of the bill to the Chair, he will examine it and recognize the gentleman the first thing after the reading of the Journal to-morrow.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMALL presented the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10060) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

FOURTEENTH DECENNIAL CENSUS.

On motion of Mr. HELM, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 33. That the Director of the Census be, and he is hereby, authorized, at his discretion, upon the written request of the governor of any State or Territory or of a court of record, to furnish such governor or court of record with certified copies of so much of the population or agricultural returns as may be requested, upon the payment of the actual cost of making such copies and $1 additional for certification; and that the Director of the Census is further authorized, in his discretion, to furnish to individuals such data from the population schedules as may be desired for genealogical or other proper purposes, upon payment of the actual cost of searching the records and $1 for supplying a certificate; and that the Director of the Census is further authorized to furnish transcripts of tables and other records and to prepare special statistical compilations for State or local officials, private concerns, or individuals upon the payment of the actual cost of such work: Provided, however, That in no case shall information furnished under the authority of this act be used to the detriment of the person or persons to whom such information relates. All moneys hereafter received by the Bureau of the Census in payment for labor and materials used in furnishing transcripts of census records or special statistical compilations from such records shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation for collecting statistics.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The debate is about to close on this census bill, and I assume that the bill will pass this House in its present form. At the proper time I intend to offer a motion to recommit the bill with instructions to report the same back forthwith, with an amendment restoring to the bill the provisions of the present law as far as the appointment of supervisors and enumerators is concerned.

I do this for two reasons: First, to exhaust every resource to defeat this change in the law that will always be looked upon by the people as a political scheme to use the census for party purposes; and, second, that I may thereby show by the record that Republicans do not favor such legislation, and that this is simply a partisan measure. All through this debate the Democratic side have earnestly protested that they did not intend to play politics with this legislation. If that is true, this vote will give an opportunity to the Democrats to prove their statements. If there is any sincerity in the appeal of the majority party that politics should be adjourned during this war, then this open and shameless attempt to stir up party strife as set forth in this bill should be rebuked by the Democrats themselves and the fair and nonpartisan law enacted 10 years ago should not now be changed in this particular.

While the census bill of 1910 was under consideration in the House Mr. Hay, of Virginia, a Democrat, obtained the floor and said:

I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Crumpacker] to the provisions for the appointment of supervisors. On page 9, line 25, it provides that "the supervisors shall be appointed by the President." In the bill which was passed by this House in the last Congress it was provided that the supervisors shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and I should like to know why that was left out of this bill (to wit, the approval of the Senate).

The Republican leader, Mr. Crumpacker, made no explanation, but simply allowed that it was the opinion of the majority on the committee, which was then Republican, that the change should be made, and that was all that was necessary to explain.

The bill as thus reported from the committee passed that House by the strength of a party vote. It went to the Senate, and a Republican Senate without a dissenting vote restored the law to its present form and the House concurred.

History is now repeating itself. A Democratic committee and a Democratic House refuse to give any reasonable explanation why they not only cut out the Senate but refuse to give to the President the power of appointment, and this present Democratic committee and Democratic House now attempt to force through this measure by mere party strength.

It will now go to the Senate. Does any Member of this House believe for one moment that a single Member of the Senate will consent to take the approval of the supervisors away from the President and surrender the privileges and prerogatives of the Senate in the approval of these appointments, which should be nonpartisan? Now, why should the majority party in this House deliberately attempt to bring about a conflict at this time between the two Houses over this bill? I have deprecated these recent conflicts between the House and the Senate on matters where the House has shown, in my opinion, a disposition to provoke and continue a quarrel.

Only a few days ago on a disagreement between the two Houses on the District of Columbia rent or profiteering bill, so called, the chairman of the House committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], a member of the conference committee, used language reflecting upon the integrity of certain Members of the Senate. His language in public and in the press was such as to cause the Senate conferees to refuse to sit with him in conference or to associate with him or to extend the courtesies of the Senate to him, and the result was the defeat of the bill.

Yesterday the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], from the conference committee on the District appropriation bill, reported to the House that the conferees on the part of the Senate declined to discuss the amendment in dispute, that they had argued it at length, but that the Senate conferees said that further conference on the subject was useless, and refused to discuss the matter further, and he proceeded, in violation of the rules of the House, to detail what had taken place in the conference room. He also requested that the House instruct its conferees to further insist after the Senate had refused to yield or discuss the matter further.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Maine be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERSEY. Where the House attempts to change the existing law in regard to the District of Columbia, and where under the rules and customs of legislation it was the part of the House to yield to save the bill, but it would not, the result must be the defeat of necessary legislation.

I mention these matters at this time because I feel that the time has come when this House ought not to put matters up to the Senate like this change in the census law, where it is well known that the Senate can not possibly agree with the House. I know there is not much use made of the golden rule in politics, but it seems to me that we ought to ask ourselves as Members of the House what we would do if we were Members of the Senate. Would we consent to this change in the census law? Would we throw distrust upon the President of the United States? Would we avoid our responsibility as Senators in the approval of supervisors and go home to our people and tell them that we consented to have no voice in the appointment of the supervisors; that we had abdicated our responsibility and no longer represent the people of our State?

It is no justification for this political move on the part of the Democrats that the Republicans in the House 10 years ago attempted in a small way to change this law for political purposes, which move was defeated by a Republican Senate. It is no justification that 10 years ago the Republican Party sought to remove the appointees in the Census Office from under the civil-service law and were defeated by a veto of a Republican President. Let the people know and feel that Congress is here to do business and not to pass legislation to provide for political patronage and party advantage. Politics should be adjourned in Congress. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. HELM] to some provisions of section 33, and I believe that he will consent to have them amended. In the first part of the section the Director of the Census is authorized, in his discretion, to furnish the governor of any State or Territory, or any court of record, with certified copies of certain statistics. It is left in his discretion. Then, beginning in line 18, on page 28, we find this provision:

And that the Director of the Census is further authorized to furnish transcripts of tables and other records and to prepare special statistical compilations for State or local officials, private concerns, or individuals upon the payment of the actual cost of such work.

That is not in the discretion of the Director of the Census, while the furnishing of the other statistics to the States or to the courts is left in his discretion.

In the first two provisions a charge of $1 is made for the certificate. In the last provision, which is a new one and not in the former act which this attempts to amend, there is no charge for the certificate. Further, in the last proviso there is a change of the original law, providing that—

All moneys hereafter received by the Bureau of the Census in payment for labor and materials used in furnishing transcripts of census records or special statistical compilations from such records shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation for collecting statistics.

That is without being reappropriated or disposed of by Congress.

Now, I want to call the attention of the committee in particular to the new provision commencing with the word "Provided," in line 22, page 28. I am satisfied that the committee do not desire to carry out the intent of this proviso.

Provided, however, That in no case shall information furnished under the authority of this act be used to the detriment of the person or persons to whom such information relates.

That is the new provision in this law that was not in the prior bill directing the former census to be taken.

Mr. HELM. Does the gentleman think that the information that is obtained by the bureau ought to be published concerning the work of business concerns?

Mr. RAKER. That is not the intent of this. I want to further call the attention of the committee to this matter.

Mr. HELM. The language is plain—

In no case shall information furnished under the authority of this act be used to the detriment of the person or persons to whom such information relates.

Mr. RAKER. I will answer the gentleman. Under section 32 of the former act that was not in the law. It has worked well. The very purpose of providing that the governors of the States and Territories may obtain certified copies, that the court, not even the judge of the court, could obtain it or the district attorney, but must get an order of the court to obtain the certified copy of the record, and then it is within the discretion of the Director of the Census to issue it. Now, you nullify the effect of the certified copy that may be absolutely necessary in a proper criminal transaction. Under this the court trying the case would be compelled to exclude the evidence, because it would be detrimental to the party on trial. Your provision says—

In no case shall information furnished under the authority of this act be used to the detriment to the person or persons to whom such information relates.

In other words, a man testifying as to his age testifies that his age is so-and-so; that he was born at a certain time. Now, information furnished by the Director of the Census under this act would have to be excluded because, if offered in evidence, notwithstanding his oath and the trial or some other oath, this could not be introduced.

Mr. ALEXANDER. What is the gentleman's suggestion?

Mr. RAKER. That you strike out that provision. I stand as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] stood in the committee. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] was against this provision in the committee, and so stated. He gave cogent reasons why this provision should not be included.

Now, I am simply calling attention of the committee reporting this bill to the fact that this was not in the prior bill. It was not found necessary. Why put in a provision here authorizing officers to secure this information and then in the bill put in an inhibition upon it because if the court should admit it in evidence, under this act undoubtedly the higher court would reverse the judgment, because it says it shall not be used to his detriment. I know the committee does not intend to carry a provision in the bill like that. If it is right, it should receive the evidence that has been presented and can be used, and then, clearly, you do not want a provision in the act saying it can not be used in any case anywhere at any time where it might be desired to be used.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out this provision, beginning on page 28, line 22, after the word "work," down to and including the word "relates" in line 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, line 22, beginning with the word "provided" strike out all to and including the word "relates," in line 25.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have followed the discussion quite closely and I believe that the amendment offered by the gentleman from California should go further in striking out and should include the provision after the word "certificate," in line 18, page 28, down to the word "relates," which is included in the amendment pending.

This is new matter. Under the existing law certified copies of statistics of the census can be furnished only for population and agriculture. Under the new language you are opening up to anyone the privilege of demanding a certified copy of statistics of manufactures. It has never been the policy of the Congress to allow a competitor to gain private information as to the business affairs of his rival. I wish to ask the attention of the committee to what I believe the language which I will move to strike out, when I am in order, covers that very privilege. This is new language introduced for the first time:

And that the Director of the Census is further authorized to furnish transcripts of tables and other records and to prepare special statistical compilations for State or local officials, private concerns, or individuals upon the payment of the actual cost of such work: Provided, however, That in no case shall information furnished under the authority of this act be used to the detriment of the person or persons to whom such information relates.

The designation "and other records" would grant the privilege to any individual to have a certified copy of the census returns of any manufacturer. When the corporation tax was first authorized we especially provided that those returns should not be the subject of search on the part of the public, and yet here in this new phraseology you are going to allow any person to ask the Census Office for the amount of business and all of the details that a man is compelled to return under the tabulations that are required by the Census Bureau.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. We do not intend any such policy as that. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. In addition to what the gentleman has said, that provision has left it out of the discretion of the Director of the Census.

Mr. STAFFORD. I noted the point made by the gentleman in his debate that this was not left within the discretion of the director, but that it was mandatory, so that any person could command these statistics. I do not believe the members of the committee intend any such authority to be vested in individuals to get returns of manufacturing statistics.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. My objection to this provision at the time was that it limited the power of the courts to use legitimate testimony for legitimate purposes in civil or criminal cases, but this provision says that in no case shall information furnished under the authority of this act be used to the detriment of any person or persons to whom such information relates. If it once is given, I do not know how the Census Bureau is going to prevent its being so used.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the idea. The proviso does not furnish any protection at all to the person whose statistics are being furnished to the third party.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And for that reason I did not favor that provision.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman further agree with me that these statistics of manufactures should not be furnished at the request of any individual?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Because I think it is liable to be abused.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not only abused but you would not be able to get exact returns from the manufacturers if they knew that their statistics were going to be subject to review of outsiders. It would be an inducement to them not to furnish returns. As far as statistics of population and agriculture are concerned, provided for in the forepart of the section, which is current law, there can be no objection to that. I hope the chairman of the committee will see his way clear to accept the suggestion that I have made.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman observed the statement of the director at the bottom of page 170 of the hearings?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have merely read the explanation at the bottom of the report of the committee on page 35.

Mr. HELM. If the gentleman will permit me, in his time——

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. HELM. I will read what the director says:

Mr. ROGERS. I have but one case in mind right now. Take the individual whose name appears on our population schedule. He informs me of his father and mother, his age, and where he was born, and where he lived at a certain time. Now, in the draft he is questioned both about his age, his nationality, and his identity. That man is to be prosecuted upon the statement that he made to the Bureau of the Census. It is the basis of the honesty of the statement that he makes before the court. I would refuse to give information to anyone other than to the local constituted authority for the annoyance or prosecution of that man. If the court were to issue an order to the effect that the State's interests are involved, or the interests of the Government in this case are involved, and it is my duty to certify the record as it was given at a particular time, I would do so. Sometimes, Judge, that same kind of a question as to marital conditions comes up in connection with an estate, and the census does not want to be used in the courts to the prejudice of any man who made a confidential statement. If he wants to use it, he is at liberty to get it from us, or his counsel, or anyone representing him. We do not think it is fair to him to give it to whosoever applies for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. That virtually confirms what I was saying. What the gentleman read from does not at all relate to the furnishing of certified copies of the manufacturing statistics. I hope the gentleman will appreciate the argument that I made, that if you are going to allow any person to get a certified copy of the statistics——

Mr. HELM. That is the very purpose of this proviso, that he shall not get it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why, no.

Mr. HELM (reading)—

Provided, however, That in no case shall information furnished under the authority of this act be used to the detriment of the person or persons to whom such information relates.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think it furnishes protection at all. How is it going to be known in advance whether it is to be used to the detriment of the person or not?

Mr. HELM. If that does not protect the business secrets of the manufacturer, it has no purpose at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman conceive of any case where manufacturing statistics furnished in confidence to the Bureau of the Census should be given to any individual?

Mr. HELM. It is not the purpose of this committee and it is not the purpose of the director to disclose business secrets.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, will the gentleman have any objection to striking out the new language, as suggested, after the word "certificate," in line 18, and ending with the word "work," because that is the language which covers the furnishing of certificates of manufacturers.

Mr. HELM. I think both the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from California misunderstand the purpose of the language. It is the intention of the committee, it was the purpose of the bureau and those connected with framing the bill, to safeguard the business interests of people who are compelled to give information to the Census Bureau. If it does not do so—but I think it does—I am perfectly willing to have it stricken out.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman realize——

Mr. HELM. I think it safeguards all business concerns.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman agree that this language in line 19, "to furnish transcripts of tables and other records and to prepare special statistical compilations"——

Mr. HELM. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman agree that this new language in line 19, "to furnish transcripts of tables and other records," is broad enough to include manufacturing statistics?

Mr. HELM. Why, certainly it is; and the proviso is to protect against it being used for any harmful purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I question whether that proviso will protect, and I do not believe it should apply to manufacturing statistics.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it in order—which I question—to offer as a substitute a motion to strike out additional matter in the paragraph? I would like to offer a motion to strike out the language after the word "certificate" down to the word "work," or down to the word "relate," which includes the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. I accept the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says he will accept the amendment.

Mr. HELM. I will accept the amendment, and the matter can be adjusted——

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HELM (continuing). And it can be arranged in conference.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman accepts the amendment; and I now desire to offer the amendment to strike out, after the word "certificate," all down to the word "relates," in line 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 38, line 18, strike out all the language, beginning with the word "and," line 18, down to and including the word "relates," in line 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment by way of a substitute.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is not intended as a criticism, but I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the last two lines of this section:

Shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation for collecting statistics.

Now, the former law was—

And amounts so received shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, to be placed to the credit of and in addition to the appropriations made for taking the census.

Is it the gentleman's theory that this will work better than for the money to be covered into the Treasury of the United States and then appropriated as other appropriations?

Mr. HELM. I think it is a very negligible sum, so represented, and it seems it would be simply a question of bookkeeping.

Mr. RAKER. In other words, most all legislation provides that wherever there is any money collected it is covered into the Treasury of the United States and then appropriated as the exigencies may demand. The gentleman from Kentucky, the chairman of the committee, thinks this is so small, and as it would assist the bureau in having a revolving fund for doing this work, that it is better than covering it into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. HELM. I think so.

Mr. RAKER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, just one moment. Referring to the vote on the Raker-Stafford amendment, the Chair stated that the question was on the amendment by way of a substitute. The vote was taken on that, and that was agreed to. I suggest the vote ought to have been taken then on the amendment as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, I move the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11984 and had instructed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, before that is taken, I would ask of the gentleman if he is not willing that this should go over until to-morrow and have the vote taken at some other time?

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, we will have to have a roll call.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HELM. Will this bill be the first thing after the reading of the Journal, the unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. It will not unless we do away with Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order to-morrow may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business for to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed bill. That will make it in order to-morrow, I suppose.

The SPEAKER. It would be in order, anyway. The Clerk will have the engrossed bill ready.

Mr. WALSH. They have not voted on the third reading yet.

Mr. HELM. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HELM. Has the vote been taken on the third reading of the bill?

The SPEAKER. No. The gentleman from Massachusetts notified the Chair that he would demand the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill, and the Chair——

Mr. ALEXANDER. That does not prevent putting the motion for engrossment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The question would be on the engrossing of the bill and reading it the third time.

The SPEAKER. I wanted it understood that the Clerk should have the bill here.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The passage of the bill is deferred because of the demand of the gentleman for the engrossed copy.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of the Federal Trade Commission and profiteering.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of profiteering and the Federal Trade Commission, and so forth. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on the fortification bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD on the fortification bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, in an extension I made a day or so ago a few names were omitted. I ask unanimous consent to correct the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT—STANDARDIZATION OF SCREW THREADS.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the conference report on the bill H. R. 10852, a bill providing for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads, and I desire to ask unanimous consent that the report be considered at this time without being printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider a conference report, the rule to the contrary notwithstanding. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, it has been some time since we have seen this measure——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects. The gentleman from Ohio will send his report up, and the Clerk will read it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on the bill (H. R. 10852) to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads.

The SPEAKER. The conference report will be printed under the rules.

PENSIONS.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to consider at this time two small omnibus pension bills from the Senate. Last Friday was the day for considering them.

The SPEAKER. Conference reports for pension bills?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Pension bills passed by the Senate, and the Senate is very urgent to have them passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of two small omnibus pension bills.

Mr. SISSON. What are they?

Mr. ASHBROOK. They are two small omnibus bills. They are not large.

Mr. SISSON. How many are there of them? How many pensions in each bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have not counted the number of items in the bills. There are not many.

Mr. SISSON. I have no objection to the consideration of them if we know what we are doing.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The bills have been reported. They are on the calendar, and we have been trying for three or four weeks to get them through.

I would like to say to the House, Mr. Speaker, that this cleans up the slate as to pension bills for this session. There is one House bill pending in the Senate. We would like to get these two bills passed by the House and have conferees appointed on them.

Mr. SISSON. Were these bills passed by the House?

Mr. ASHBROOK. They were passed by the Senate and referred to our committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think these things can be taken up to-morrow morning. We have no pressing legislation on the calendar for consideration to-morrow. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the question of whether the civil courts are adequately dealing with hostile sabotage and espionage, or whether there should be a law passed transferring the jurisdiction of such offenses to courts-martial.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the question of whether the civil courts are adequate to dispose of espionage and sabotage cases; and if not, whether there ought to be a new law passed fixing pains and penalties. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, when did the gentleman from California discover this? Are these the gentleman's own remarks? [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. Part of them will be my own remarks. This is an important matter. Much has been said in regard to the civil courts not having enforced these laws. I have had it up with the Attorney General for some time. I have a letter from him stating what has been done and the number of cases tried and the number of accused persons convicted.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman mentions courts-martial. Is it the purpose to court-martial the courts that are not dealing with the cases properly? [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. I believe not.

Mr. WALSH. I will not object. We may get a new angle on this problem from the gentleman's remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12541. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 11247. An act providing for the protection of the uniform of friendly nations, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 3, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Father of Spirits, make us sensible of the glory that awaits the continued performance of duty day by day as we, a great Nation, address ourselves to the tasks of the day. Thou hast ever been moving through the channels of our national history. Generation after generation Thou hast called men to the standards of righteousness and peace and justice. Thou art moving with the mighty tides of the ocean. Thou dost call the faithful, the brave, and the true to Thine own standards that Thou hast raised for the gathering of the nations. O God, keep us faithful to the trust committed to our hands. We pray that as we come to the day upon which we celebrate the birth of our Nation we may have a rebirth of Thy spirit of truth and of righteousness and that we may have a reconsecration of a united Nation to the great ideals of the gospel of Thy Son.

As we gather together in this Chamber this morning our hearts are saddened at the news of the passing of one of the stalwart and brave and true men in national affairs in our day. O God, Thou art teaching us how quickly in the tide of time we are passing on to the great Assizes. Keep us watchful and faithful. We thank Thee for the performance of duty on the part of those who have lived among us. We pray that their going out may be filled with men equally brave and true. Hear us. Forgive our sins. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair was led to believe that there would be a recess of the Senate and arranged to leave the city. On consultation with certain Senators, he is informed that there is no reason why he should not go. The President pro tempore is now away from the city on important business, and he left a note this morning designating JOHN H. BANKHEAD, Senator from Alabama, to occupy the chair during his absence. By unanimous consent, the senior Senator from Alabama will occupy the chair until the return of the President pro tempore. Is there any objection to that course being pursued? The Chair hears none.

ESTIMATE OF APPROPRIATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 257).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $767,597.29, required by the Quartermaster Corps of the Army for continuing construction of barracks, quarters, etc., for the accommodation of troops stationed in the Canal Zone, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 311) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the month of July, 1918, and for other purposes, was read the second time by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WALSTON H. BROWN.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 4460) for the relief of Walston H. Brown, sole surviving partner of the firm of Brown, Howard & Co., and of The Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 543) thereon.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a report of the committee of conference on the amendment to House bill 9054, the Agricultural appropriation bill, in disagreement between the two Houses.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to report to their respective Houses that they are unable to reach an agreement on Senate amendment numbered 44.

T. P. GORE,
E. D. SMITH,
A. J. GRONNA,
HOKE SMITH,
G. W. NORRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. F. LEVER,
GORDON LEE,
E. S. CANDLER,
G. N. HAUGEN,
J. C. MCLAUGHLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be agreed to without objection.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendment numbered 44.

Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand that that is the amendment referring to the price of wheat?

Mr. GORE. Yes, Mr. President; that is the amendment, and I make this motion out of deference to the sentiment expressed by the Senate day before yesterday in order to facilitate action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma that the Senate further insist on its amendment and request a further conference.

Mr. GORE. I did not ask for a further conference with the House but moved to insist on the amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. I move as a substitute that the Senate instruct its conferees to recede.

Mr. GORE. I make a point of order that the Senate has acted upon that question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair could not sustain that point of order, but the Chair would hold that the substitute motion is not in order.

Mr. GORE. That question was voted on.

Mr. POMERENE. I think perhaps I did not fully appreciate the parliamentary status.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair perhaps did not understand the motion. What is the Senator's motion?

Mr. POMERENE. I want to modify the motion and move that the Senate recede from its amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion is in order, because it is calculated to bring the two Houses together.

Mr. GORE. I think the motion is in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, since we thrashed out this question just the other day, I do not believe the Senator from Ohio ought to make his motion now. We had a roll-call vote on it day before yesterday, and the whole question was thrashed out. It was the theory of the conferees both of the House and Senate that that action of the Senate was to be accepted until the House had an opportunity to act on it. The report is made to the Senate because the Senate has the papers, and it is necessary under the parliamentary situation for the Senate to act before the House acts. That course is agreeable to the House conferees. They understand that, and I do not think we ought to take up the time of the Senate now to go through with it all again when we have just been through with it. This is carrying out the wish of the House conferees as well as the Senate conferees. It is the only way under the parliamentary situation that the House itself can get an opportunity to act. We have to act first. We have to go through that formality. As soon as we have acted, our action will be messaged over to the House, and then the House will take it up. It will give the membership of the House an opportunity to thrash it out as we have already thrashed it out here. When the House acts, then we can act intelligently.

It does not seem to me that the Senator from Ohio ought to insist on his motion now and bring on a debate and probably a roll call that will take a great deal of time and do it all over again. It is not the wish of those who are opposed to this amendment that the Senate should take it up and debate it again. It is the only form in which the House can be given an opportunity to act.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I had no intention of discussing this matter at all, but I thought that the motion in the form I made it best represented my view of the situation. I am quite willing for the Senate to vote upon it now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate adheres to its amendment and agrees to the conference, and the Chair appoints the same conferees.

Mr. GORE. I did not include the appointment of conferees in my motion that the Senate insist on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumed that the Senator would have the same conferees appointed.

Mr. GORE. I do not want to have the conferees appointed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A different conference?

Mr. GORE. No; I want to have no conferees appointed at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator does he not want a further conference?

Mr. GORE. No, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. Why?

Mr. GORE. The House may agree to the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator either does not get the right idea or I do not.

Mr. GORE. If the House agrees to the amendment, that ends it.

Mr. NORRIS. The House may have an opportunity to agree to it; but suppose the House agrees to it with an amendment and there is going to be a contest?

Mr. GORE. Then that will come back, and we shall probably agree to the amendment. There is no occasion for a further conference at this juncture.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair, so that we may have no misunderstanding in reference to the subject. If we take no further action than simply to agree to the conference report——

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the Senator's motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is that the Senate adhere to its amendment.

Mr. GORE. Not adhere, but insist.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not that require the House either to recede or to stand by its original action? That may result in no action being taken.

Mr. GORE. I should like to say that the motion is not to adhere, but to insist, which raises a very different situation. The motion is to insist, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska, and if the House, when the papers get there, concur in the amendment, that ends it. If they amend the amendment, it will come back to the Senate for further action upon their amendment. If they do, one House will ask for a further conference. If the House makes the request, of course the Senate will consent.

Mr. NORRIS. Assuming that the House agrees to the amendment with an amendment, and it comes back, will it then be in order in the Senate to agree to a conference?

Mr. GORE. The Senate should then ask for a conference, if not willing to accept the House amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. It would be in order then to ask for a conference?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back faovrably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 311) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the month of July, 1918, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I feel obliged to interpose an objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. MARTIN. Under the rule, of course the Senator can carry it over one day by his objection.

DEATH OF SENATOR BENJAMIN RYAN TILLMAN.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, it is with profound sorrow that I have to announce to the Senate the death of the senior Senator from South Carolina, Senator BENJAMIN RYAN TILLMAN, who died this morning at 4.20 o'clock. Senator TILLMAN had a slight stroke of paralysis on Thursday. It kept progressing, and he lapsed into a state of unconsciousness on Sunday, from which he did not again recover, and he died this morning.

I shall not at this time, Mr. President, attempt to recall to the Senate the work of Senator TILLMAN and its character. We all know the sturdy character of the man, the splendid ruggedness of his nature. We did not always agree with him in the positions that he took, but we admired the manhood with which he backed the positions which he did take.

Senator TILLMAN had been in continuous service as a Senator for approximately 24 years. At the end of his term he would have rounded out the 24 years. He steadily improved in the estimation of the people of his State as well as of the Nation. They mistook the manner of the man at the beginning for the intent and purpose of his splendid character.

Mr. President, at a future time I shall have more to say about the character of my deceased colleague, but at present I submit the following resolutions and ask for their adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. BENJAMIN RYAN TILLMAN, late a Senator from the State of South Carolina.

Resolved, That a committee of 12 Senators be appointed by the Vice President to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. TILLMAN, to be held in the city of Trenton, S. C.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT, under the second resolution, appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. LODGE, Mr. PENROSE, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. NELSON, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. PHELAN, Mr. STERLING, Mr. OWEN, Mr. TRAMMELL, and Mr. MCKELLAR.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Senate resolution 273.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn until 12 o'clock noon, Friday, July 5, 1918.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Friday, July 5, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 3, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee that amid the terrible conditions which confront us, and which have divided the world into two hostile camps, on the one hand to uphold and sustain liberty and justice, on the other to beat down liberty and justice and bring mankind under the brutal forces of those who would destroy the most sacred rights of men, that religion lives among the entente powers and is taking a deeper, firmer hold on the hearts of men.

The cry is, What of God? Is He indeed the Father of mankind or a King ruling with the scepter of might his subjects?

We thank Thee that the old conceptions of God, creeds, dogmas, which have divided men into innumerable sects, are passing away, giving place to the essentials—God, right, justice, mercy, love, the immortality of the soul, the eternal verities, disclosed by the Master on the Hill of Calvary.

Our hearts go out in sympathy this morning to the colleagues, friends, and those who are dear and near to the veteran Senator who has done a great work for his State and for his Nation and has passed on to the glories which await the faithful. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BLACK, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for two weeks, on account of illness in his family.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD with regard to attacks on the integrity of the legislative branch of the Government.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemn from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND, who was yesterday, without opposition, elected successor in Congress of the late Hon. WILLIAM A. JONES, may be sworn in pending the arrival of his certificate of election.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Reserving the right to object, when was he elected?

Mr. MONTAGUE. He was elected yesterday without opposition.

Mr. GILLETT. And the gentleman assures the House that there is no question about his election?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I make that assurance to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

FOURTEENTH DECENNIAL CENSUS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] on yesterday demanded the reading of the engrossed copy.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, has the engrossed copy of the bill come from the Printing Office?

The SPEAKER. It is right here.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw my demand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his demand. The question is on the third reading.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HERSEY moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Census, with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: Page 10, line 11, after the second "the," strike out the words "Secretary of Commerce, upon the recommendation of the Director of the Census," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," so that the same will read: "The supervisors shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, on that motion I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. GILLETT) there were—ayes 59, noes 78.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of this motion to recommit the census bill, when their names are called, will answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 128, nays 158, answered "present" 3, not voting 142, as follows:

If the construction is delayed much longer, it will be too late before winter approaches.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 3929) for the construction of a private conduit across Michigan Avenue NE., in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to grant permission to the Catholic University of America to lay a conduit for the transmission of power from their power house under and across Michigan Avenue NE. between Harewood Road and Brookland Avenue, in the District of Columbia, into and upon the property of the associated professors of St. Mary's Seminary, of Baltimore, Md., known as the Sulpician College, under the regulations and subject to the limitations prescribed in the act entitled "An act regulating permits for private conduits in the District of Columbia," approved May 26, 1900.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed upon:

The rivers and harbors bill as it passed the House carried cash appropriations in the sum of $21,427,900, and one continuing contract authorization in the sum of $82,700. The amount added by amendment in the Senate was $2,344,000 in cash appropriations, making the total of the bill as it passed the Senate $23,771,900 in cash appropriations and a continuing contract authorization for $82,700. As a result of the conference the amount involved in the Senate amendments has not been changed. One amendment, however (No. 1), involving an increase of $140,000, has not as yet been agreed to.

The following statement shows the action taken by the conference on each of the Senate amendments:

ACTION OF CONFERENCE.

On amendments Nos. 1 and 2, page 8: Mobile Harbor and Bar, Ala. Items increase amount appropriated in House bill for improvement work from $200,000 to $340,000. The committee of conference have been unable to agree.

On amendment No. 3, page 13: Fox River, Wis. Item eliminates language in House bill appropriating $22,500 for maintenance and improvement work and provides that the funds shall be applied to maintenance work only. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 4, page 14: Los Angeles Harbor, Cal. Item adopts new project for the construction of a channel through the West Basin into the southwestwardly arm to the site of a proposed large floating dry dock and appropriates the full estimated cost of said channel. House conferees recede.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I hope, under the peculiar circumstances, of which the gentleman from North Carolina is advised, he will withdraw this conference report at this time.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield to me to make a unanimous-consent request as to adjournment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Friday. Is there objection?

Mr. HELM. I object.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I hope, under the circumstances, that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] will withdraw the conference report for the present.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina puts me in rather an embarrassing position. I am sorry that he felt constrained to do so. I wish he had withheld the motion or resolution which he intends to present until we concluded the consideration of this conference report on the river and harbor bill. But under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I do not see how I can decline to yield to his request, with the understanding, however, that when the House meets again the first thing in order will be the conference report on the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the conference report will come up almost automatically.

Mr. SMALL. I withdraw the conference report for the present.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 4, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, the inspiration of every generous impulse, every high and noble aspiration, we thank Thee from our heart of hearts for the "Spirit of '76," which gave to us the immortal Declaration of Independence, which led on to victory and the formation of our Glorious Republic, which has not only been the wonder but the admiration of all the world. We thank Thee for the day which will be celebrated with more than usual interest throughout the length and breadth of the land. The native born and the naturalized citizen will vie with each other in making it memorable.

For the first time in its history it will be celebrated by our sister nations, who are engaged with us in fighting for the same principles for which our forefathers fought, in a world-wide war for humanity, liberty, justice, and equal rights for all mankind.

May it furnish new inspiration to us and our allies, which will bring victory to their arms; then an everlasting peace; to the glory and honor of Thy Holy Name. Amen.
